The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 403. An act to amend the act of Congress approved March 1, 1899, entitled "An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to remove dangerous and unsafe buildings and parts thereof, and for other purposes", and to further amend said act by adding at the end thereof new sections numbered 5 and 6; and

S. 406. An act to amend an act approved May 1, 1906, entitled "An act to create a board for the condemnation of insanitary buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 404. An act to provide for the acquisition of land in the District of Columbia in excess of that required for public projects and improvements, and for other purposes; and

S. 408. An act to promote safety on the public highways of the District of Columbia by providing for the financial responsibility of owners and operators of motor vehicles for damages caused by motor vehicles on the public highways in the District of Columbia; to prescribe penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act; and for other purposes.

BOARD OF VISITORS TO THE MILITARY ACADEMY

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a letter, which was read, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., March 29, 1935.

To the Senate:

By virtue of the authority vested in me by the act approved May 17, 1928, I hereby appoint Senators COOLIDGE, REYNOLDS, DUFFY, CAREY, and BARBOUR to represent the Senate Committee on Military Affairs on the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy during the remainder of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Chairman Senate Military Affairs Committee.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Whereas during each year many lynchings occur, statistics revealing that 25 happened during the last year and more than 5,000 during the last 50 years; and

Whereas State governments cannot put an end to this evil, which reflects upon the good name of the States in which occurring and upon the United States; and

Whereas a bill is pending in Congress, known as the "Costigan-Wagner bill", to enable the Federal Government to control this evil: Therefore, be it

Resolved (if the senate concur), That the general assembly hereby memorializes the Congress of the United States to pass legislation consistent with the Constitution of the United States which will enable the Federal Government to assist in the prevention of this crime and punish offenders against the Federal law.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States by the chief clerk of this house.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining:

A resolution to the Congress of the United States of America requesting that congressional action be taken respecting an investigation of the activities and affairs of smelters, and further requesting that adequate appropriation be made for the United States Bureau of Mines

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

The members of the Senate of the Twenty-fourth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana respectfully represent that—

Whereas the increased price of gold has created a marked impetus in the development of mines in the State of Montana, as well as throughout all of the Western States, and particularly that this development affects the small operators; and

Whereas the small operators must depend almost wholly upon smelters for the purchase and settlement of the ores extracted; and

Whereas it is apparent that there is much dissatisfaction among many operators regarding rules and regulations respecting settlement for ore purchases; and

Whereas the larger smelting concerns operate generally throughout the western part of the United States and the question of investigation is of a National rather than a State issue; and

Whereas increased appropriations are needed for the United States Bureau of Mines for this as well as other major activities: Be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate of the Twenty-fourth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana that a thorough national investigation be made relative to the activities and customs of smelters in regard to the treating and purchase of ore; and be it further

Resolved, That the Congress be, and is hereby, requested to increase the appropriation for the United States Bureau of Mines so that the work of that Bureau may be extended in the interest of the mining industry in the West; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the United States Senators and the Members of Congress from the State of Montana.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

A resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to make provision by proper enactment or suitable direction to the appropriate Federal agency, that in all lands purchased in the Western States under the Government program for the purchase of submarginal lands, all oil, gas, and other mineral rights in any land so purchased by the Government be reserved to the vendor

Whereas the design of the Federal submarginal land purchase program in the Western States is not to divest the present owners of such land of any potential wealth therein, but rather to convert such marginal land into a reserve for stock raising with a view to the economic operation of said land and securing the maximum return therefrom; and

Whereas the reservation to the present owners of said land of the oil, gas, and other mineral rights therein would in no way militate against the purpose and objective of said Government program, but would in many instances enable the present owners of such lands to derive some revenue therefrom: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Twenty-fourth Legislative Assembly of Montana, That we hereby request the Congress of the United States to make provision by proper enactment or suitable direction to the appropriate Federal agency; that in all lands purchased in the Western States under the Government program for the purchase of submarginal lands all oil, gas, and other mineral rights in any land so purchased by the Government of the United States be reserved to the vendor and to his or their heirs, executors, administrator, or assigns forever; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each branch of the Congress of the United States, and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Montana in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolutions of the Senate of the State of Montana, which were ordered to lie on the table:

A resolution requesting the enactment by Congress of the United States of Senate bill no. 266, now pending in the Senate of the United States, being a bill to provide for the erection of a public historical museum in the Custer Battlefield National Cemetery in Montana

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Whereas the Custer Battlefield National Cemetery has heretofore been set aside on the site of the historic battle of the Little Big Horn River of June 25, 1876; and

Whereas it is very necessary and desirable that a public historical museum be located at said National Cemetery for the purpose of housing the historic relics of said battle, as well as for a memorial to Lt. Col. George A. Custer, deceased; and

Whereas there is now pending before the Seventy-fourth Congress of the United States, Senate bill no. 266, being a bill to provide for the erection of such a museum for the purposes aforesaid: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Twenty-fourth Legislative Assembly of Montana of 1935 (and the House concurring), That it is the sense of this legislative assembly that the Congress of the United States should enact said Senate bill no. 266 for the purposes therein and hereinbefore designated; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this joint resolution be forwarded to both the Senate and House of Representatives of the National Congress, and to the Senators and Members of Congress from Montana.

A resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to enact the necessary legislation to restore the United States Assay Office at the city of Helena, Mont.

Whereas there is a movement in prospecting for and developing gold mines throughout the Western States that has been unprecedented since 1849 and thousands of men out of regular employment are making a livelihood for themselves and families and the prosecution of this work will materially increase the output of gold so essential for early national recovery; and

Whereas this gold is largely recovered in small lots and it is practically impossible for the miners to sell the same, except at a very large discount, a very unfair discrimination exists against the producer; and

Whereas the United States Government Assay Office heretofore located and operated at Helena, Mont., was conveniently located and well adapted to serve the needs of a large surrounding gold-mining area, and the same may be operated at a nominal expense; and

Whereas it is the sense of the Senate of the Twenty-fourth Legislative Assembly of Montana of 1935, in session duly assembled, that the said Government assay office at Helena, Mont., should be reestablished and operated as in the past: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Twenty-fourth Legislative Assembly of Montana of 1935, That we respectfully urge the Congress of the United States to pass the necessary legislation to provide for the immediate reopening and operating of the United States Government assay office at Helena, Mont.; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Senators and Representatives from the State of Montana, and they be requested to use their best efforts to secure the enactment of the legislation herein requested, and also that a copy be transmitted to the Director of the Mint of the United States Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate petitions of several citizens of the States of Arkansas, Georgia, and Mississippi, praying for the enactment of old-age-pension legislation, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Third Ward Democratic Club of Camden County, N. J., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for the immediate cash payment of adjusted-service certificates of World War veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Universal Peace League of New York City, N. Y., protesting against the enactment of alien and sedition legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of sundry citizens of the States of Arkansas, California, Florida, Kentucky, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, Ohio, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Virginia, praying for an investigation of charges filed by the Women's Committee of Louisiana, relative to the qualifications of the Senators from Louisiana [Mr. LONG and Mr. OVERTON], which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from a majority of employees of the Waltham Watch Co., being members of Amalgamated Watch Workers Local Union No. 80, of Waltham, Mass., praying for the passage of the so-called "Wagner-Connery bill" and the Black 30-hour work week bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MALONEY presented a resolution adopted by Group No. 820 of the Polish National Alliance of the United States of North America, of Bridgeport, Conn., favoring the enactment of pending legislation proclaiming October 11 in each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution adopted by Stephen F. Rutledge Post, No. 864, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, of Brookline, Mass., favoring the making of adequate appropriations for the Naval Reserve, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Chicopee (Mass.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring the enactment of legislation to restrict the importation of cotton-textile products, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against alleged religious persecutions in the Republic of Mexico, and praying for the recall of the American Ambassador to that country, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by officers and members of the Mission Hill Boston College Club, of Boston, Mass., protesting against alleged religious persecutions in the Republic of Mexico, and favoring the recall of the American Ambassador to that country, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of several citizens of Hyannis, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called "Rayburn-Wheeler bill", to provide for the control and elimination of public-utility holding companies operating or marketing securities in interstate and foreign commerce, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of members of the Massachusetts Soldiers Home at Chelsea, Mass., remonstrating against the placing of the Chelsea Soldiers Home under Federal control, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a resolution of the Holyoke (Mass.) Central Labor Union, endorsing the so-called "Wagner-Lewis bill" and the Black 30-hour work week bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution of the Somerville (Mass.) Chapter of the International Society of Master Painters and Decorators, opposing the enactment of legislation providing for a 30-hour-work week and the regulation of wage rates, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Long Beach (N. Y.) Board of Trade, favoring the enactment of the so-called "Patman bill", providing for the payment of adjusted-service certificates of World War veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Rockaway Branch of the American League Against War and Fascism, of Rockaway Park, N. Y., opposing the enactment of alien and sedition legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of several citizens of the State of New York, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 1590) to provide for the issuance of route certificates to carriers on star routes, fixing the compensation of such carriers, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Rochester, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the issuance of a special commemorative postage stamp in honor of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the termination of Commodore John Barry's services with the American revolutionary forces, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Ladies Auxiliary of the Building Trades Civic League of Greater New York, N. Y., protesting against the making of any change in article or section 7 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which was ordered to lie on the table.

RELIEF OF DEPOSITORS IN CLOSED NATIONAL BANKS

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and appropriately referred a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, urging Congress to enact Senate bill 2178, introduced by the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE] and myself.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A concurrent resolution memorializing the President and Congress of the United States to pass immediately "A bill to provide relief to depositors in closed national banks; to promote resumption of industrial activity, increase employment, and restore confidence by fulfillment of the implied guaranty by the United States Government of deposit safety in national banks"

Whereas millions of dollars of the life savings of millions of depositors are now frozen and unavailable in closed national banks; and

Whereas millions of dollars of valuable securities, assets in closed national banks are now being liquidated at a greatly depreciated value; and

Whereas unless immediate relief is given to the millions of depositors in closed national banks they will lose their homes; and

Whereas unless immediate relief is given to the thousands of small business enterprises whose assets are frozen in closed national banks they will be unable to struggle along any further in the maintenance of their business; and

Whereas unless immediate relief is given to the millions of depositors and thousands of small business enterprises the present army of unemployed and suffering human beings will necessarily increase to alarming proportions; and

Whereas there is not any adequate means of refinancing the millions of depositors and thousands of small business enterprises, leaving them at the mercy of their mortgagees and creditors throughout this State and Nation; and

Whereas one of the most deplorable conditions of today is the economic suffering of millions of depositors in closed national banks; and

Whereas such conditions strike at the very foundation of our lives and our Government, tending, if unabated, to result in absolute disregard and disruption of our moral, social, and governmental life, resulting in chaos and internal strife; and

Whereas it is of vital importance to the welfare of the people and the Government of the United States that all things be done to promote the stability of the economic life of our people and the government of the State of New Jersey and all other States throughout the Union; and

Whereas it rests within the power of Congress to protect and maintain our moral, social, and governmental life by the enactment of a bill to provide relief to depositors in closed national banks, sponsored and introduced by the Honorable W. WARREN BARBOUR and the Honorable A. HARRY MOORE, United States Senators from the State of New Jersey: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Assembly of the State of New Jersey (the senate concurring)—

1. That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memorialized to give relief to the depositors in closed national banks by the immediate passage of the following bill, sponsored and introduced in the Seventy-fourth Congress by the Honorable W. WARREN BARBOUR and the Honorable A. HARRY MOORE:

"A bill to provide relief to depositors in closed national banks; to promote resumption of industrial activity, increase employment, and restore confidence by fulfillment of the implied guaranty by the United States Government of deposit safety in national banks

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase and acquire from the receivers or conservators of closed national banks all remaining assets of such banks, which date of closing was on or after January 1, 1930. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, upon application by the receivers or conservators of such closed banks, and upon receipt of such remaining assets, shall immediately make available to such receivers or conservators, as payment for such assets, funds sufficient to pay 60 percent due on the proved claims of depositors in such closed banks.

"SEC. 2. If in the reorganization or reopening of any bank any depositor shall have taken capital stock or other form of property for his deposit, or any part thereof, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized and directed to purchase of such depositors, on application, such portion of said capital stock or other property as will enable said depositor to receive 60 percent in cash on his deposit after deducting whatever payment or credit said depositor has received in cash.

"SEC. 3. That upon the transfer of their remaining assets to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and upon receipt of the funds received as payment therefor, the receivers or conservators of such closed banks shall immediately arrange to disburse such funds to the depositors of such banks: Provided, however, That where depositors' obligations, notes, etc., which have been pledged to the R. F. C. or other Federal agency, then in that case the R. F. C. shall be subrogated to the depositors' rights to the amount due them from the depositor's share of 60 percent.

"SEC. 4. That the assets so purchased shall be liquidated by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and, with the exception of assets in the form of unsecured notes, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall allow debtors a period of not to exceed 10 years in which to pay their indebtedness as evidenced by such assets. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall have full discretion concerning terms of liquidation of assets in the form of unsecured notes and may, when it deems such a course advisable, insist upon such terms of payment and such additional security from the debtor as it may deem advisable. No owner of stock in bank affected by the provisions of this act shall be relieved of any assessment or other liability to which he is subject under any existing Federal or State law previous to enactment of this act. The assessment liability of stockholders within the meaning of this act shall be construed as asset, and as such shall be included with any and all other assets so purchased by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

"SEC. 5. That regardless of any previous contract or agreement on the part of any person, the rate of interest paid to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation on such assets by the debtors shall be reduced to 4 percent per annum, and that for the purposes of this act any statute of limitations shall be waived and held not to apply to any transaction referred to or covered by provisions of this act. Nothing herein contained, however, shall prevent any debtor from anticipating payment on any such indebtedness."

2. That copies of this resolution, duly certified by the speaker and the clerk of the house of assembly, respectively, be forthwith transmitted to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to each Member of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the Honorable W. WARREN BARBOUR and the Honorable A. HARRY MOORE, United States Senators from New Jersey, the sponsors of this measure.

3. That this concurrent resolution shall take effect immediately.

INVESTIGATION OF MUNITIONS INDUSTRY

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, as a member of the Special Committee on Investigation of the Munitions Industry, I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent to have read and appropriately referred a resolution from the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be read.

The resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, endorsing the work of the United States Senate committee created for the investigating of the activities and operations of individuals and corporations engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of armaments and munitions of war, and recommending the continuance of this investigation

Whereas pursuant to a resolution of the United States Senate a committee of the Senate, popularly known as the "Nye committee", is now engaged in the conduct of an investigation of certain matters relating to the activities and operations of individuals and corporations engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of armaments and munitions of war; and

Whereas it is the opinion of the General Assembly of Rhode Island that the evidence thus far presented at the public hearings held by said senatorial committee is of vital importance to the people of this country; and

Whereas it is also the opinion of the General Assembly of Rhode Island that the investigation and the holding of public hearings should continue until the public is in possession of complete facts relating to the subject under investigation and that to this end the United States Senate should from time to time make adequate appropriations for the further prosecution of its committee's investigation and the holding of such public hearings; and

Whereas notwithstanding the public interest in the continuance of said investigation, it appears that there are various influences that would seek seriously to curtail the scope of the investigation and even to discontinue it altogether: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island hereby endorses the resolution of the United States Senate, directing its committee to conduct the investigation as aforesaid, and further endorses the investigation, as conducted up to the present time by such committee, and furthermore expresses the hope that the investigation will be continued and public hearings held until the public is in possession of complete facts relating to the subject under investigation, and expresses the further hope that the United States Senate will appropriate from time to time such funds as may be necessary to achieve such end; and be it further

Resolved, That the general assembly respectfully requests the Senators from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States to take such action as will bring this resolution with its endorsements and recommendations before the United States Senate, with the further request that it be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted by the secretary of state to the Senators from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BYRNES, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 98) providing for an investigation of the administration of the government of the Virgin Islands, reported it with an amendment.

SETTLEMENT OF THE FOREIGN DEBTS

Mr. LEWIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 112), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved, That the Senate approves any action taken by the President of the United States looking to an adjustment and settlement of the debts due the United States by debtor countries and specifically looking to a method and time, or times, of payment in money; and expresses the confidence that the President will submit in due and proper form to Congress for its action such terms and provisions of proposed settlement by the debtors as the act of Congress existing would call for.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT—ADDRESS BY SENATOR MOORE

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an interesting address delivered by my colleague from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE] on the subject of the proposed amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ANNOUNCER. The National Broadcasting Co. takes pleasure in presenting at this time Hon. A. HARRY MOORE, United States Senator from New Jersey, who will discuss the proposed amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act now pending in Congress and their effect upon farmers and consumers. The Senator formerly was Governor of New Jersey. He is a member of the Senate Agriculture Committee, which has just concluded hearings on the proposed amendments. Senator Moore.

Senator MOORE. I have been deeply interested in the views of the practical farmers who have been appearing recently before the Senate Agriculture Committee to testify upon the possible effects of the proposed amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

My State of New Jersey is not only a large producer of agricultural products, situated as it is at the door of the biggest consuming market in the country, but it is a densely populated area of high consumption of the products of the farm as well.

I have observed during the hearings that many of those who have testified have found considerable difficulty in keeping their opinions of the legislation within the confines of parliamentary conversation. They feel strongly about it. Their opinions vary from—I quote—"outrageous delegation of authority" to—and again I quote—"a flagrant violation of the Bill of Rights."

As you know, the result of the agricultural adjustment program, along with the disastrous drought of last year, has been such a curtailment of supplies of farm produce as to push prices to the consumer to the point where there is being encountered considerable consumer resistance to agricultural products of various kinds, because of their cost.

I know the consumers of my State have begun letting up a loud howl that, with incomes that are still feeling the effects of the depression, they are finding it increasingly difficult to meet the increased costs of the necessities of life, most of which come from the farms.

There are many opinions concerning the bill. I heard a farm leader from the West say with deepest sincerity that the farmers of the West are completely discouraged, disheartened, and broke, and that the enactment of this legislation was their only hope, the one ray of sunshine in an otherwise dreary aspect. Then, too, there are still people who believe in the old natural law of supply and demand.

So recently I took the matter up with a farmer who raises quantities of livestock and feed in the Middle West. This farmer was a practical man who has been able to achieve what might be regarded as considerable success in his profession of farming. He had this to say:

"Senator, I think I can visualize pretty well what would happen to my business of farming if these amendments were enacted into law. If these amendments are passed, I and all the rest of the farmers of the country might just as well give up the idea of being independent business men and resign ourselves to becoming hired men on our own property—"yes men" to agricultural theorists in the Department of Agriculture. We would be forced to become parties to any politically expedient or economically fantastic agricultural scheme that might at the moment be taken seriously here in Washington. Our prices could be arbitrarily fixed, our production could be governed by quotas, and we might only sell in those markets which would be designated by the Department of Agriculture."

That's the end of the quote.

He thought his future, if these amendments were enacted into law, to be pretty dreary.

He went further to explain how all these things could be done. In the first place, he and others have pointed out that the authority is given in these amendments to license all manufacturers, handlers, and distributors of agricultural products—anyone, as a matter of fact, who might be able to take the goods of the farmer off his hands. In these licenses it could be stated the price to be paid and even the quantity of the farmer's goods the farmer's customer could purchase.

It has been brought home to me that I have a real problem to consider in these amendments, as to their possible application to the farmers of my own State. We in New Jersey produce quantities of eggs, poultry, fruit, vegetables, milk, and a variety of other perishable foods. We have, as I mentioned, the biggest consuming area in the country into which to ship our goods.

Suppose you have a farmer in New Jersey who, by diligence, industry, and efficient management, raises a good crop of lettuce and his hens lay many eggs.

The Department of Agriculture goes to his customers and says: "You can buy only two-thirds of this man's lettuce and eggs; to take them all would put us over our quota for this market, and the quotas of all other markets are likewise filled up."

This might leave the farmer with a third of his crops on his hands with no possible market. He cannot consume all the eggs or the lettuce, so they must be left to spoil.

These ideas led me to think of the housewife who might be shaving down her purchases of food supplies because of the artificially maintained prices due to the reduced supplies coming to market.

Might not this artificially created barrier of consumer resistance make the plan defeat its own purpose of raising prices to the farmer? Might it not leave large parts of crops to rot in the fields, as the housewife still closer shaves her purchases?

I should tell you that when Secretary Wallace and Mr. Chester Davis, Administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, testified before the Senate and House committees, they referred to the broad powers given in the amendments as "reserve power." They said something about this being a big stick, or a gun behind the door.

True, they may not use these powers. But it has been my observation that when an administrative official—even some future official as yet unknown—when some official is given broad power, a big stick, his hand frequently itches mightily until he swings it.

Now for the consumer. These amendments seem to me to affect the consumer even more directly than the farmer, since the purchase allotments and marketing quotas are aimed directly at maintaining the prices which the consumer pays. The language of the legislation specifically exempts control of the farmer—but only in his capacity as a farmer.

But remember many farmers process, manufacture, handle, or distribute the products of their farms, such as milk, for one example, and they could be licensed and brought into line in their capacity along any of these lines. Or, if they don't do any of these things, isn't it just as effective for the Department of Agriculture to license the man who buys the farmer's produce, and thereby control the movement of the farmer's goods just as though he, the farmer, were under a license himself? There must be a buyer as well as a seller. Restrict the buyer and you have just as effectively restricted the seller. He has been told how much he can or cannot move out of his front gate.

The farmers and producers in my State do not think much of the bill in its present form. As a matter of fact Assistant Secretary Davis has admitted that the agriculture bill has not been of much benefit to the northeastern farmer. They complain that it does not seem consistent for the Government to pay some farmers to reduce their acreage and at the same time another department is paying out large sums of money draining swamps and irrigating deserts to bring more land into production.

We cannot regulate droughts; we cannot regulate rain; we cannot temper the wind to the shorn lamb; we cannot regulate the laws of God; we cannot regulate the sun, although there was once a man by name, Joshua, who commanded the sun to stand still in the midst of the heavens, and it has been standing still ever since.

We do not want America to stand still; we want it to go forward in prosperity and in the fear of God. Our American agriculture has succeeded in the past because of the independence of the American farmer, his ability to produce and develop his land even though there might be a surplus.

The forefathers of these American farmers came to America's shore and found it a wilderness. They sacrificed and slaved to help make it the greatest Nation upon the earth. Their untiring efforts and their faith are the most inspiring traditions of America today.

Your Agriculture Committee consists of men who are sincerely anxious to be of help and farmer and consumer alike both need help. We need, too, a little of the spirit of the early Americans, that spirit which overcame all obstacles, that spirit which made men work out their own salvation.

I recall as a boy coming home from school, and finding my mother engaged in doing those necessary things for a family of 5 boys—she did all of the work for us 5 children, and often I could hear her singing the words of that old hymn which may be familiar to some of you:

"Must I be carried to the skies,
On flowery beds of ease
While others fought to win the prize
And sailed through bloody seas."

We must not become a nation of leaners, we must not destroy that initiative which has been so helpful, but standing on our own feet face the future with unwavering faith, with unswerving loyalty to our traditions, then we will not be as men discouraged, disheartened, facing the setting sun of our Nation's greatness, but rather will be like men coming out of the mists of the morning facing the rising sun, the dawn of a new day and of new opportunities.

SPEECH BY SENATOR HASTINGS—EDITORIAL FROM CHICAGO DAILY TRIBUNE

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an editorial appearing in the Chicago Daily Tribune of March 28, 1935, entitled "Senator HASTINGS' Great Speech."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The speech of Senator HASTINGS, of Delaware, in the closing debate on the $5,000,000,000 pork-barrel bill was a most distinguished performance. Probably it was the speech of the session. When Mr. HASTINGS sat down there was nothing left to be said about the bill and mighty little to be said about the administration.

The quality of the address is suggested by Mr. HASTINGS' sharp observation that the bill "placed in the hands of one man more power than any good man should want and more than any other kind of a man ought to have." In those few words the case against not only the easy-money bill but the whole new-deal program as well, is summarized. Mr. HASTINGS' phrase will be heard again and again in the months to come.

It was a deadly speech. It exposed the abject surrender of the Democratic majority in Congress to the will of the President, and went on to show that the trust reposed in him was misplaced. The money has been spent unwisely and distributed unfairly, and the amounts involved are so staggering that the credit of the Government is strained and the confidence of business men is shaken.

At this point Mr. HASTINGS' argument consisted of little more than extended quotations from the speeches and State papers of Franklin Delano Roosevelt. The Senator read Mr. Roosevelt's well-reasoned attacks upon the extravagance of the Hoover administration and showed how petty those squanderings were in comparison to ones which Mr. Roosevelt has instituted. Mr. Roosevelt's forecast of the ruin which awaited the Nation if the squandering did not cease promptly was quoted, together with Mr. Roosevelt's pledge to reduce the expenditures of Government and balance the Budget.

Finally, Senator HASTINGS read from Mr. Roosevelt's Budget messages to show how little the President has been bound by his own word. The man who promised no more deficits has piled up $12,000,000,000 of deficit. Each time he has asked for money to prime the pump he has forecast that the spending about to be undertaken would be the last of its kind, and each time he has come back for larger appropriations.

"In view of these facts," asked Mr. HASTINGS, "how dare we depend entirely upon what the President says will happen to the country if we appropriate this huge sum of money and leave it to him to spend?"

No one arose to answer that question. Mr. HASTINGS had done much more than charge bad faith and bad judgment. He had proved both charges to the hilt. No attempt to answer him was made because no answer was possible.

WISCONSIN'S CONTRIBUTION TO GOVERNMENT—ADDRESS BY EDWIN E. WITTE

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an address delivered last evening by Edwin E. Witte, Executive Director, Committee on Economic Security, to the Wisconsin Society at Washington, D. C., March 28, 1935, on the subject of Wisconsin's Contribution to Government.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The United States is territorially an empire, with a culture that is strikingly uniform in all parts of its broad expanse. Throughout the country the pattern is the same in thought and action, in business and government.

Yet there are differences which find expression in sectional conflicts and determined adherence to State rights. The United States is a single Nation and at the same time a federation of States, ever zealous to preserve their individuality. In this quality of our Government lies, I believe, the fundamental explanation of the great success of the experiment represented by the American Constitution, under which this Nation has become the most powerful on earth and now ranks among the oldest of existing governments.

Each State justifiably makes some claim to unique distinction—climate, topography, production, cultural contributions, and outstanding individuals. In all these respects claims can be made for our Badger State which require no exaggeration. But above all else, Wisconsin is distinguished for its contributions to government.

Twenty years ago Dr. Charles McCarthy, who was himself one of the most notable figures in the progressive movement, coined the term "the Wisconsin idea." Liberal-minded people everywhere were then hailing Wisconsin as the "model State." Thereafter came the reaction, culminating in the great setback to everything progressive which resulted inevitably from the engrossment of the Nation in the World War and the period of normalcy, jazz, and speculation which followed. Since the collapse of the bubble and the prevailing universal distress which it occasioned, the pendulum has swung back toward the Wisconsin idea, but without general recognition of its kinship with the new deal.

At the crest and in the decline, while acclaimed and while suspected, Wisconsin held to its conception of government. Despite frequent shifts in political control, all the essentials of the legislation which first attracted attention to Wisconsin have remained intact and have been developed and supplemented by other measures conceived in the same spirit. Without trumpetry, and although the victim of considerable ridicule and some jealousy, Wisconsin has carried on. Amid all the present-day confusion its people have preserved their interest and faith in government. The traditions of a democratic, yet efficient, government, serving the interests of the common man, are so strong in Wisconsin that it is probably in less danger of going either communist or fascist than any other State.

Wisconsin has made many significant contributions to government. With regard to local government, it has been notable for the few defaults among its municipalities and the almost complete absence for many years of serious scandals. Of all large cities, Milwaukee has the lowest crime rate and the best record for law enforcement; and last year it also had the smallest number of traffic accidents.

In the field of State government, the catalog of the laws in which Wisconsin pioneered and which were subsequently imitated by most other States reads almost like a recital of the important legislation enacted by State governments in this century. Wisconsin passed the first State-wide primary election law and one of the earliest and best corrupt practices acts. It blazed a new trail in the ad valorem taxation of railroad property and enacted the first modern income-tax law. It first popularized university extension education and pioneered in vocational education, with the first law requiring part-time school attendance of employed children. It was the first State to regulate railroad rates effectively and one of the two first States to regulate public utilities. It was one of the earliest States to institute a civil-service system for the selection of its employees, and also one of the first to adopt a budget system and centralized purchasing. It started the first legislative reference and bill-drafting service, and was the first to establish a central planning agency, the executive council.

In labor legislation it has to its credit more than a half dozen pioneer measures of great importance: The first workmen's compensation law actually to take effect; the industrial commission act, with its standards of reasonable safety, since copied by nearly all industrial States; the first modern apprenticeship and homework laws; the first statute providing for the State licensing of private detectives; the first anti-yellow-dog contract law; the first complete labor code; and the first unemployment compensation act on the American Continent. Wisconsin was the first State to ratify the woman's suffrage amendment, the first to pass a woman's equal-rights law, and the second to ratify the child-labor amendment.

I could go on much longer and enumerate still more measures of importance in which Wisconsin blazed the trail. Those which I have mentioned, however, will suffice not only to illustrate Wisconsin's willingness to experiment, but also the sanity with which it has experimented, as shown by the great extent to which Wisconsin's leadership has been followed by other States. But such an enumeration does not adequately present Wisconsin's contributions to good State government—its tradition of keeping politics out of administration, its complete freedom from graft in the State service, its wide use of experts to advise and work out details, but not to dictate policies, and many others. Nor does it reveal one of the truly outstanding characteristics of Wisconsin politics, the great popular interest in the State government and its continuing and real vitality in the midst of the ever-growing tendency throughout the country to "pass the buck" to Washington.

While Wisconsin has generally been far more interested in what is being done at home than in affairs at Washington, officials and citizens of the State have, nevertheless, made many important contributions to our National Government. Wisconsin has never had a President or Vice President, and only five of its citizens have served in the Cabinet—none for 30 years. But in the Halls of Congress our State has always had able and forceful representatives, who have left their mark upon much of the really significant national legislation. Wisconsin also has always had at least its fair share of people in administrative positions in the Federal service, high and low, and never more than at present.

It is, however, of the extent to which the Wisconsin idea has influenced national action that I wish to speak particularly. In each Republican National Convention from 1908 on Wisconsin presented a minority platform, which was voted down overwhelmingly amid jeers and cries of "socialism." But the great majority of these once-ridiculed principles have since been enacted into law. Wisconsin was merely a few years ahead of the rest of the country.

And so it has been with the new deal. As Congressman SAUTHOFF stated the other day, the C. C. C. was foreshadowed in Governor La Follette's relief bill of 1931, and the National Industrial Recovery Act in his bill to sanction voluntary agreements among producers for the purpose of spreading employment and eliminating unfair practices. And everyone knows that a large public-works program and Federal participation in relief were first advocated by the senior Senator from Wisconsin. While less well known, it is also true that the Securities Act was largely based upon the revised Wisconsin securities law of 1933.

The man we honor tonight, the beloved professor of the University of Wisconsin, Dr. John R. Commons, has not, I believe, been in Washington at any time since President Roosevelt was inaugurated, and has had few direct contacts with administration leaders. Yet he is, in a very real sense, the spiritual father of the new deal. For a generation Dr. Commons has been the outstanding advocate, among the influential thinkers of the country, of the concepts underlying the major new-deal policies. He championed collective bargaining and in and out of season urged the necessity of organization among workers, farmers, and other producers. He, before anyone else, at least in this country, pointed out the dependence of modern industry upon mass purchases, and urged that high wages and a larger return for the farmers are absolute essentials for the maintenance of prosperity—a doctrine which now has found conclusive statistical proof in the studies of the Brookings Institute, the Capacity to Produce, the Capacity to Consume, and the Formation of Capital, which approached the problem from the point of view of the orthodox economists. In the field in which I am particularly interested, economic security, Dr. Commons stands out as the man who directed the attention of this country to the need and practicality of constructive measures to this end. He was the author of the Huber unemployment insurance bill in the Wisconsin Legislature of 1921, the first unemployment-insurance bill in this country and the "daddy" of all genuine unemployment-insurance measures introduced since, including Dr. Leiserson's famous "Ohio plan"; and Dr. Commons was also the author and first administrator of the largest voluntary unemployment-insurance plan established prior to the depression, the joint-agreement system in the Chicago clothing industry.

But more than all else, the contributions of Dr. Commons to the new deal relate to its experimental approach and its fundamental premise that it is the responsibility of government to keep the economic system functioning and to look out for the welfare of all of the people. To successive generations of students, Dr. Commons has taught the creed that government does matter and that no service is more honorable than that of service of country, in peace as in war. Successive generations of students, drawing their inspiration from him, have labored, in private and governmental service, for an improved economic order, building constructively upon the existing foundation but strengthening defects and making readjustment as required by changing conditions. Now that his physical infirmities no longer permit the same active participation in public affairs as formerly, his students are carrying on and his ideas are finding wide-spread acceptance.

Dr. McCarthy did not attempt to define the Wisconsin idea, and I cannot do so, but it will not be amiss to develop briefly some of its aspects. It represents far less a program than a method. It is a realistic approach to public questions. It recognizes the necessity for change and assumes that experimentation has a legitimate place in Government no less than in industry. But the Wisconsin idea does not contemplate change merely for the sake of change. It favors experimentation but only after all factors likely to influence success have been thoroughly weighed and the best possible administrative machinery set up before the experiment is attempted. It builds upon what we already have, and aims, not at the overthrow of existing institutions but at the improvement of their functioning. In short, it is practical, not destructive; truly scientific, and not designed merely to catch the fancy of the moment.

Wisconsin has never been a radical State, except in the original meaning of "radical"—not extreme but fundamental. Of all States west of the Alleghenies it has the oldest constitution, one that has been in effect since admission to statehood in 1848 and with few changes. It is significant also that although Wisconsin has suffered from depression quite as much as have other States, the many charlatans who are now seeking political preferment or personal enrichment by making impossible promises have made but little headway in Wisconsin.

One reason why this is true is, I believe, that the people of Wisconsin have long taken government seriously. It is an essential part of the Wisconsin idea that government does matter and that what the government does will in the long run reflect what the people want and will depend upon their intelligence. The Wisconsin idea is essentially the democratic concept to which this Nation has been dedicated—"a government of the people, by the people, and for the people."

This is not a revolutionary idea, but a return to the fundamental principles of representative government. Wisconsin's contribution to government is above all else an abiding faith that all difficulties with which we are confronted can best be worked out in a democracy functioning as the framers conceived this Government. As expressed by Wisconsin's foremost public man, Robert M. La Follette—

"There never was a higher call to greater service than in this protracted fight for social justice. I believe, with increasing depth of conviction, that we will, in our day, meet our responsibility with fearlessness and faith; that we will reclaim and preserve for our children not only the form but the spirit of our free institution."

Robert M. La Follette has passed on; John R. Commons can no longer endure the turmoil and strain of public conflict. But what they and other Wisconsin men and women of their generation contributed to government is enduring and their method and spirit offers the best hope for the solution of the very complex problems now confronting this Nation.

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the special order heretofore adopted, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar. The clerk will state the first bill in order on the calendar.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 944) to amend section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. KING. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

The bill (S. 1404) to promote the efficiency of national defense was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to permit me to make an explanation of the Army promotion bill.

Mr. KING. I withhold my objection for that purpose.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It will take about 15 minutes, and I ask unanimous consent that I be given time to explain the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent to address the Senate for 15 minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHEPPARD addressed the Senate. After having spoken (with interruptions, which appear at the conclusion of his speech) for 15 minutes,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). The Senator's time under the unanimous-consent agreement has expired. He had 15 minutes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Inasmuch as so many interruptions have occurred, I ask permission to conclude my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHEPPARD resumed and concluded his speech, which entire is as follows:

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to address the Senate on the subject of the Army promotion bill now pending—a bill relating to the promotion of officers on what is known as the "promotion list" of the Regular Army of the United States.

For purposes of promotion, all commissioned officers in the Regular Army below the grade of colonel, with the exception of commissioned officers in the Medical Corps and Chaplain Corps and professors in the United States Military Academy, are assigned to a single promotion list and are known as "promotion-list officers." Of such promotion-list officers there are 9,990, this number having been fixed by the Army Appropriation Act of June 30, 1922. Of this number, about a third consists of former emergency officers of the World War who were appointed to the Regular Army under the National Defense Act of 1920.

Colonels in the Regular Army, except those in the Medical Corps, Chaplain Corps, and faculty of the United States Military Academy, are known as "relative-rank list officers." Of such colonels there are 470, this number also having been fixed by the Army Appropriation Act of June 30, 1922.

Promotion among promotion-list officers is by seniority derived from comparative length of commissioned service, as vacancies occur in the various grades, regardless of the branch of the Army to which an officer belongs—this system having been established by the National Defense Act of 1920.

Officers promoted from relative-rank list colonels to brigadier generals and major generals, or to brigadier generals alone, are chosen for such promotion through selection on the basis of comparative merit by the President of the United States and not on the basis of seniority. There are 46 brigadier generals and 21 major generals—these numbers having been authorized by the National Defense Act of 1920, and carried in all subsequent appropriation bills. Promotion from colonel to these two highest grades on the basis of selection was also provided in the National Defense Act of 1920, as was the designation of colonels as relative-rank list officers.

The 9,990 promotion-list officers are distributed among the grades below colonels as follows: 577 lieutenant colonels, 1,725 majors, 3,450 captains, 2,667 first lieutenants, and 1,571 second lieutenants—this distribution having been fixed by the Army Appropriation Act of June 30, 1922.

All officers must retire at 64 years of age, and may retire on their own application with the approval of the President at an earlier age on the completion of 30 years of service. Service may also terminate through death, disability, forced retirement, or resignation.

With this background, let us consider a proper system of promotion.

The chief object of a promotion system is to secure the maximum benefit to the service. In the promotion of officers the principal purpose should be to obtain the best commanding personnel.

The promotion-list officers, relative-rank-list officers, and general officers of the line are divided, first, into the company grades of second lieutenant, first lieutenant, and captain; second, into the field grades of major, lieutenant colonel, and colonel; third, into the general officers of the line known as "brigadier generals" and "major generals."

The general officers of the line are charged with the largest problems and responsibilities of command. In any well-balanced method of promotion there should be developed a sufficient number of officers in the grade of colonel, the grade from which advancement is made to brigadier general and major general, at such an age as will enable the selecting authority to have a fairly large range of choice among men who are young enough to serve a substantial time as general officers of the line in the event of selection. There are only 46 brigadier generals and 21 major generals, but their functions comprise the direction of divisions and corps areas and other tasks of first importance in the Army, and from the major generals comes the Chief of Staff, who directs the entire military organization.

In the grade below colonel where promotion is by seniority officers should reach each grade at such age as to render the best possible service for that particular status and should not continue in the same grade too long after having mastered its possibilities and requirements, or too long to reach the next grade at an age early enough to do it full justice, or so long as to upset the age balance on which a promotion system should be based.

It must be recalled that the grades increase in number of officers as we proceed below colonel in our Army, and until we arrive at first lieutenant, a fact which of necessity makes promotion slower in any seniority system in connection with grades containing the larger numbers. Here the effort should be to make the disparity in numbers between grades as small as efficient administration will permit, and, thus, to keep officer personnel in as fit a condition as practicable, both from the standpoint of proper length of service in each grade and prospect of promotion.

Let it be understood also that when we reach the company grades below captain, those of first lieutenant and second lieutenant, we come in contact with officers whose duties are comparatively most limited of all, duties which are more rapidly mastered than those of higher grades. It is here that the present seniority system, holding men, as it does in our Army, in these initial grades of second lieutenant and first lieutenant, 6 and 10 years respectively, or a total of 16 years, begins its devastating effect from the viewpoint of the proper evolution of an officer through the various grades as well as the integrity and success of a duly integrated system of promotion. The same objections apply with increasing force, on account of increasing importance of function, to present conditions in the grade of captain, and in substantial degree to present conditions in still higher grades under the seniority rule.

The existing seniority system for officers on the promotion list began on July 1, 1920, having been established by the National Defense Act of that year. That same act increased the number of officers in the Regular Army by the admission of nearly 6,000 former emergency Army officers of the World War, most of whom had participated in the World War and had achieved notable records, and most of whom became captains, first lieutenants, and second lieutenants in the Regular Army. The total number of officers in the Regular Army was reduced to 12,000 by the Army Appropriation Act of 1922, and has remained at approximately that number until the present time.

The result of this seniority system for the promotion-list officers is that the average period of service as a second lieutenant is 6 years and as a first lieutenant 10 years. In other words, it takes at present an average of 16 years to become a captain, when, according to special studies of the General Staff, the best results can be obtained and a proper balanced system of promotion best sustained by a period of 10 years' service in the positions of second lieutenant and first lieutenant, as the most efficient background for promotion to captain, 3 of the 10 years to be served as second lieutenant and 7 as first lieutenant.

The pending promotion bill provides that after 3 years' service a second lieutenant shall automatically become first lieutenant, and that a first lieutenant after 7 years' service shall automatically become a captain. The pending bill discards the seniority system as to second lieutenants and first lieutenants. The existing law to the effect that one may enter the officer personnel of the Army only by becoming a second lieutenant and establishing the age limits of 21 to 30 years for such entry is not disturbed. Under the National Defense Act of 1920 the former emergency World War officers were admitted without maximum limitation as to age.

The present seniority system has been in existence only 15 years, not long enough for the junior second lieutenant at the time of its beginning to reach captain. If the present system continues, this second lieutenant, having entered his second lieutenancy, we will say, at 23, the average age of entry for that grade, and having served 6 years as second lieutenant and 10 years as first lieutenant, would become a captain at 39, and, after 24 years as captain, the time actually served by the officer who was junior captain on July 1, 1920, would become a major at 63, and would be compelled to retire for age after a service of 1 year as major. The mere recital of these facts shows how far the present system is from realizing the principles of a proper promotion system already defined herein, and from enabling the country to obtain the benefit of the years of service through a proper break-down of these years through all the grades from second lieutenant to major general.

Let us turn now to the grade of captain, and observe a personal illustration of what is occurring. The officer who, on July 1, 1920, was at the bottom of the list of captains is still so far from the top of the list that he cannot become a major under the existing rate of advancement until 1944, at which time he will have been a captain 24 years.

The General Staff studies are to the effect that the best results will be forthcoming if a captain becomes a major after 15 years of commissioned service, preferably with 3 years of service as second lieutenant, 7 years as first lieutenant, and 5 years as captain. The pending bill does not provide, however, that a captain shall automatically become a major after 15 years of commissioned service, nor does the War Department so recommend. Such a provision would mean that all the 3,450 captains under the present conditions would immediately become majors. The situation is such that we can only approximate proper standards in view of conditions. The pending bill returns to the seniority system so far as captain is concerned, adding the limitation that when an officer reaches the head of the list as captain he cannot become major until he shall have had at least 15 years of commissioned service. This is to insure proper standards of training and experience when the present congestion in promotion shall have been relieved and promotion shall have become more rapid than at present. In order to aid in relieving the congestion in the present promotion status of captains, and in order more nearly to secure the number of majors needed for the duties connected with the grade of major, the bill provides an increase of 890 in the number of majors. This means that on the day this bill becomes effective the first 1,412 captains on the present list will become majors, this number resulting from the new majors created by this bill, as well as from promotions from major to the new lieutenant colonelcies also created by this bill.

It will be seen to what degree this bill approximates the standards established by staff research for majors; to wit, a prior commissioned service of 15 years, when it is known that this group of 1,412 captains will each have had about 18 years of commissioned service when they are made majors.

Coming to major, let it be said that it is the finding of the General Staff, as a result of its investigations, that the most effective service will be secured if a major becomes a lieutenant colonel after 20 years of commissioned service. The pending bill does not provide, however, that a major shall become a lieutenant colonel by virtue of 20 years of prior commissioned service. It continues the seniority principle as to promotion from major to lieutenant colonel with the requirement that before a major may become a lieutenant colonel he must have had 20 years of prior commissioned service. In order to relieve the congestion in the present promotion status of majors and in order more nearly to secure the number of lieutenant colonels needed for the duties connected with that grade, it creates 364 lieutenant colonels. This means that on the day this bill goes into effect the first 522 majors on the promotion list of that grade will become lieutenant colonels—this number resulting from the new lieutenant colonels created by this bill, as well as from promotions from lieutenant colonel to the new colonelcies this bill establishes. The officers of this group of 522 majors will have had a prior commissioned service of 22 to 25 years when they become lieutenant colonels. Note that the standard set by the General Staff is 20 years in this connection—and that while the additional promotions to lieutenant colonel made possible by this bill are somewhat belated, they come in time for these officers to render suitable service in this grade, and if these promotions to lieutenant colonel are delayed much longer the Government will be deprived of the services these men are qualified to render in the higher grades.

We now come to lieutenant colonel. The Staff studies are to the effect that a lieutenant colonel should become colonel after a commissioned service of 26 years. The pending bill provides that a lieutenant colonel shall not become a colonel until after a prior commissioned service of 26 years, and with this limitation leaves the principle of seniority unaffected as to promotion from lieutenant colonel to colonel. In order to quicken promotion from lieutenant colonel to colonel, and more nearly to secure the number of colonels needed for the duties connected with that grade, and to afford a wider range of choice for promotion by selection from colonel to the remaining higher grades above the grade of colonel, 158 new colonels are created. The senior and junior officers of the first 158 lieutenant colonels now on the list of lieutenant colonels, who thus will be promoted to colonels, have had a prior commissioned service of 31 and 29 years, respectively, or 5 and 3 years longer than the standard length of such service prescribed for the best results by the General Staff, or an average of 4 years over the standard for all this group of 158 lieutenant colonels. Here again the additional promotions made possible by this bill come in time for the rendition of service appropriate to the various grades in accordance with the standards established by the professional studies of the General Staff. And here again we note that further delay in such promotions, notably promotions to colonel, will increasingly handicap the Government in the matter of an adequate field from the standpoint of age, experience, and qualification for the selection of the most important officers, to wit, the general officers of the line and the Chief of Staff himself.

The pending bill makes no change in the number of brigadier generals, nor major generals, nor in the selective method of promotion above colonel.

The pending bill makes no change in the total number of officers on the promotion list. The increases in the number of captains, majors, lieutenant colonels, and colonels are offset by a corresponding decrease in the number of first and second lieutenants.

The bill therefore does not provide for a single additional officer. It merely makes changes in the numbers already in the various grades.

Under the pending bill there would be on July 1, this year, 791 second lieutenants, 1,886 first lieutenants, 3,599 captains, 2,615 majors, 941 lieutenant colonels, 628 colonels, 46 brigadier generals, and 21 major generals.

I have heretofore given the number of officers in the various grades under existing law.

It is submitted that the more efficient standards of service and promotion established and approximated by this bill will more than justify the added cost which the Department estimates will be $705,000 for the first year, $620,000 for the second year, and $510,000 per annum for the third and succeeding years of operation. The present cost per annum of the officer personnel on the promotion list is $46,805,466.

The pending bill was submitted to the President, who on January 17, 1935, wrote the Secretary of War as follows:

> Your plan for a revision of the Army's promotion system appears desirable from every viewpoint, and I wish you would take the necessary steps to present it to the Congress for enactment. It has my approval.

It may be said in general of the pending bill relating to promotion list of officers that it puts promotion for these officers on a more logical and efficient basis.

First. By making certain the advancement of second lieutenants to first lieutenants in 3 years, of first lieutenants to captains in 7 years, discontinuing the seniority rule below captain.

Second. By the immediate advancement of large numbers of officers who have been in certain grades too long for the most desirable results.

Third. By permanently increasing the number of officers in certain grades, decreasing the number in others, leaving total number unchanged.

Fourth. By establishing through these changes a more rapid and more uniform stream of promotion and a service in the various grades for periods and at ages adapted to the most satisfactory performance of the duties connected with the various grades.

It may be said further that the bill in improving the service does belated justice to thousands of former World War officers who entered the Regular Army at unusually advanced ages in the earlier grades by affording them not only substantial and long-merited promotion but an opportunity for retirement in the important grade of major.

The bill also contributes to better service and to the relief of the present congestion in promotion by reducing the age of voluntary retirement from 30 to 15 years on a reasonable pay basis.

Furthermore, it places chaplains and members of the Veterinary Corps on the same promotion basis as that of the Medical Corps, thus, according just and deserved recognition to these important arms of the service, and unifying the advancement for all the non-promotion-list officers except the members of the West Point faculty, who have a satisfactory promotion system of their own.

It makes a welcome and inspiriting change from the dreary and monotonous spectacle of 10,460 officers ranged one above the other on the advancement list from second lieutenant to colonel, virtual prisoners most of them, behind the bars of a hopeless seniority system, each waiting for the next one above him tardily to be promoted, graciously to resign, thoughtfully to desert, obligingly to be court martialed, generously to retire, or considerately to die.

Let us now proceed with the bill by sections so as to become familiar with the method by which the features already discussed are embodied in the measure, and with other features not yet touched upon.

Section 1 provides that hereafter the promotion list of the Regular Army and Philippine Scouts shall include all officers on the active list in the grades of second lieutenant and colonel, inclusive, except officers of the Medical Department, chaplains, and professors of the United States Military Academy; that promotion-list colonels shall be placed immediately above the lieutenant colonels on the promotion list established in section 24a of the act of June 4, 1920, in the order of their standing on the relative list of colonels on the date of this act; that officers on the promotion list, as defined in this section, shall be known as "promotion-list officers", and that all other officers, except general officers, shall be known as "non-promotion-list officers"; that nothing in this act shall be so construed as to change the respective relative positions held by officers on the promotion list prescribed by this act, nor the method of determining the position of officers on that list as prescribed by the act of June 4, 1920, as amended, except as qualified in this section.

The effect of section 1 is to discontinue the designation of colonels as relative rank officers and to include them in the officers designated as promotion-list officers. All other officers, except general officers, are designated by this section as non-promotion-list officers. The sections of the National Defense Act referred to establish the promotion list and the seniority system.

Section 1 also provides that all promotions shall continue to be subject to the examinations now required for promotion-list officers—to wit, physical examinations exclusively.

Section 2 provides that on and after July 1, 1935, the authorized number of promotion-list officers in the grade of colonel shall be 6 percent of the total number of promotion-list officers authorized by law; that the authorized number of such officers in the grade of lieutenant colonel shall be 9 percent of such total; and that the authorized number of such officers in the grade of major shall be 25 percent of such total number.

It is by this provision that the number of colonels is increased by 158, the number of lieutenant colonels by 364, and the number of majors by 890.

No percentage is fixed by existing law, but the numbers authorized make the present percentage of colonels 4.5 percent, lieutenant colonels 5.5 percent, and majors 16.5 percent of the total number of authorized promotion-list officers.

Section 2 also provides that in making any computation to determine the percentages authorized by this section, whenever a final fraction of one-half or more occurs the next higher whole number shall be adopted.

Section 3 provides that all vacancies, including original vacancies resulting from the operation of section 2, occurring on or after July 1, 1935, in the respective grades of colonel, lieutenant colonel, and major, of promotion-list officers, shall be filled by the promotion of promotion-list officers in the manner provided in section 24 (c) of the act of June 4, 1920, with the qualification that no promotion-list officer shall be promoted in time of peace under this bill to the grade of colonel until he shall have completed 26 years of service, to the grade of lieutenant colonel until he shall have completed 20 years of service, or to the grade of major until he shall have completed 15 years of service.

This means that the seniority system shall be retained in the case of promotions to colonel, lieutenant colonel, and major in peace time with the qualification introduced by this bill as to completion of 26 years of service as a requisite for promotion to colonel, of 20 years for promotion to lieutenant colonel, and of 15 years for promotion to major.

The section of the National Defense Act referred to, further defines and perfects the single-promotion list, applying it to all officers on that list regardless of the branch of the Army to which they belong.

Section 3 contains a proviso that these requisites shall not apply to lieutenant colonels and majors whose first appointments in the Regular Army were in grades above those of captain and second lieutenant respectively, or who were appointed to the Regular Army under the first sentence of section 24 of the act of June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920, nor to captains whose first appointments in the Regular Army were in a grade above second lieutenant, or whose present rank dates from July 1, 1920.

The exceptions made by the proviso just quoted are for the purpose of allowing officers who were appointed to the Regular Army on July 1, 1920, or sooner, in higher grades than second lieutenant and captain, and who, when they become the senior officer of their present grades will not have had the number of years of commissioned service required by this section for promotion shall, notwithstanding, be promoted without remaining such senior officer until they shall have served such number of years. Otherwise, they would hold back large numbers of officers junior to them on the promotion list with longer periods of commissioned service. The officers thus excepted in order to safeguard those below them are as follows: Lieutenant colonels, 34; majors, 270; captains, about 2,000. They obtain the benefit of this exception only as they reach successively and individually the senior place in their respective grades. They were given preferential rank on entering the Regular Army by virtue of notable service as emergency officers in the World War. Inasmuch as most of these captains will have served the requisite period for promotion to major soon after the period fixed by this bill for its operation to begin, namely, July 1, 1935, the proviso does not seriously change the new promotion system.

The proposed law gives veterinary officers and chaplains the same system of appointment and promotion as is now given officers of the Medical Corps. At present, officers of the Veterinary Corps are appointed in the grade of second lieutenant, are promoted to first lieutenant after 3 years' service, to captain after 7 years' service, to major after 14 years' service, to lieutenant colonel after 20 years' service, and to colonel after 26 years' service.

Chaplains now are appointed as first lieutenants, reach captain in 5 years' service, major in 14 years, lieutenant colonel in 20 years, and get no higher.

Officers of the Medical Corps are appointed as first lieutenants, promoted to captain after 3 years' service, to major after 12 years, to lieutenant colonel after 20 years, and to colonel after 26 years.

Chaplains and veterinary officers are placed on a parity by this bill with officers of the Medical Corps for the reason that it is desired from the standpoint of simplified administration to include the bulk of nonpromotion-list officers in the same system of promotion, and at the same time to accord an appropriate and a too-long-delayed recognition to two important branches of the Army.

Section 4 further provides that from and after the effective date of this act original appointments in the Veterinary Corps shall be made in the grade of first lieutenant from Reserve Veterinary officers between the ages of 23 and 32 years, and that officers serving in that corps on the effective date of this act in the grade of second lieutenant shall be promoted to the grade of first lieutenant as of said date.

At present initial appointments to the Veterinary Corps are made in the grade of second lieutenant, whereas officers of the Medical Corps and Chaplain Corps are initially appointed first lieutenants. As explained, just previously, the first part of section 4 is to equalize the length of service required for promotion in the three branches wherein officers are promoted after certain years of service, namely, Medical Corps, Veterinary Corps, and Chaplain Corps. This last clause of section 4 provides that veterinary officers will also enter the service in the same grade as do medical officers and chaplains.

Professors at West Point have a promotion system of their own, which seems to be working satisfactorily.

Section 5 provides that any officer on the active list of the Regular Army or Philippine Scouts, who, on the effective date of this act or at any time thereafter, shall have completed not less than 15 nor more than 29 years' service may, upon his own application, be retired, in the discretion of the President, with annual pay equal to the product of 2½ percent of his active duty annual pay at the time of his retirement, multiplied by a number equal to the years of his active service not in excess of 29 years, provided that the number of years of service to be credited in computing the right to retirement and retirement pay under this section shall include all service now or hereafter credited for active-duty pay purposes, any fractional part of a year amounting to 6 months or more to be counted as a complete year.

This provision will allow voluntary retirement with a reasonable equity in retired pay, will stimulate promotion, and is to the interest of the Government where certain officers over the average age of their grades have not a reasonable chance of promotion in prospect, and will naturally wish to retire.

Section 5 also provides that any officer of the Regular Army or Philippine Scouts, below the grade of major, who served as a commissioned officer in the Army of the United States prior to November 12, 1918, and whose application for retirement under this section has been approved by the President shall be retired in the grade of major and with retired pay computed as specified in this section for a major with the same length of service.

This provision is solely in the interest of World War veterans. Upon the passage of the pending bill, no World War officer will be in a lower grade than captain, but about 175 of them, because of age, will not reach the grade of major before retirement for age. It would not increase the retired pay to which they would already be entitled, as by November 11, 1935, all such officers would be drawing the same pay as a major.

Section 5 provides further that nothing in this act shall operate to deprive any officer of the retired rank to which he is now entitled under existing law.

This is to carry on an already existing law which places World War officers, upon retirement, on the retired list with the rank, but not the pay, of the highest grade held during the World War.

Section 5 provides further that any officer originally appointed as of July 1, 1920, at an age greater than 45 years may, if he so elects, in lieu of retired pay at the rate specified in this section, receive retired pay at the rate of 4 percent of active-duty pay for each complete year of commissioned service in the United States Army, the total to be not more than 75 percent.

This repeats and carries on a provision of existing law, section 24, National Defense Act.

Section 5 provides further that all officers retired under the provisions of this section shall be placed on the unlimited retired list.

There are two retired lists—the limited and the unlimited. The limited list is restricted by the act of February 16, 1891, to 350, and also is reserved for those officers retired at the discretion of the President after 30 years or 45 years of service. The unlimited list is for all officers retired at 64 years of age or because of physical disability in line of duty. Therefore, the limited list should be left to serve the purpose for which it was provided and limited to 350.

Section 6 provides that the seventh paragraph of section 127 (a) of the act of June 4, 1920, as amended, is further amended by adding a provision to the effect that temporary appointments to higher rank, not above that of colonel, may likewise be made in time of peace under such regulations as the President may prescribe, but that such appointments shall confer no right to exercise command, take precedence, or receive pay or allowances prior to the recognition of a state of war, these appointments on such recognition to take full force and effect, carrying rank from date of appointment.

Inasmuch as this section has no immediate relation to the subject of promotion, it has been decided not to request its adoption, and I shall move to strike it out at the proper time.

Section 7 provides that nothing in this act shall be deemed to apply to temporary advancement in rank of commissioned officers of the Air Corps as authorized in the act of July 2, 1926, and that officers temporarily advanced in rank under that act shall be counted only in the grade in which they hold permanent commissions in computing the numbers in such grades.

This section is solely for the purpose of leaving existing law unchanged.

Section 8 provides that all existing laws governing the termination of active service of officers shall continue in full force and effect except as modified in this pending bill. This section is self-explanatory.

Section 9 fixes the effective date of the act as July 1, 1935, and contains the usual repealing clause as to conflicting and inconsistent statutes.

During the delivery of Mr. SHEPPARD'S speech,

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am glad to do so.

Mr. KING. Is not the bill fashioned upon the so-called "Security Act of 1922", which contemplated a standing Army of larger proportions than the present one; and in all the subsequent legislation has there not been carried the idea that the provisions of that act were to be enforced and there was to be a larger number of major generals, colonels, and so forth; and does not this bill merely perpetuate that plan, notwithstanding the fact that we did not increase the Army to the limit provided by that act?

Mr. SHEPPARD. This bill does not increase the number of officers. The number of officers authorized by the National Defense Act of 1920 was decreased substantially by the Army Appropriation Act of 1922 and has not since been increased. The number of officers we have now is barely sufficient for an army of the present number, and the pending bill does not increase that number.

Mr. KING and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield first to the Senator from Utah. I shall next yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am trying to understand the intricacies of Army promotions. I know the Senator is making a very able and a very clear statement; but in view of the act reorganizing the Regular Army, which we passed following the World War and which provided for such a large number of officers, and in view of the fact that so many new officers were commissioned in the Army following the World War, I still am unable to understand why there have not been legitimate and proper promotions from that time until the present; how there could be these "humps" and inequalities.

With the very large Army that was provided for—the number of privates was not increased to the extent anticipated by that act, but the officers were provided for—it would seem that during the intervening years there should have been many, many promotions, so that there would be no injustices and no inequalities; but, upon the contrary, there would be more major generals and brigadier generals and officers in the higher ranks than one would expect and more than would be justified in view of the size of the Army.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The number of major generals, brigadier generals, and the officers in all other grades except second lieutenants was fixed in 1922 and has never been changed. This bill proposes increases in some grades and decreases in others, leaving the total number unchanged.

I now yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, when I tried to interrupt the Senator from Texas he was saying that it takes 16 years for these promotions to be made.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It takes 16 years, on the average, under the present promotion system for a man entering as second lieutenant to reach the grade of captain.

Mr. NORRIS. If, in the meantime we should have war, would not that process be somewhat expedited?

Mr. SHEPPARD. In the event of war, a different rule would apply. I am speaking now of a peace-time system.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Has any objection been made to the bill the Senator is discussing?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] objected, and I have obtained permission to make an explanation of the bill to the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to ask the Senator whether any additional financial obligation would be imposed on the Government by the enactment of the proposed legislation?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It would require an additional cost of about $705,000 for the first year, about $600,000 for the second year, and thereafter about half a million dollars additional per annum.

Mr. WALSH. In other words, the system of promotion proposed would lead to retirements, which would increase the expenses of the Army each year?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No. The proposed bill does not call for officers to be involuntarily retired to make room for other officers to be promoted, although voluntary retirement is expedited. The promotion brought about is due to the additional number of officers created in the higher grades and to automatic period promotions in the two lowest grades. The numbers in the various grades are rearranged, but the total number of officers is not increased.

Mr. WALSH. The purpose of the proposed legislation, as I understand it, is to remove the "humps", as they are called, by reason of the fact that the promotion process under the present system is so slow that men are beyond the age they ought to be for certain ranks in the Army?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is one of the reasons, but the chief reason for the bill is the need of a more efficient system of promotion. The bill breaks down the years of service between the ages of 21 and 64 in the various grades so that the Government and the country will get the best service from its Army officers.

Mr. WALSH. We have the same problem before the Committee on Naval Affairs in the matter of the promotion of naval officers. Of course, there will be a continuing and growing increase in the number of retired officers each year, in order to reduce the number of officers in the higher grades, as they move from the lower grades to the higher grades.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is not in the Army system. There is no forced retirement in the pending bill.

Mr. WALSH. Are the retirements proposed to be after examinations?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not for the officers of the Army. As I have said, this bill does not contemplate or depend upon forced retirements to make room for promotions from lower grades.

Mr. WALSH. Is an examination held for the purpose of determining who are more efficient, and are the less efficient retired?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; the present Army system is based solely on seniority from second lieutenant to colonel.

Mr. WALSH. Does this bill correct that?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes; by setting up a system of promotions in the two lower grades based on stated periods of service, a second lieutenant becoming a first lieutenant in 3 years, and a first lieutenant becoming a captain in 10 years. The studies of the General Staff show that we get the best results from such periods of service for those grades. Then, after the grade of captain is reached, we retain the seniority system, and increase the number of majors and lieutenant colonels and colonels, respectively, in order to make the flow of promotions more rapid. Heretofore the number of officers in the higher grades has been too small to meet the requirements of a promotion plan which would give the country the most effective results.

Mr. WALSH. We have just provided, through the medium of a bill passed by this body, reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, for promotions in the Navy and eliminations through retirement of the inefficient, based upon examinations to be held, or by having the qualifications of the officers passed upon by boards designated for that purpose.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Army uses a different principle in peace time.

Mr. WALSH. The Navy used to follow the seniority principle, too.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I know the Navy did.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. CUTTING. I have not meant to interrupt the Senator during his statement, and I voted to report the bill favorably from the committee. I wondered whether the Senator had discussed, or was going to discuss, section 6, concerning which I have had a good many complaints.

Mr. SHEPPARD. A controversy began to develop as to section 6, and on account of the fact that it had no vital relationship to the remainder of the bill, I decided, with the consent of the Committee on Military Affairs, not to press that section.

Mr. CUTTING. I am very glad to have that assurance from the Senator.

Mr. SHEPPARD subsequently said: Mr. President, in response to inquiries from a number of Senators with respect to the promotion bill, which went over on objection, I desire to say that I did not have the opportunity, because of the fact that the bill went over, to move to strike out section 6, which I shall do when the bill comes before the Senate for action.

I wish to say that I shall call the attention of Senators personally to the points made in my endeavor to explain the bill this morning. I am very anxious to have every Senator give the matter careful study and to secure a reasonably early vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection having been made to the consideration of Senate bill 1404, it will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY ACT

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask leave to introduce, out of order, since the calendar is the pending business, a bill to amend title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

(The bill (S. 2445) to amend title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act appears under the proper heading.)

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to make a brief explanation of the bill.

The Committee on Finance has been working for several weeks making an investigation according to the directions of the Senate as carried in the so-called "Nye-McCarran resolution." In connection with that investigation the committee is considering such changes as might be found wise to be made in the present N. R. A. law, with a view of extending it, or taking such other action as may seem proper.

The committee had intended to evolve its own bill. It took the suggestions of the President of the United States, as conveyed in his message to Congress, as well as specific suggestions made by Mr. Richberg, representing the N. R. A. organization, and directed the Legislative Drafting Service, headed by Mr. Boots, to construct a bill merely as a basis upon which the committee might work.

This morning the committee decided in executive session that it would be wise, in order to remove any doubt and uncertainty in the country as to what were the purposes of the committee, that I should introduce this bill today for reference to the Finance Committee.

This particular bill has not been considered by the Committee on Finance. I want everyone distinctly to understand that it is merely a basis upon which the committee will work. No doubt many changes will be made in this particular measure and the committee may, after it has finished its consideration of the bill, make many modifications and effect many changes. The bill, however, represents the viewpoint of the President as outlined in his message, and the ideas set forth in the specific suggestions of Mr. Richberg, representing the N. R. A.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. KING. I do not desire the impression to be obtained from what the Senator has said that the committee is committed to the enactment of any bill. While it is true, as the Senator has just stated, that the bill just offered by him will be before the committee for consideration, no action has been taken by the committee favorable to any bill, or to the continuation of the existing law. The committee is conducting hearings upon the resolutions offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN]. What action will be taken by the committee remains to be seen.

Mr. HARRISON. That is quite true, and I tried to make myself quite explicit upon that point. There is a great deal of uncertainty existing in the country as to what action Congress will take with reference to the N. R. A.; and so it is the purpose of the Finance Committee, although it has been laboring hard for the past 3 or 4 weeks considering this matter, to put on more steam. Instead of meeting in the mornings only, in the future we shall meet in the mornings and in the afternoons. We have procured the services of three or four or more experts to go over all the correspondence and all the files and all the suggestions which come to us, and these experts are assisting us in expediting the matter; so the committee intends to expedite the consideration of the question with all haste.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state the point of order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senate has agreed to proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar. It is now 10 minutes of 1. We have been in session for 50 minutes and we have considered only two or three bills. I demand the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The clerk will state the next bill on the calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 213) to amend section 113 of the Criminal Code of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat. 1109; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 203), and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, this bill makes it a felony for any Senator or any Member of the House or other person in the classes mentioned to render any service whatever before any department or agency of the Government. It does not limit its provision to cases in which fees are charged. It makes it a felony for a Senator to attempt to speed up action or to ascertain the status of a matter pending before departments. The bill should go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1506) to change the name of the Pickwick Landing Dam to Quin Dam was announced as next in order.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ALVA A. MURPHY

The bill (S. 170) for the relief of Alva A. Murphy was announced as next in order.

BRITISH TREASURY AND FOREIGN DEBTS DUE UNITED STATES

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I make free to address myself to the bill which has just now been explained by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee. I feel that that which I now bring to the attention of the Senate is legitimate and germane to the subject of our military defenses.

Mr. President, it appears that the nations of the world are busy increasing their armaments, preparing for some mysterious undertaking, the like of which at this particular moment of world confusions, we may only anticipate and not here and now wholly define.

We note in the press coming to us, reported as international news—particularly I read from the New York Tribune foreign correspondent, of date the 27th of this month—that the British treasury report that despite the money paid for armaments, or that which is contributed for general purposes, they are now in a situation where their receipts exceed their expenses. British treasury officials now report to the world their ability, sir, not only to balance their budget but to anticipate and meet whatever emergencies in expense may arise from the conditions which we must speak of as military preparations.

I rise at this moment to address the Senate on the situation now before us, as presented by the eminent Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and the status of the British treasury, as disclosed in the late reports. What is the situation toward the United States, as to this amount in its Treasury and in the control of Great Britain? We congratulate the people of Great Britain that they have reached a point where, to their satisfaction, they may report that their receipts are exceeding their expenditures, and that the prospect ahead is one which enables them to report to the world the excess by which they will no longer be compelled to levy taxes on their admirable people.

I respectfully, then, present the thought to our honorable friends, to whom we extend our praise for reaching this point of excessive possession over their indebtedness, that they turn to consider the debt they owe the United States of America, in conjunction with other debtor nations who, we read, have risen all at once to the riches which we envy and delight to praise them for. We here ask: Will not these consider the payment of part of those riches on the debt they owe the United States, that the United States might, with some money that is due us, begin to prepare our necessary defenses in the event the eventualities may justify it? Second, sir, that the sums may be applied in our own land to the needs of our soldiers, their just claims for compensation, and pensions long due, as well as to meet the great tax demand essential for the payment of the sums we are compelled to give as relief to the needy of America.

Mr. President, I make bold at this moment to call to the attention of the eminent leaders of these foreign countries, whose expenditures now appear to be so great for the addition of armament, and in the prospect of what to us must mean somewhere preparation for conflict, that though they may prepare their ammunition and prepare their multiple armaments, we shall not be surprised if these same eminent agencies, through their selected spokesmen, shall again be seen knocking at our doors, crying forth in the well-known language of Caesar, as given us by the bard—

Help me, Cassius, or I sink!

And in effect, sir, to suggest further loans from the United States.

In order, sir, that such suggestion could ever be pertinent, let it be understood that by payment of their debts, or the spirit of payment disclosed and displayed by them, a more encouraging reception naturally would be accorded them by the people of America and their representatives than could possibly be hoped for if, with their possession of these riches, they do not give some evidence of willingness to pay their debts so long due us.

Mr. President, I call attention as I conclude to the fact that if an appeal might be made to America for such relief as the others may deem essential, a payment of their debts, or a gesture toward that end, at this particular time, would be to their service as much as to the relief of America. To the object of that, sir, I have a resolution. I read the resolution as I now introduce it, that it may take such course for future action as the Senate may decide, and I shall at an early date address the Senate on the resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate approves any action taken by the President of the United States looking to an adjustment and settlement of the debts due the United States by debtor countries and specifically looking to a method and time, or times, of payment in money; and expresses the confidence that the President will submit in due and proper form to Congress for its action such terms and provisions of proposed settlement by the debtors as the act of Congress existing would call for.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the resolution, where it says "payment in money", mean payment in gold, or payment in silver, or payment in the paper currencies of the respective countries?

Mr. LEWIS. I answer my able friend, knowing his great interest in the subject, that since there are now pending many measures to be determined in the immediate future as to what shall constitute the money of the United States, my reply is that whatever shall be money of the United States, that money shall be, in my opinion, sufficient, or that which is parallel and equivalent to it from any other country.

I tender the resolution, and ask to have it take such course as the Senate may think appropriate. I will call the resolution up later for action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUSSELL in the chair). Is there objection to the resolution's being submitted at this time? The Chair hears none. The resolution will be received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

(The resolution (S. Res. 112) appears elsewhere in today's proceedings under the appropriate heading.)

ALVA A. MURPHY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill 170 is before the Senate. Is there objection to its present consideration?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 170) for the relief of Alva A. Murphy, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to add at the end of the bill a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Alva A. Murphy, of Spencer, Iowa, the sum of $1,500 in full satisfaction of all claims of such Alva A. Murphy against the United States for damages resulting from injuries to himself and his car when shot at by one Claude Rideout on June 22, 1933, on State highway no. 2, about 5 miles west of Oskaloosa, Iowa, while such Alva A. Murphy was assisting Harry Elliott, United States prohibition agent, to arrest such Claude Rideout: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETIREMENT OF ACTING ASSISTANT SURGEONS

The bill (S. 883) directing the retirement of acting assistant surgeons of the United States Navy at the age of 64 years was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., The acting assistant surgeons of the United States Navy who, on the date of the passage of this act have reached the age of 64 years, shall be placed on the retired list of the Navy with pay at the rate of three-fourths of their active-duty pay.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1878) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the Mack Copper Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 574) relative to Members of Congress acting as attorneys in matters where the United States has an interest was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 35) authorizing the Committee on the Judiciary to investigate certain phases of the National Recovery Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

ROY CHANDLER

The bill (S. 438) for the relief of Roy Chandler was announced as next in order and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Roy Chandler, late of Company G, Thirty-ninth Regiment United States Infantry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said organization on August 17, 1918: Provided, That no back pay, pension, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. KING. Yes; but I should like to say to the Senator that I find this man served only 2 months in the Army, and then deserted, and claimed that because of illness he did not return to the Army.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, it is true that he served only a short time; but the record shows that he received a message that his mother was dying, and he went to her. He intended to take the penalty for being absent without leave, which, if he had been absent for only 10 days or less, would have been the charge. He was willing to take whatever penalty went with that charge in order to visit his mother during, as he assumed, her last hours. He was taken ill and was locked up in jail, and kept there for 7 days, and by the time the military authorities were notified that he would return the 10-day period had been exceeded.

He is no longer a boy, of course. He was afflicted with tuberculosis, and went immediately to the hospital upon his return, and is now in very poor physical condition, with but a few months to live, because of the ravages of tuberculosis.

The Military Affairs Committee considered the case and thought it was a case where leniency should be shown. I believe under the circumstances the Senator should withdraw his objection and permit the bill to pass.

Mr. KING. What recommendation did the War Department make?

Mr. DUFFY. The War Department made no recommendation, saying that they had no authority to erase the record; that the correction had to be made by act of Congress.

Mr. KING. I withdraw objection to consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES T. MOORE

The bill (S. 724) for the relief of James T. Moore was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to summon James T. Moore, formerly chaplain with rank of first lieutenant of the Army of the United States, before a retiring board, to inquire whether at the time of his honorable discharge, December 22, 1922, he was incapacitated for active service, and whether such incapacity was the result of an incident of service, and upon the result of such inquiry the President is authorized to nominate and appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the said James T. Moore, a first lieutenant in the Corps of Chaplains and place him immediately thereafter upon the retired list of the Army, with the same privileges and retired pay as are now or may hereafter be provided by law or regulation for officers of the Regular Army: Provided, That the said James T. Moore shall not be entitled to any back pay or allowances.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2105) to provide for an additional number of cadets at the United States Military Academy was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

VELIE MOTORS CORPORATION

The bill (S. 708) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Velie Motors Corporation was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment, notwithstanding the lapse of time, or any statute of limitations, or any limitation upon the jurisdiction of such court with respect to claims upon any contract implied in law, upon the claim of the Velie Motor Corporation for reimbursement for net losses sustained by such corporation on account of the additional requirements imposed by the Government with respect to the crating of gun carts manufactured pursuant to a certain war contract (no. CMG–74, dated Oct. 25, 1917) with the Ordnance Department, United States Army, which requirements were not contemplated by such contract.

SEC. 2. Such claim shall be instituted by or on behalf of the Velie Motors Corporation within 1 year after the date of the enactment of this act. Proceedings in any suit before the Court of Claims under this act, and review thereof, and payment of any judgment therein, shall be had as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 925) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of William W. Danenhower was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF WAR MINERALS RELIEF STATUTES

The bill (S. 1432) to amend section 5 of the act of March 2, 1919, generally known as the "War Minerals Relief Statutes", was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in any claim that has heretofore been filed within the time and in the manner provided by the act approved March 2, 1919 (40 Stat. 1272), as amended, generally referred to as the "War Minerals Relief Statutes", in which the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia under the authority conferred upon said court by the act approved February 13, 1929 (45 Stat. 1166), has adjudged or decreed interest payments or obligations to be losses reimbursable within the meaning of the act of March 2, 1919 (40 Stat. 1272), as amended, the Secretary of the Interior shall open or reopen such claim and include in his adjustments and payments of losses, interest which has been paid or has accrued to the date of approval of this act: Provided, however, That such losses shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior as a matter of fact to be the result of a legal obligation incurred within the statutory period as provided in said act of March 2, 1919: And provided further, That the sum paid in satisfying said claims shall not exceed in total $1,250,000. It is also provided that all settlements under this act and pursuant to its provisions shall constitute full and complete discharge of all obligations of the United States accruing under the War Minerals Act and acts amendatory thereof.

BOWERS SOUTHERN DREDGING CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 794) for the relief of the Bowers Southern Dredging Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remit the liquidated damages of $5,400 assessed against the Bowers Southern Dredging Co. for delays caused by World War conditions in the performance of its contract no. 2665, dated November 17, 1917, with the Bureau of Yards and Docks, Navy Department, for dredging and filling certain areas at the naval air station, Miami, Fla., and to certify for payment to the said company, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,400, being the amount actually withheld as such liquidated damages from amounts otherwise due under the contract: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, this bill passed the Senate at the last session. If the Senator will turn to page 3 of the report, he will see that the Navy Department recommends favorable action on the bill. It seems that when this contract was let there was very great doubt as to the quantity of material to be dredged, and it appears from the report that the contractor dredged about 35 percent in excess of the total estimated quantity and a proportional increase in time for the completion of the work was granted; but there was not the full payment which should have been provided.

Mr. KING. I have turned to the report, and now find that there is no objection by the Secretary of the Navy, and I have no objection to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1817) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and render judgment on the claim of Squaw Island Freight Terminal Co., Inc., of Buffalo, N. Y., against the United States in respect of loss of property occasioned by the breaking of a Government dike on Squaw Island was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

STANDARD DREDGING CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 780) for the relief of the Standard Dredging Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments on page 1, line 7, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$3,362.50" and insert "$2,531.25", and on page 2, after line 3, to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Standard Dredging Co., owner of the dredge Long Beach and pipe line thereto attached, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,531.25, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to fully reimburse said owner of said dredge and pipe line for damages suffered for loss of earnings or fair rental value of its said dredging plant for the period operation of same was stopped as a result of a collision with its pipe line by the United States dredge Chinook, at Astoria, Oreg., May 1, 1916, under circumstances which were held after due investigation to have been such that the Government was responsible: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COHEN, GOLDMAN & CO., INC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1041) for the relief of Cohen, Goldman & Co., Inc., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Cohen, Goldman & Co., Inc., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $19,030.20, in full settlement of all claims against the Government growing out of contracts nos. 1325, 1625, 2299, 3220, and 4519N, and contracts supplementary thereto, for the manufacture during 1917 and 1918 of overcoats and uniforms for the United States Army: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill from the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], who reported it?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, this claim was considered by the Court of Claims upon a petition filed by the claimant. The merits of the claim are not disputed. It grew out of the promise of a bonus and also extra expenses in connection with some war contracts to furnish uniforms. The Court of Claims, I think, passed on it in 1930. The bill has been reported favorably and has been passed by the Senate once previously. The only question, I may say to the Senator from Tennessee, is the statute of limitations, and that is what the Government relied on in the Court of Claims. The sole question before us is whether we will waive the statute of limitations and pay the claim, as there is no doubt as to its validity.

Mr. McKELLAR. Did the Department recommend the bill?

Mr. LOGAN. No; the Department recommended against it on the ground of the limitation, although I might be mistaken about that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was that the only ground for holding against the claim?

Mr. LOGAN. That was the only point argued before the Court of Claims, so the Court of Claims says, and the only question, as I recall, pending there was whether the law barring this claim because of the lapse of time should be adhered to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1051) for the relief of the Western Union Telegraph Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Western Union Telegraph Co. the sum of $1,155.32 in full and final settlement of all claims against the Government for expenses incurred in repairing a Western Union cable which was picked up and cut by the Coast Guard cutter Pequot, January 22, 1931, in grappling for a United States submarine cable between Knight Key Harbor and Sombrero Key, Fla.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUIS FINGER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1073) for the relief of Louis Finger, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$2,347.30, as compensation" and insert "$1,347.48 in full settlement of all claims against the Government; and at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Louis Finger, of Cleveland, Ohio, the sum of $1,347.48 in full settlement of all claims against the Government for expenses incurred in the treatment of his minor daughter, Elsie Finger, who was injured in an accident involving a United States mail truck August 13, 1930: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WALTER MOTOR TRUCK CO., INC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1290) for the relief of Walter Motor Truck Co., Inc., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$12,950" and insert "$8,400", and at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Walter Motor Truck Co., Inc., the sum of $8,400 in full settlement for two motor trucks delivered to and used for 5 years by the United States Quartermaster Department, Motor Transport Corps, United States Army, Camp Holabird, Md., for which no payment has ever been made: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney, or attorneys on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ETHEL G. REMINGTON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1099) for the relief of Ethel G. Remington, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$250" and insert

"$200", and at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Ethel G. Remington the sum of $200, in full and final settlement of all claims against the Government for injuries sustained resulting from a collision involving United States Army truck numbered 429912 on May 27, 1934, near Hayden Lake, Idaho: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DOUGLAS B. ESPY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1548) for the relief of Douglas B. Espy, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments, on page 1, at the beginning of line 7, to strike out "$1,033" and insert "$743.50" in full settlement of all claims against the Government", and at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Douglas B. Espy, chief machinist's mate, United States Navy, the sum of $743.50 in full settlement of all claims against the Government for the loss of uniforms, clothing, and other personal property belonging to him and his wife, as a result of a fire in the quarters of the naval radio station, Cavite, P. I., on the 15th day of March 1927: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Washington whether the Department favors this bill.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes; the Department favors the bill. The only question was the question of the amount, and the committee took the amount which had been determined upon by the Naval Court of Claims. The Naval Court of Claims decided that they did not have jurisdiction over the case after they had determined the amount.

Mr. KING. The Senator is referring to the case of Douglas Espy?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes.

Mr. KING. The reason I made the inquiry is that several years ago the Senate, as I recall, declined to permit compensation for property which was destroyed by fire where there was no fault at all upon the part of the Government, even though the fire occurred at some post of the Government.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The committee considered that precise point, and it was the opinion of the committee, although it was a close point, that the damage was due to the fault of the Government in not providing proper quarters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLLIER MANUFACTURING CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1431) for the relief of the Collier Manufacturing Co., of Barnesville, Ga., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Collier Manufacturing Co., of Barnesville, Ga., the sum of $48,719.70 in full settlement of all claims against the Government for losses sustained by said Collier Manufacturing Co. on account of the manufacture of undershirts for the United States Army in the year 1918: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Kentucky for an explanation of the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] is more familiar with the bill than am I, and I will ask him to explain it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well. At the beginning, then, may I ask if the Department recommended this bill? My recollection is that it did not.

Mr. GEORGE. I am not able to answer that question.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand it did not, on the ground that the case had already been adjudicated.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I will make a brief explanation of the bill.

This is an old claim, one that grew out of the World War. It was first submitted to the War Department Contract Board which decided that the claimant was not entitled to relief because he was not a formal party to the contract; that is, that there was no contract with this claimant. Subsequently suit was brought in the Court of Claims, and that court found all the material facts going to the merits of the case in favor of the claimant, but decided the case adversely to the claimant upon the ground that the Collier Manufacturing Co. was not a party to the contract with the Government.

The contract was for the production of certain garments to be used by the Army during the war period. The merits of the case, so far as the loss is concerned, are not questioned; that is to say, the Court of Claims found with the claimant on every point that involved the actual merits of the claim.

The facts are these: The contract was made between the governmental agency on the one part and Clift & Goodrich, of New York. Clift & Goodrich were the selling agents of the Collier Manufacturing Co. The selling agents had already executed bond; they were already able to take the contract and go forward with it immediately, without the delay incident to the execution of a bond, and the approval of the sureties, and other arrangements. Clift & Goodrich, being the selling agents of the Collier Manufacturing Co., themselves made the contract, but the contract was to be executed by the Collier Manufacturing Co.; indeed, the contract provided that the goods were to be manufactured by the Collier Manufacturing Co. That company, however, was not a formal party to the contract; but it did reorganize its plant, put in new machinery, and actually produced the goods. The end of the war rapidly approaching, some excuse was found upon which the contract was canceled.

The cancelation was made with Clift & Goodrich, but they clearly had no legal right to put an end to the contract so far as the Collier Manufacturing Co., the real party to the contract, the party having the beneficial interest in the contract, was concerned. They did not undertake to do that, but they did consent to a formal cancelation of the contract at one time.

A similar bill has been before the Senate previously and passed in the last Congress. It did not pass the House. It seems to me this is a case where the Congress should afford relief, because the party beneficially interested, the real party involved, is not able to assert its claim in the Court of Claims, not being formally a party to the contract; that is to say, the Court of Claims based its decision squarely on the point that the contractual relation did not exist between the Collier Manufacturing Co. and the Government, but did exist between Clift & Goodrich and the Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall not object to the bill. I understand a similar bill heretofore passed the Senate and was discussed at that time.

Mr. GEORGE. That is true.

Mr. McKELLAR. I believe the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] made an elaborate statement about it, and if it was acceptable at that time I shall not object to it.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, let me call attention to one point which the Senator from Georgia overlooked. The Government knew of the arrangement between Clift & Goodrich and the Collier Manufacturing Co., and actually sent agents and representatives to supervise the work of the Collier Manufacturing Co.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Kentucky is quite correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEO JAMES M'COY

The bill (S. 881) for the relief of Leo James McCoy was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Navy Leo James McCoy shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the United States Navy on the 10th day of August 1924: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 875) for the relief of Michael F. Calnan was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2029) to authorize naval and Marine Corps service of any officers to be included in computing dates of retirement was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CARL LINDOW

The bill (H. R. 5032) for the relief of the dependents of Carl Lindow, known also as "Carl Lindo", was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon the widows, children, and/or dependent relatives of persons honorably discharged from the United States Army, Carl Lindow, known also as "Carl Lindo", shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged on August 9, 1864, as a corporal, Company H, One Hundred and Fifty-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry: Provided, That no pension, bounty, pay, or other emoluments shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

FRANK WHITE AND OTHERS

The bill (S. 1821) for the relief of Frank White and others was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow in the accounts of Frank White and H. T. Tate, former Treasurers of the United States; Guy F. Allen, former Acting Treasurer of the United States; and Robert G. Hilton, former Assistant Treasurer of the United States at Baltimore, Md., the sums of $34,899.70, $92.89, $362.42, and $126.67, respectively, representing unavailable funds, as set forth in House Document No. 342, Seventy-first Congress, first session.

WESTERN ELECTRIC CO., INC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 560) for the relief of the Western Electric Co., Inc., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Western Electric Co., Inc., the sum of $7,192.35, in full satisfaction for services and materials furnished the War Department in connection with a contract dated June 5, 1920, and for completing certain work in connection with subaqueous sound-ranging equipment for seacoast defenses: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. KING. I should like an explanation of the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, the bill is recommended by the Department, as I recall. My memory is that there was some contract with this concern about some subaqueous sound arrangement in Florida. There were some added expenses and losses growing out of the execution of the contract. My recollection is that the War Department, or the department having charge of the matter, recommended payment of some $9,000 in satisfaction of the entire claim. I believe it is satisfactory to everyone.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWIN C. JENNEY, RECEIVER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 908) for the relief of Edwin C. Jenney, receiver of the First National Bank of Newton, Mass., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Edwin C. Jenney, receiver of the First National Bank of Newton, Mass., the sum of $9,172.54, being interest which accrued under section 1090 of the Revised Statutes on the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of said bank for the period between the date of the filing of the transcript of judgment with the Secretary of the Treasury and the date when the order or mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States was issued to the Court of Claims upon the dismissal of the appeal in said case on motion of the United States, and payment of which amount is recommended by the Attorney General: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATE OF NEBRASKA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1864) for the relief of the State of Nebraska, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That notwithstanding the provisions of section 3646, as amended, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, the issue of a duplicate check is hereby authorized and directed, without the requirement of an indemnity bond, said check to be a duplicate of original check no. 15757, drawn by the disbursing clerk, Department of Agriculture, January 17, 1934, in favor of "State treasurer of Nebraska, trust fund", for $10,451.12 and lost, stolen, or miscarried in the mails.

Mr. KING. I should like an explanation of the bill.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, the bill merely authorizes the issuance of a duplicate check. On January 17, 1934, a check for $10,451.12 was issued to be expended as a part of the funds of the Department of Agriculture. The check was received at the State capitol, but in some mysterious way was lost or destroyed. The bill merely authorizes the issuance of a duplicate check, and the Department approves of that procedure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Claims.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POST OFFICE AND COURTHOUSE BUILDING, RUTLAND, VT.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 37) authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to settle and adjust the claims of subcontractors and materialmen for material and labor furnished in the construction of a post office and courthouse building at Rutland, Vt., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust on a pro rata basis in an amount not exceeding the unpaid balance, the claims of subcontractors and materialmen who furnished material and labor in the construction of a post office and courthouse building at Rutland, Vt., which work was completed by the National Surety Co., as surety on the performance bond before said surety company was placed in the hands of a rehabilitator appointed by the insurance department of the State of New York, and after the United States had terminated the right of the Brooklyn & Queens Screen Manufacturing Co., Inc., to proceed under contract no. T1SA–1755, dated June 25, 1931.

The Comptroller General of the United States shall pay the money without regard to any priorities the Government may claim against the National Surety Co. in other cases, and when the money shall so have been paid it shall be set aside for subcontractors, materialmen, and laborers who did the work or supplied material for this building with a view to paying their claims, if any: Provided, That no payment shall be made until 60 days from the passage of this act or until personal notice has been given all claimants for the filing of such claims.

And there is hereby made available from such appropriations not to exceed $19,138.18 for this purpose; payments so made shall be charged to the National Surety Co. in the adjustment of the accounts between said company and the United States: Provided, That before any allowance is made pursuant to the terms of this act, the liquidator of the National Surety Co. shall file with the Comptroller General written consent thereto.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was reported by the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON]. The author of the bill is the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND].

Mr. COPELAND. Let me invite attention to page 3 of the report, where the committee states:

More than 90 percent of this money is to be paid subcontractors and material men. Both the surety company and the Hegeman-Harris Co. are willing to comply with any requirements that may be imposed to guarantee such a disbursement of funds. In view of this fact there is not tenable objection to the passage of the bill.

That is the view of the committee.

At the top of page 5 of the report the Comptroller General States:

If it should be favorably considered for enactment, the bill should be amended.

The bill has been amended as suggested.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the Senator if there has ever been a previous adjustment of the claim in any way by any department?

Mr. COPELAND. No. There was always a dispute about whether the Government was liable. The committee went into the matter very extensively last year when we passed on identical bills.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, a similar bill passed the Senate last year?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether or not there has been a settlement made and an acceptance of what has been offered?

Mr. COPELAND. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. This is not an additional claim?

Mr. COPELAND. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMERGENCY CONSERVATION WORK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 82) to authorize the disposal of surplus personal property, including buildings, of the Emergency Conservation Work, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, on page 1, in line 10, after the word "that", to insert the words "upon the recommendation of the department under which the technical work of the camp was organized and supervised", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Director of Procurement, United States Treasury Department, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to Federal agencies, either permanent or emergency, personal property which is no longer required for use by the Emergency Conservation Work, including equipment, tools, materials, and buildings, when so declared surplus by the Director of the Emergency Conservation Work: Provided, That upon the recommendation of the Department under which the technical work of the camp was organized and supervised any such surplus property that is not desired by any Federal agency may be transferred without cost, except for expenses incident to transfer, to the forestry, park, conservation, or educational departments of the States, or to counties or municipalities, or to organizations engaged in the promotion of education, recreation, and/or health.

SEC. 2. Surplus property of the Emergency Conservation Work not required to serve any of the above purposes will be disposed of by the Director of Procurement through sale or in any other manner he may direct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FINAL PROOF BY HOMESTEAD ENTRYMAN

The bill (S. 1065) to further extend the period of time during which final proof may be offered by homestead entryman was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to extend the period of time during which final proof may be offered by homestead entrymen", approved May 13, 1932, as amended, is amended by striking out "December 31, 1934" and inserting in lieu thereof "December 31, 1935."

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to further extend the period of time during which final proof may be offered by homestead and desert land entrymen."

RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 74) to investigate the public and official conduct of James A. Farley was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it will be recalled that an adverse report was submitted from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. I ask that the resolution be voted down.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, just a minute. Let us have a little discussion of this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized under the rule.

Mr. LONG. If the Senate please, I hardly suppose our discussion can be concluded in 5 minutes. Under the rule of the Senate we would have only 5 minutes for discussion of the resolution. Of course I want to discuss the matter longer than 5 minutes. I take it the Senator from Tennessee will require a little more than 5 minutes explaining the matter by the time I get through discussing it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am willing to vote on it without any discussion.

Mr. LONG. When the time comes, I want to tear to pieces, limb by limb, the report filed by the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator can do that in 5 minutes.

Mr. LONG. The Senator from Tennessee may do one of two things. He may either say he will not object to the resolution being adopted or he may object. That is his prerogative.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not objected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LOGAN. I ask that the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

LOUIS ZAGATA

The bill (H. R. 340) for the relief of Louis Zagata was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CARL L. BERNAU

The bill (H. R. 2678) for the relief of Carl L. Bernau was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS F. COONEY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2205) for the relief of Thomas F. Cooney, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$4,000" and insert "$2,000", and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000 to Thomas F. Cooney, of Las Cruces, N. Mex., in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for damages for injuries sustained on the stairs in the Federal Building, Portland, Oreg.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2119) for the relief of Amos D. Carver, S. E. Turner, Clifford N. Carver, Scott Blanchard, P. B. Blanchard, James B. Parse, A. N. Blanchard, and W. A. Blanchard, and/or the widows of such of them as may be deceased was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. May we have an explanation of the bill? [A pause.] Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, OMAHA, NEBR.

The bill (S. 1987) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebr., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebr., authorized to be built by the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees by an act of Congress approved June 10, 1930, heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved February 20, 1931, June 9, 1932, February 24, 1933, and March 5, 1934, are hereby further extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from June 10, 1935.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, ST. LOUIS, MO.

The bill (S. 1855) to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act authorizing H. C. Brenner Realty & Finance Corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near a point between Cherokee and Osage Streets, St. Louis, Mo.", approved February 13, 1931, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act authorizing H. C. Brenner Realty & Finance Corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near a point between Cherokee and Osage Streets, St. Louis, Mo.", approved on February 13, 1931, be, and the same is hereby, revived and reenacted: Provided, That the construction herein authorized be commenced within 1 year and completed within 3 years from the date of the approval of this act.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

THOMAS G. CARLIN

The bill (S. 1410) for the relief of Thomas G. Carlin was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to summon Thomas G. Carlin, formerly captain in the Army of the United States, before a retiring board to inquire whether at the time of his resignation from the Regular Army he was incapacitated for active service, and whether such incapacity was a result of an incident of service, and if, as a result of such inquiry it is found that he was so incapacitated, the President is authorized to nominate said Thomas G. Carlin, a captain in the Regular Army and place him immediately thereafter upon the retired list of the Army, with the same privileges and retired pay as are now or may hereafter be provided by law or regulation for officers of the Regular Army: Provided, That the said Thomas G. Carlin shall not be entitled to any back pay or allowance.

ESTATES OF ABSENTEES AND ABSCONDERS IN THE DISTRICT

The bill (H. R. 83) to provide for the conservation and settlement of estates of absentees and absconders in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this seems to be quite an important bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the bill is less formidable than it appears to be. Persons abscond leaving obligations here and leaving their families, and the bill merely provides for proper and legal disposition of their estates. It has the unanimous support of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the unanimous support of the District Commissioners.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHANGE OF DESIGNATION OF LEFFLER PLACE TO SECOND PLACE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4538) to change the designation of Leffler Place to Second Place, which was read.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the bill? What does it mean?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this bill is an illustration of the necessity of conferring upon the District Commissioners authority in addition to that which they now possess; and from time to time we have attempted to secure legislation giving to them additional authority. This is a case where the Commissioners and the people of the District desire the name of a certain street changed, and it is necessary to come to Congress in order to secure legislation permitting it to be done.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRINITY COLLEGE, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3477) relating to the incorporation of Trinity College of Washington, D. C., organized under and by virtue of a certificate of incorporation pursuant to the incorporation laws of the District of Columbia, as provided in subchapter 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws of the District of Columbia, which was read.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this bill is another illustration of the importance of having a general incorporation act in the District of Columbia. A number of years ago, because there was no law of that character, many of these corporations had to obtain special charters, and now they cannot amend them unless they come to Congress. If they desire to increase or diminish the number of directors, they cannot do so without a special act of Congress.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1162) to regulate the business of making small loans in the District of Columbia and to amend an act to regulate the business of loaning money, etc., approved February 4, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I shall have to ask the Senator from Utah to explain that bill.

Mr. KING. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] is out of the city on account of a death in his family. He has requested me to ask that the bill go over in his absence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HAMPTON & BRANCHVILLE RAILROAD CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1024) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Hampton & Branchville Railroad Co., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Hampton & Branchville Railroad Co., of Hampton, S. C., against the United States for the sum of $4,306.51, representing the amount of a judgment recovered by the United States from such company by virtue of a certain guaranty contract between such company and the United States entered into in accordance with the provisions of section 209 of the Transportation Act, 1920, and such additional sum as may be found to be due by the United States to such company as a result of such contract.

SEC. 2. The Court of Claims is authorized and directed to make such detailed examination of the accounts of such company as may be necessary in order to ascertain the amount, if any, due such company by the United States by virtue of such contract.

SEC. 3. Such claim may be instituted at any time within 6 months after the enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations. Proceedings in any suit brought in the Court of Claims under this act, appeals therefrom, and payment of any judgment therein shall be had as in the case of claims over which court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, this bill passed the Senate last year. During the time the Government had charge of the railroads some difference as to bookkeeping arose, and no objection was then offered to the course that was taken. It is necessary for this claim to be settled in order to do justice to both parties.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 509) to prevent the use of Federal offices or patronage in elections and to prohibit Federal officeholders from misuse of positions of public trust for private and partisan ends was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS IN THE NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT

The bill (S. 1210) authorizing certain officials under the Naval Establishment to administer oaths was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That chief clerks and inspectors attached to the office of inspectors of naval material, chief clerks attached to field services under the Naval Establishment and to navy yards, naval stations, and Marine Corps posts and stations, and such other clerks and employees attached to offices of inspectors of naval material, field services, naval stations, navy yards, and Marine Corps posts and stations as may be designated by the Secretary of the Navy are authorized to administer any oath required or authorized by any law of the United States, or regulation promulgated thereunder, relating to any claim against or application to the United States of officers and employees under the Naval Establishment; said persons so authorized to administer the aforesaid oaths are also authorized to administer oaths of office to officers and employees under the Naval Establishment, but no compensation or fee shall be demanded or accepted for administering any such oath or oaths.

UNAUTHORIZED WEARING, ETC., OF NAVAL MEDALS AND BADGES

The bill (S. 1606) to prohibit the unauthorized wearing, manufacture, or sale of medals and badges issued by the Navy Department was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who knowingly wears, manufactures, or sells any decoration or medal authorized by the Congress for the naval forces of the United States, any service medal or badge awarded by the Navy Department, any ribbon, button, or rosette of any of the said medals, badges, or decorations issued by the Secretary of the Navy, or any colorable imitation of any of them, except when authorized to do so under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $250 or imprisoned not longer than 6 months, or both.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS BY NAVAL AND MARINE OFFICERS

The bill (S. 93) to authorize certain officers of the Navy and Marine Corps to administer oaths was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in places beyond the continental limits of the United States where the Navy or Marine Corps is serving, such officers of the Navy or Marine Corps as are authorized to administer oaths for the purposes of the administration of naval justice and for other purposes of naval administration shall have the general powers of a notary public or of a consul of the United States in the administration of oaths, the execution and acknowledgment of legal instruments, the attestation of documents, and the performance of all other notarial acts.

H. KAMINSKI & CO. ET AL.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 538) for the relief of H. Kaminski & Co., Kaminski Hardware Co., and the Carolina Hardware Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 2, line 3, after the word "limitations", to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions and limitations of the revenue laws relating to refunds of overpayments of taxes, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to receive and consider the claims for refund of overpayment of income and excess-profits taxes assessed for the years 1917 and 1918 against (1) H. Kaminski & Co., a partnership; (2) Kaminski Hardware Co., a partnership; and (3) the Carolina Hardware Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of South Carolina, all of Georgetown, S. C., which claims were disallowed for failure to file within the statutory period of limitations: Provided, That in considering the claims for refund of overpayment of income and excess-profits taxes assessed for the years 1917 and 1918 the Secretary of the Treasury shall take into consideration any offset or collection of any tax found to be due from any of the concerns on the basis of a consolidated return. Such claims may be instituted within 6 months after the date of enactment of this act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] to explain this bill?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], who introduced the bill, perhaps understands it better than I do, although I think I could explain it if he were not present.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, this bill arises out of the payment of taxes by H. Kaminski & Co., a partnership; the Kaminski Hardware Co., a partnership; and the Carolina Hardware Co., a corporation. The Treasury Department states that there was an overassessment of taxes. They take the position, however, that the claim was filed too late, and that it is barred by the statute of limitations.

That is a correct statement, in that the formal claim was filed too late. The taxpayer has shown to the committee that he was in correspondence with the Bureau of Internal Revenue of the Treasury Department, that he was advised from time to time that the claim for repayment was under consideration, and, because he was so advised, he did not make formal claim. He considered that his request for payment was sufficient claim.

The bill does not involve a large sum of money—some seven or eight hundred dollars, as I recall. I submit to the Senator from Tennessee that where the Treasury Department states there has been an overassessment, and it is admitted that the taxpayer was corresponding with the Department with reference to the claim, even though the formal claim was not filed until after the statute had run, the United States Government does not desire to take from the taxpayer money to which the Treasury says he is rightfully entitled.

Mr. McKELLAR. But the Treasury Department reports the bill unfavorably.

Mr. BYRNES. It reports the bill unfavorably, as the Senator will see if he will read the letter of the Department, solely because of the fact that the claim was filed after the time for filing claims had expired; and the Treasury told the taxpayer it must come and seek special relief because, under the law, they did not have the right to grant it.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is also stated in the report that this case is no different from many, many other cases of a similar kind, so that this would be an open invitation to file many other claims; would it not?

Mr. BYRNES. If that were true, I should be disposed to agree with the Senator; but if the Senator will read the statement in the report he will see that this claim is unlike others, in that the taxpayer was continuously corresponding with the Department and making a claim informally, as the Department says, for a refund of the taxes. Therefore, it is not like the other cases where no claim at all has been made. The taxpayer was misled into believing that he had filed a sufficient claim.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from South Carolina has explained what I had in mind. I may say to the Senator from Tennessee that there is the following difference between this and many similar claims:

These people were trying to have their taxes adjusted through the Bureau of Internal Revenue. Correspondence about the matter had been carried on for several years, perhaps 7 or 8 years; it may not have been that long. I do not recall the exact length of time. The taxpayers thought the matter would be adjusted through the Bureau of Internal Revenue. Then it dawned upon them—someone advised them to that effect—that they ought to file a formal request for a refund. When they filed the request, the Bureau of Internal Revenue ceased to consider the claim, and pleaded the statute of limitations, when they had been treating with the taxpayers all the time for the purpose of making an adjustment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall not object to the consideration of the bill, but I think the precedent is a very bad one, because if we start in to relieve every taxpayer from the statute of limitations the consequences may be imagined.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE N. R. A.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, there is pending before the Supreme Court of the United States a case involving the constitutionality of the N. R. A. Some man running a plant down in Alabama refused to pay any attention to the N. R. A. He defied every law on the books containing an N. R. A. provision. He respected none of the hours and none of the wages or other regulations prescribed by the N. R. A. They finally tried to compromise with this man from Alabama, I am told, and he would not compromise, so they arrested him, and in court he would not make any defense at all except that the act was unconstitutional.

The case is set for hearing on Monday in the Supreme Court of the United States, I am told; and now the Government representatives have suddenly dismissed the case, or have arranged to dismiss it, so that the Supreme Court cannot pass on the N. R. A. They have turned the man loose, scotfree, in order to keep the Supreme Court from passing on this nefarious legislation.

I knew the N. R. A. Act was unconstitutional, and the representatives of the Government know it is unconstitutional, absurd, ridiculous, and preposterous. The disgraceful thing about it is that a man who has been allowed to tell the N. R. A. officials where to go, and what they could do if they did not like it, is haled into court and his case is put on the docket, and now they go in and withdraw the case in order to keep the Supreme Court of the United States from adjudicating the N. R. A. Act unconstitutional, as they know it ought to be adjudicated.

So I want the Senate to take notice that apparently the authorities feel that the old blue eagle, or blue buzzard, or whatever they call the fluttering outfit, can be kept alive around here on this bulldozing system of browbeating and bulldozing the little 2-by-10 man around the country who may not have a lawyer or enough money to go to court. They shoot in a bureaucrat there and hand a dictionary to the man to read, and threaten to put him in the penitentiary, and he does not know whether he is coming or going.

If this kind of business is to go on, I intend to publish to the United States, at least so far as Louisiana is concerned, that other persons should pay just exactly the same attention to the N. R. A. as the man in Alabama paid to it. I expect to do just what he did if that is to be the course of the Department of Justice. I think we all ought to go out and tell our people to follow the example of the man in Alabama, to pay no attention to the N. R. A., and when the time comes that the Court has to adjudicate on the constitutionality of the act you can depend upon it that they will ask to have the case withdrawn to keep the Court from passing on it.

Before I sit down I will make two bites out of the cherry, if I have a minute left of my 5 minutes.

I am informed that the C. C. C. camp reports show that it is costing $1,200 per year per man in the C. C. C. camps, $100 a month for the sapling-planters of the United States. That is a marvelous showing, in view of the fact that the conference committee struck out the $40,000,000 amendment dealing with education to the work-relief joint resolution. In other words, they could not spare about $8 or $10 a month, or a hundred dollars a year, for education for a man, but they can spend $1,200 a year to fool around with a sapling camp among the red bugs and black flies and other insects!

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken about that. When the conference report comes before the Senate, he will find that the teachers are taken care of in the joint resolution.

Mr. LONG. My understanding is that the conferees struck out our $40,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. We struck out the language you used.

Mr. LONG. It is not my language, but the language of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING].

Mr. McKELLAR. But we used other language which will be much more effective.

Mr. LONG. I assume it will be much more effective. It always is. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee to Senate bill 538.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROCKY BOY INDIAN RESERVATION

The bill (S. 613) to add certain public-domain land in Montana to the Rocky Boy Indian Reservation was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That approximately 557 acres of public-domain land in the State of Montana, described as lots 2, 4, 6, and 8, section 25; lots 2, 4, 6, and 8, section 26; lots 2, 4, 6, and 8, section 27; lots 2, 3, and 4, section 28; lot 5, section 29, township 28 north, range 15 east; lots 2, 4, 6, and 8, section 27; lots 2, 4, 6, and 8, section 28; lots 2, 4, 6, and 8, section 29, lots 5, 7, 9, and 11, section 30, township 28 north, range 16 east, of the Montana meridian, in Montana, be, and the same are hereby, withdrawn from the public domain and added to the Rocky Boy Indian Reservation: Provided, That the rights and claims of bona fide settlers initiated under the public-land laws prior to January 6, 1934, shall not be affected by this act.

KANOSH BAND OF INDIANS

The bill (S. 380) to reserve 80 acres on the public domain for the use and benefit of the Kanosh Band of Indians in the State of Utah was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the west half southwest quarter section 10, township 23 south, range 5 west, Salt Lake meridian, Utah, be, and the same is hereby, reserved for the sole use and occupancy of the Kanosh Band of Indians of Utah: Provided, That the rights and claims of any bona fide settler initiated under the public-land laws prior to the approval hereof shall not be affected by this act.

OMAHA AND WINNEBAGO INDIANS, NEBRASKA

The bill (S. 612) for the benefit of the Omaha and Winnebago Indians of Nebraska was announced as next in order.

Mr. NORRIS. Let that bill go over.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the bill which has just been called relates to an Indian situation in Nebraska. The bill proposes to take some land, which is now on the tax roll, and place it within an Indian reservation, where the land will become nontaxable.

When the bill was reported it had the approval of the Indian Office and the Department of the Interior. It was understood when it was reported that if the Senators from Nebraska, or the Member of the House representing the particular district, had objection, the objection would be observed, and inasmuch as the senior Senator from Nebraska has objected, it is entirely proper that the bill should go over. Personally I will not call the bill up until and unless the Senator shall give his consent.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his assurance. I am not certain that I will be opposed to the bill after I have looked into the facts. However, I am personally familiar with the county in which one of these reservations is situated, and, as I remember, a great deal of the land of the county being in the reservation the taxation question is very serious. But, as I have said, I want to look into the matter and to consult my colleague about it. It is in a part of the State near where my colleague resides, and after I have conferred with him I shall be glad to take the matter up with the Senator from Oklahoma and let him know the result of our deliberations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been heard, the bill will be passed over.

SEMINOLE INDIAN LANDS, FLORIDA

The bill (S. 654) authorizing the exchange of the lands reserved for the Seminole Indians in Florida for other lands, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to exchange lands in the State of Florida reserved for the Seminole Indians by Executive order of June 28, 1911, or purchased for said Indians, or any part thereof, for lands owned by the State of Florida. Upon conveyance to the United States by the State of Florida of a sufficient title to the lands to be acquired for the use of the Seminole Indians, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to issue a patent in fee or to make other proper conveyance to the State of Florida covering the lands granted in exchange.

GRAZING RESERVE FOR INDIANS IN NEVADA AND OREGON

The bill (S. 1142) to reserve certain public-domain lands in Nevada and Oregon as a grazing reserve for Indians of Fort McDermitt, Nev., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That public-domain lands in the States of Nevada and Oregon described as lots 3, 4, and west half lot 5 of section 1; lots 1 to 9, inclusive; west half lot 10 and north half southwest quarter section 2; lots 1 to 10, inclusive, and south half section 3; lots 1 to 10, inclusive, and southeast quarter section 4; lots 1 to 4, inclusive, and lots 8, 10, 11, and 12 of section 5; north half northeast quarter section 9; north half northwest quarter and northwest quarter northeast quarter section 10, township 47, north, range 39 east, of the Mount Diablo meridian, Nevada; and southeast quarter section 20; west half southeast quarter and southeast quarter southeast quarter section 21; south half section 22; northwest quarter, southeast quarter and south half southwest quarter section 26; west half southeast quarter, west half northeast quarter and northeast quarter northeast quarter section 27; all of section 28; east half and southwest quarter section 29; all of sections 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, and southwest quarter section 36, of township 40 south, range 44 east; and all of sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, west half, northeast quarter, north half southeast quarter and southwest quarter southeast quarter section 12; west half section 13; all of sections 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and fractional sections 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and west half of fractional section 24 of township 41 south, range 44 east, of the Willamette meridian, in Oregon, containing approximately 21,500 acres, be, and the same are hereby, withdrawn from the public domain and reserved for the use and occupancy of Indians of the former Fort McDermitt Military Reserve, Nev.: Provided, That the rights and claims of bona fide settlers initiated under the public-land laws prior to July 7, 1933, shall not be affected by this act.

ROBERT D. BALDWIN

The bill (S. 1498) for the relief of Robert D. Baldwin was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of Robert D. Baldwin, superintendent and special disbursing agent of the Haskell Institute, at Lawrence, Kans., for an expenditure of $1,359.26 made in October 1931 and paid from the appropriation for Indian boarding schools, fiscal year 1932.

ROBERT J. ENOCHS

The bill (S. 1499) for the relief of Robert J. Enochs was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of Dr. Robert J. Enochs, former superintendent and special agent of the Choctaw Indian Agency, Philadelphia, Miss., for an expenditure of $80.07 made in January 1932 for shoes, and paid from the appropriation "Support of Indians and Administration of Indian Property, 1932."

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1502) for the relief of Charles L. Graves, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to allow credit in the accounts of Charles L. Graves, superintendent and special disbursing agent at Jicarilla Agency, N. Mex., for payments aggregating $51,277, made from tribal funds of the Jicarilla Indians to various persons in connection with the purchase of sheep for issue to various members of the tribe, to which payments exception was taken by the General Accounting Office for the reason as claimed that there was no authority of law therefor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Oklahoma explain this bill? It seems to be a complicated matter.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the bills we have just passed, and the ones immediately to follow, are bills which have been investigated by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and are recommended by that Bureau. They have the approval of the Budget Bureau where such approval is necessary.

It seems that in this particular case a new Indian agent taking jurisdiction of an Indian reservation was not familiar with some of the routine necessary in the transaction of business. The particular agent involved spent some money in the purchase of feed. The authorization was entirely proper, but it did not comply with the rules and regulations of the Comptroller's Office.

The office of the Interior Department advises that everything was regular, save that the proper procedure was not followed; that no money was misapplied or misappropriated. The result would have been just the same had the agent followed the rules and regulations laid down by the Comptroller's Office. The bill is only for the purpose of correcting the record.

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not appropriate money further than to make the original authorization good?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It merely corrects the record, and involves the appropriation of no money whatever.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES E. DAGENETT

The bill (S. 1520) for the relief of Charles E. Dagenett was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the General Accounting Office is hereby authorized to credit the accounts of Charles E. Dagenett, supervisor of Indian employment and special disbursing officer (retired), in the sum of $125.56, representing funds expended by him in that sum for telephone tolls, lodging, traveling expenses, etc., for himself and others in connection with work under his supervision.

SHOALWATER INDIAN RESERVATION, WASH.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1814) to authorize the creation of an Indian village within the Shoalwater Indian Reservation, Wash., and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to reserve and set aside for Indian village purposes, and to survey and plat into village blocks, lots, streets, and alleys, a suitable area of land within the Shoalwater (Georgetown) Reservation in Washington. The lots shall be subject to assignment by the superintendent or other officer in charge of the Shoalwater Reservation, under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to qualified Indians for use and occupancy only.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to expend so much of the $15,150 derived from the sale of timber on the reservation and now carried in "special deposits" to the credit of the superintendent of the Taholah Agency, as may be needed to carry out the provisions of section 1 of this act and to assist the Indians who receive lots, in developing the village and building homes therein, including the construction of such water, sewer, and fire-protection facilities as may be practicable: Provided, That the balance of said funds remaining unexpended after development of the village may be used in promoting the health and the educational and industrial welfare of the Indians living therein.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as I understand it, this bill has the recommendation of the Department.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It has. All the bills reported by the committee have the recommendation of the Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for the third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

ZUNI INDIAN RESERVATION, N. MEX.

The bill (S. 1831) transferring certain national-forest lands to the Zuni Indian Reservation, N. Mex., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the lands in townships 8 and 9 north, ranges 16 and 17 west, of the New Mexico principal meridian, New Mexico, comprising the Miller Division of the Cibola National Forest, are hereby eliminated from the Cibola National Forest and withdrawn as an addition to the Zuni Indian Reservation, subject to any valid existing rights of any persons thereto.

SENECA NATION OF INDIANS

The bill (S. 1942) to repeal the act entitled "An act to grant to the State of New York and the Seneca Nation of Indians jurisdiction over the taking of fish and game within the Allegany, Cattaraugus, and Oil Spring Indian Reservations", approved January 5, 1927, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to grant to the State of New York and the Seneca Nation of Indians jurisdiction over the taking of fish and game within the Allegany, Cattaraugus, and Oil Spring Indian Reservations", approved January 5, 1927 (44 Stat. L. 932), is hereby repealed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1476) to provide for unemployment relief through development of mineral resources; to assist the development of privately owned mineral claims; to provide for the development of emergency and deficiency minerals; and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ESTATE OF JOSEPH GAYTON

The bill (S. 1414) for the relief of the rightful heir of Joseph Gayton, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Jean Marcella Mentz Gayton (now Wicks), the rightful heir of Joseph Gayton, deceased Sioux allottee no. 1724 of the Standing Rock Agency in North Dakota, as determined by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to existing law, the sum of not to exceed $4,400.25: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may deposit the said sum to the credit of the said heir and handle it in the same manner as other individual Indian moneys: Provided further, That not to exceed 5 percent of this amount shall be paid to any attorney or attorneys for services rendered in this case: And provided further, That should the person herein named be not living upon the date of the passage of this act the said sum shall be credited to and become a part of her estate.

MRS. GUY A. M'CONOHA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 951) for the relief of Mrs. Guy A. McConoha, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to add a proviso at the end of the bill so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Guy A. McConoha, of Poplar, Mont., the sum of $425.50 in full satisfaction of all claims of such Mrs. Guy A. McConoha against the United States resulting from the loss sustained by her when dispossessed by the Government of a certain Ford automobile purchased with a like sum by the said Mrs. Guy A. McConoha, such automobile, without her knowledge, having been previously forfeited to the United States under the Internal Revenue laws and laws relating to the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among the Indians: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELSIE SEGAR

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2218) for the relief of Elsie Segar, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$4,700" and to insert in lieu thereof "$1,200"; on page 2, line 5, to strike out "$1,955" and to insert in lieu thereof "$800" and to insert a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Elsie Segar, administratrix of C. M. A. Sorensen, the sum of $1,200 for loss on September 1, 1924, of a boathouse, engine parts, tools, electric fittings, marine supplies, and clothing belonging to C. M. A. Sorensen, at Bayou St. John, city of New Orleans, La., while said boathouse was being used by and in the sole occupancy of Government prohibition agents, pursuant to rental privileges granted by C. M. A. Sorensen to prohibition agents of the United States Government, at New Orleans, La.; and to Holger E. Sorensen, the son of C. M. A. Sorensen, the sum of $800 for loss to Holger E. Sorensen of personal property and belongings in the said boathouse at the time of said boathouse destruction: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this Act, in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARRY LAYMAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 276) for the relief of Harry Layman, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "$5,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$1,000"; on line 6, after the word "Ohio", to strike out the words "as damages" and to insert the words "in full settlement of all claims against the Government"; and to insert a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000 to Harry Layman, of Cincinnati, Ohio, in full settlement of all claims against the Government for injuries incurred while working in the military stone quarry at the United States penitentiary annex, Fort Leavenworth, Kans.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELTON FIRTH

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 728) for the relief of Elton Firth, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "$5,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$1,000"; and on line 9, after the date "1931", to insert the words "and that Elton Firth shall be admitted to such naval hospital as may be directed by the Chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery of the Navy Department for necessary care and treatment: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding "$1,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Elton Firth, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000 in full payment of personal injuries sustained as a result of the explosion of a bomb dropped by a United States naval airplane near Plum Tree Point, York County, Va., on November 11, 1931, and that Elton Firth shall be admitted to such naval hospital as may be directed by the Chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery of the Navy Department for necessary care and treatment: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GUY CLATTERBUCK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1872) for the relief of Guy Clatterbuck, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to insert a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $35 to Guy Clatterbuck, a forest ranger employed on the Flathead National Forest, State of Montana, in payment for a horse which was lost during a forest fire in said national forest: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, is there a favorable report from the Department on this bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that there is a favorable report.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CARL C. CHRISTENSEN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1566) for the relief of Carl C. Christensen, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$7,500" and to insert in lieu thereof "$3,500", and to insert a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Carl C. Christensen, of Spider Lake, Vilas County, Wis., the sum of $3,500, in full satisfaction of all claims of said Carl C. Christensen against the United States for damages resulting from personal injuries sustained by him on April 22, 1934, when shot by one Lester M. Gillis (alias Baby Face Nelson), while assisting two agents of the Department of Justice, Division of Investigation, in their endeavor to apprehend one John Dillinger and his associates: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, for the sake of the RECORD, let me say that the last bill passed arose out of the unpleasant visit our State received from "Baby Face" Nelson and John Dillinger. I want the RECORD to show that the amendment which has been added with reference to attorneys' fees is merely a matter of routine by the committee; that no attorneys have been connected with the presentation of the case.

A large number of people in northern Wisconsin were very much interested in seeing some financial relief given to the man who is the beneficiary under the bill, who was assisting the Federal officers at the time he was injured. It is only a matter of procedure for the committee to insert the provision that there shall not be an attorney's fee of over a certain percentage. As a matter of fact, no attorneys have been connected with the presentation of the bill.

JOHN MULHERN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 814) for the relief of John Mulhern, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 3, to strike out the words "That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for payment by the Secretary of the Treasury to John Mulhern, or his legal representatives," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John Mulhern, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated" and to insert a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John Mulhern, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $202, as full compensation for a gasoline tank, gasoline pump, and 105 gallons of gasoline, destroyed on March 11, 1934, by fire caused by pupils of the Truxton Canon Indian School, Valentine, Ariz.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PERTH AMBOY, N. J.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 156) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the city of Perth Amboy, N. J., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the city of Perth Amboy, N. J., for the recovery of money expended in 1918 by the city of Perth Amboy pursuant to an alleged agreement with the United States to extend the city's water system for the purpose of supplying water to the Raritan Arsenal and Colonial Base Hospital, No. 2, less the present estimated value of the equipment installed under such agreement.

SEC. 2. Suit upon such claim may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations, except that said city shall be required to give sufficient assurance to the United States that it will preserve the facilities for furnishing water on account of which this claim is made and will not destroy or render them unfit for use except with the consent of the Secretary of War. Proceedings for the determination of such claim, and appeals from, and payment of any judgment thereon shall be in the same manner as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will not the Senator from New Jersey state the nature of this bill?

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, the circumstances in connection with the claim covered by the bill briefly are as follows: A considerable sum of money was spent by the city of Perth Amboy, N. J., in 1918, for the purpose of supplying water to the Raritan Arsenal and Colonial Base Hospital, No. 2. The city has endeavored in many ways to have its rights determined and to adjust the matter. The committee recommends that the city be given an opportunity to bring its case before the Court of Claims.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for the third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

CONSOLIDATED ASHCROFT HANCOCK CO., INC., BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 208) for the relief of the Consolidated Ashcroft Hancock Co., Inc., Bridgeport, Conn., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claim of the Consolidated Ashcroft Hancock Co., Inc., for an amount not exceeding $1,705.98 as liquidated damages deducted by the Navy Department in making payments under contract no. 28225, dated August 23, 1932, for certain valves when the contractor was delayed in the completion of delivery for the reason that valves superior to contract requirements were developed and delivered by the contractor. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum not to exceed $1,705.98 for payment of the claim: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per centum thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per centum thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS GROWING OUT OF CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS ACTIVITIES

The bill (S. 553) to authorize the settlement of individual claims for personal property lost or damaged arising out of the activities of the Civilian Conservation Corps, which have been approved by the Secretary of War, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, doubtless some compensation should be paid because of the torts committed by some of the members of the C. C. C. camps, but it seems to me that there ought not to be a direct appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States for that purpose; that settlement ought to come from money allocated to the Civilian Conservation Corps. If the members of that corps commit torts and enter into contracts, and then persons who are injured are compelled to come to Congress, and we make a direct appropriation out of the Treasury, whereas if they are entitled to compensation, it ought to come out of the C. C. C. appropriation or authorization, we shall doubtless be besieged by many, many persons coming here for compensation.

I shall object to the consideration of this bill only for the purpose of seeing if we cannot work out some plan which will be just, because I know there will be a multitude of claims presented to Congress for alleged misdemeanors and torts committed by C. C. C. members.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the Senator's suggestion is a valuable one; and I shall see that it is considered by the Department and also by the proper committee.

Mr. KING. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

COL. WILLIAM L. KELLER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2024) to give proper recognition to the distinguished services of Col. William L. Keller, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I approve that bill very, very highly. I hope it will pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 1, after the word "Columbia", it is proposed to insert "Provided, That such designation shall be subject to the said Col. William L. Keller's acceptance and terminable at his pleasure."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The action proposed is in recognition of the outstanding service of one of the outstanding surgeons of the world, and it seems to me the Senate would do well to pass the bill unanimously.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in recognition of the outstanding service and contribution made to the science of medicine and surgery by Col. William L. Keller, Medical Corps, United States Army, and to provide that his mature professional judgment and long experience may continue to remain available to the public service, the President is hereby authorized to designate the said Col. William L. Keller, upon his retirement from the active list, as consultant in surgery at the United States Army Medical Center (Walter Reed Hospital), Washington, D. C.: Provided, That such designation shall be subject to the said Col. William L. Keller's acceptance and terminable at his pleasure; and it is further provided that he shall be entitled to the full active-duty pay and allowances of the grade held by him at the time of his retirement.

Mr. SHEPPARD subsequently said: Mr. President, in connection with the Senate bill 2024, referring to Col. William L. Keller, I ask that the report of the committee be set out in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report (No. 333) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2024) to give proper recognition to the distinguished services of Col. William L. Keller, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with a recommendation that it do pass, amended as follows:

Line 12, following the word "Columbia"; including the semicolon, insert the following:

"Provided, That such designation shall be subject to the said Col. William L. Keller's acceptance and terminable at his pleasure."

This measure authorizes the President to designate Col. William L. Keller, upon his retirement from the active list, as consultant in surgery at the United States Army Medical Center (Walter Reed Hospital), Washington, D. C. The purpose of this proposed action is to recognize in a fitting way the outstanding service and contribution made to the science of medicine and surgery by Colonel Keller, Medical Corps, United States Army, and it is also to make available his mature professional judgment and long experience to the public service after the statutory date of his retirement is reached.

The War Department approves the enactment of this bill. In its report, the Department points out that in the general case it is opposed to the enactment of preferential legislation or legislation seeking to continue on the active list persons who have attained the statutory retirement age, but the Department correctly adds that this bill does not seek to continue Colonel Keller on the active list, but it seeks to place him in an office not now existent under the Department, with the active-duty pay and allowances of the grade held by him at the time of his retirement.

Your committee feels that this measure is most meritorious. Inasmuch as Colonel Keller's designation as consultant in surgery should be conditioned upon his acceptance of the position, and should be terminable at his pleasure, the above-noted amendment has been added to the bill by your committee.

Report of the War Department on S. 2024 follows:

MARCH 5, 1935.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: Careful consideration has been given to the bill (S. 2024, 74th Cong., 1st sess.) to give proper recognition to the distinguished services of Col. William L. Keller, which you transmitted to the War Department under date of February 26, 1935, with a request for information, and the views of the Department relative thereto.

There is no provision of law applicable to this case.

Colonel Keller is a man of outstanding character and ability as a medical officer, particularly as a surgeon. This ability is recognized and highly appreciated by both the War Department and the Army at large. The loss of his valuable services and advice, upon his retirement, will be greatly regretted.

In the general case the War Department is opposed to the enactment of preferential legislation or legislation seeking to continue on the active list persons who have attained the statutory retirement age. Such legislation as a rule tends to establish undesirable precedents. However, the proposed legislation does not seek to continue Colonel Keller on the active list; it seeks to place him in an office not now existent under the War Department, with the active-duty pay and allowances of the grade held by him at the time of his retirement. Further, as stated in the bill, it would continue to make available to the public service Colonel Keller's mature professional judgment and long experience, which, in all probability, cannot be replaced. Therefore, in expressing its approval of S. 2024, it is considered that the circumstances and conditions are unusual, and that a similar case is not likely again to present itself.

With reference to the wording of the bill, it is believed that Colonel Keller's designation as consultant in surgery should be conditioned upon his acceptance of the position and should be terminable at his pleasure. As he has now been in the Government service for over 35 years and is approaching the age of 64, it is believed that he should be allowed a full retirement status after his retirement if he should so desire. Accordingly, it is recommended that the following proviso be inserted in the bill before the semicolon which follows the word "Columbia":

"Provided, That such designation shall be subject to the said Col. William L. Keller's acceptance and terminable at his pleasure."

Amended as indicated above, the War Department recommends the enactment of S. 2024.

The views set forth in the foregoing are in consonance with a report submitted by the War Department to the Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, on H. R. 3158, an identical bill introduced in the present session of Congress in behalf of Colonel Keller.

Sincerely yours,

GEO. H. DERN, Secretary of War.

At the request of Senator SHEPPARD, Chairman of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, Maj. Gen. E. M. Markham, at present Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, who has been in personal touch with the career of Colonel Keller for more than 30 years, wrote Senator SHEPPARD as follows:

MARCH 9, 1935.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: As requested by you verbally yesterday, I am very happy, indeed, to indict the following respecting Col. William L. Keller, Medical Corps, and my lengthy personal knowledge of his character and talents.

I first became acquainted with Colonel Keller at Manila in the year 1901, when he was, even at the tender years of a lieutenant of the Medical Corps, the operating surgeon at the Army General Hospital. At that time his stupendous volume of work, the continuity of his outstanding achievements, and his fine character as a human being were "the talk of the islands."

My personal knowledge and interest at Manila was gained as an incident to the hospitalizations and operation requirements of officers and enlisted men of the Engineer Corps. I recall very distinctly the statement of Lieutenant Keller's superior at the time, that he was gravely concerned respecting a replacement for Lieutenant Keller, as related to the safety of the operative cases of the service. There can be no doubt that Lieutenant Keller's great work in the remote Philippine Islands at the early date referred to attracted explosively the attention of the total military service.

Since that time, and frequently so, I have known intimately of his practically unbroken successes in the saving of the life and health of the commissioned and enlisted forces of the Army, with the consequence of my unceasing admiration of his professional skill, of his highly uncommon attention to his surgical commitments, and of his fine character. I believe his attitude toward his duties to be a matter of spiritual inspiration and devotion to the military service.

In recent years I have had quite definite knowledge and the gravest concern as to the surgical side of the great Walter Reed Hospital. I observed daily for a lengthy period the manner and character of the attention of Colonel Keller to the surgical cases committed to that hospital.

I would strengthen my language if I could in urging that Colonel Keller's service of nearly two score years in the Medical Corps of the Army be rewarded to the moderate extent contemplated by the bill to which you referred yesterday.

Without doubt, I am but repeating what yourself and congressional associates must have heard many times when I refer to the modesty and the utter void of self-seeking which have been characteristic of Colonel Keller's service since he committed himself thereto.

Additional to any more personal encomiums respecting Colonel Keller, it seems to me that the real issue of the very highest gravity should be the perpetuation of Colonel Keller's great talents and his uncommonly expansive experience in the interest of the health and life of the military service until he can no longer handle an instrument or voice an opinion.

Trusting that the above may be helpful in your considerations, and assuring you that there is no consciousness of exaggeration in my views of and respect for Colonel Keller, believe me,

Sincerely,

E. M. MARKHAM,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.

ACQUISITION OF RED HILL, THE ESTATE OF PATRICK HENRY

The bill (S. 997) to provide for the acquisition by the United States of Red Hill, the estate of Patrick Henry, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, at the request of the chairman of the committee, I ask that that bill be recommitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

G. ELIAS & BRO., INC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 371) for the relief of G. Elias & Bro., Inc., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York tell us what this bill is?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. McKELLAR. The War Department opposed it.

Mr. COPELAND. The War Department under a previous administration opposed it, and I do not wonder that they opposed it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Did the present administration oppose it?

Mr. COPELAND. The present administration, being different in heart and justice than the preceding one, naturally would not oppose it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why should not such a claim as this, carrying such a large amount, be referred to the Court of Claims? I have no objection to referring it to the Court of Claims, or even to the Comptroller General.

Mr. COPELAND. Permit me to say a word before the Senator makes any suggestion as to amendment.

The Elias firm in Buffalo were asked to bid on two airplanes. The planes were to be completed according to certain prints which were furnished by the Government and then put on cars, f. o. b. cars, near claimant's factory at Buffalo, for domestic shipment. As a matter of fact, this firm were being urged to get out these airplanes. They had their dies and jigs and patterns and everything ready to make the planes, and when they came to check up on the plans they found that the blueprints furnished by the Government were so utterly defective that they were useless; so the firm had to throw away all the dies and jigs and parts which had been made in order to build a plane which would work.

Mr. McKELLAR. What department of the Government did that?

Mr. COPELAND. The War Department.

Mr. McKELLAR. The War Department ordered the planes?

Mr. COPELAND. The War Department under a previous administration ordered the planes. It was provided that the planes should be put on cars f. o. b. Buffalo for domestic shipment; and then it was found that the Department wanted to ship the planes abroad, or do something else with them, and the firm in Buffalo, in order to comply with the request of the Government, had to have big box cars built in order to carry the planes.

If there ever in the world was a just claim, it is this claim, and I hope the Senator will permit the bill to pass.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, from the Senator's statement the claim is evidently a worthy and proper one, but I do not think this is the proper tribunal to pass upon such a large amount. If the Senator will change his bill and provide that the claim shall be referred to the Court of Claims without regard to any statute of limitations, or anything else, so that they may hear the claim and determine how much is due the claimants, I shall have no objection; but I do not think the Senate ought to pass on it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, Mr. Elias, who was the claimant, was a very old-time friend of mine in Buffalo. He wore himself out coming down here to Washington to see the various commissions. Every time he came he dropped in to see me. He wore himself out and died. Now the widow of this old friend, helpless and penniless, is here asking justice from the Government. If the events complained of had occurred under the present administration, I should be decidedly outraged; but they did not.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Tennessee that this claim ought to go to the Court of Claims. I ask to have it go over at this time, until we can look into it further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. McKELLAR. It ought to go to the Court of Claims or to the Comptroller General to pass upon the facts.

Mr. WHEELER. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I beg the Senator to withhold his objection for a moment. I never before have been placed in this position in the Senate. I know so much about this matter from the very beginning of the controversy, and I have heard so much about it, that I am convinced beyond question that the claim is a just one and ought to be paid, and I beg Senators to let the bill be passed.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the able Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] is about to rob Lazarus of his reputation of being the world's most famous beggar. In order to prevent this irreparable injury to the fame and credit of the illustrious dead, let us yield to the Senator's stirring appeal and pass his bill without delay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been heard, the bill will be passed over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Montana to withdraw his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana withdraw his objection?

Mr. WHEELER. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", it is proposed to strike out "$30,859.28" and to insert in lieu thereof "$24,139.28", and at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to G. Elias & Bro., Inc., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $24,139.28, in full settlement for losses suffered by the said G. Elias & Bro., Inc., by reason of changes in the specifications and extra work from which the Government received the benefit but for which no pay whatever has been paid to the said G. Elias & Bro., Inc., under contracts W 535 AC–602 and W 535 AC–628 dated December 14, 1926, and January 28, 1927, with the Air Corps for furnishing certain airship parts and equipment to the United States Army Air Corps: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISPOSITION OF REMAINS OF CIVILIAN COMPONENTS OF THE ARMY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1713) to further amend section 6, act of March 4, 1923, so as to make better provision for the recovery and disposition of bodies of members of the civilian components of the Army who die in line of duty, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 3, line 1, after the word "that", to insert "which would be"; and in line 2, after the word "services", to insert "in the case of an officer of the Regular Army", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act of March 4, 1923, as amended by the act of April 26, 1928 (45 Stat. 461), is hereby further amended by inserting in the seventh line, after the word "Army", the words "and members of the National Guard of the United States", so that the second clause of the section will read as follows: "members of the Officers' Reserve Corps and of the enlisted reserve corps of the Army and members of the National Guard of the United States who suffer personal injury or contract disease in line of duty while on active duty under proper orders;".

SEC. 2. Said section 6 of the act of March 4, 1923, as amended, is also hereby further amended by striking out the last sentence of the first paragraph of said section 6 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"If the death of any person mentioned herein occurs while he is on active duty, or undergoing training or hospital treatment contemplated by this section, the United States shall, under regulations prescribed as aforesaid, pay the necessary expenses for recovery of the body, its preparation for burial, including the use of such of the uniform and articles of clothing issued to him as may be required, interment (or cremation if requested by his relatives), and transportation of his remains, including round-trip transportation and subsistence of an escort, to his home or the place where he received orders for the period of training upon which engaged at the time of his death, or to such other place as his relatives may designate, provided the distance to such other place be not greater than the distance to his home: Provided, That when the expenses of the recovery, preparation, and disposition of remains herein authorized, or any part thereof, are paid by individuals, such individuals may be reimbursed therefor at an amount not exceeding that which would be allowed by the Government for such services in the case of an officer of the Regular Army."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VEHICLES AND SUPPLIES FORFEITED FOR VIOLATION OF LIQUOR LAWS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1885) to authorize turning over to the Indian Service vehicles, vessels, and supplies seized and forfeited for violation of liquor laws, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any vehicle, vessel, or other conveyance used in the transportation of intoxicating liquors unlawfully into the Indian country or other restricted area within or adjoining an Indian reservation, and which under proper proceedings by the Federal court is authorized to be sold or destroyed, may, upon order of the court, be transferred to the Indian Service for its use in the enforcement of the law or other official purposes; said property, when so transferred to the Indian Service, to be accounted for as in all other property of a similar nature: Provided, That no car seized and forfeited under this act shall be transferred for official purposes in the same Federal judicial district in which the seizure and forfeiture took place.

SEC. 2. Any articles or supplies seized and ordered sold or destroyed under similar conditions by the Federal court may be transferred to the Indian Service for use in its activities, and when so transferred shall be accounted for by the bonded superintendent or other official.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] whether he regards it as wise legislation to provide for turning over without any inventory and without any knowledge of its value property belonging to the United States simply because it has been confiscated or taken from persons who have been violating the law. It seems to me there ought to be an inventory; the property ought to be appraised; it ought to be sold; or, if it should be turned over to some department, it ought to be charged against that department and charged against its appropriation.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the facts are that liquor is being introduced into Indian reservations, and very often the person engaged in such activities is apprehended; and most often his means of conveyance is an automobile. Under the law the automobile is confiscated. Of course, the Department could put the automobile up for sale and sell it and obtain a few dollars for it and turn the money into the Treasury. It is thought to be better practice, however, not to sell the automobile, but rather to turn it over to the Indian Service, though not permitting the automobile to be used in the same jurisdiction where it was captured.

For example, if an automobile were captured in the Osage Reservation in Oklahoma it should be sent up to Iowa, or to Nebraska, or to Utah for further use. That is on the theory that perhaps the person who lost the automobile would not want to see his car used by Federal officials in his own vicinity. Under the law, when a car is captured it belongs to the Government. Sending the car to some other jurisdiction, where the defendant or guilty person would not see it, is thought to be a better use of such a car than to put it up locally and sell it and get a few dollars for it and turn the money in to the Treasury.

That is the whole purpose of the proposed legislation. It has the approval and the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to say to the Senator from Utah that I advocated this kind of legislation in substance, and urged it on the Department, for the reason that the Department could make use of many of the automobiles which were formerly being taken by the Prohibition Unit instead of buying new and expensive automobiles. They could use these second-hand automobiles and save the Government money. I have advocated that the Park Service try to get some of the boats which have been confiscated, for instance, to be used in the Park Service on the lakes in some of the parks. That would result in a saving to the Government, and I am sure it would really be a very good thing to do.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was not objecting to the confiscation of the property, or to its utilization after it had been confiscated; but I think the property ought to be appraised, and, if it is turned over to a department, the department ought to be charged with it, and it ought to be upon the books of the organization as a charge or a credit, whatever term is the proper one. I think it is rather an unwise practice to take property and have no accounting of it, and transfer it to some other agency of the Government without its being a charge, and without the books of the Government showing what disposition was made of the property. Such practice, in my opinion, will lead to a misuse of property, and to carelessness in the use of confiscated property.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the bill, I think, covers that matter fully. I find the following language in the bill:

> Said property, when so transferred to the Indian Service, to be accounted for as in all other property of a similar nature: Provided, That no car seized and forfeited under this act shall be transferred for official purposes in the same Federal judicial district in which the seizure and forfeiture took place.
> SEC. 2. Any articles or supplies seized and ordered sold or destroyed, under similar conditions by the Federal court, may be transferred to the Indian Service for use in its activities, and when so transferred shall be accounted for by the bonded superintendent or other official.

I think that covers the exact objection raised by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BONE. As I take it, this refers only to cars seized while handling contraband in Indian territory; it does not refer to cars which may be seized by the Customs Service or any other service outside?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I think the Senator is correct in his interpretation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate nos. 7 and 25 to the War Department appropriation bill, being House bill 5913.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. COPELAND. I should like to ask why objection is raised.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I want to have the consideration of the calendar concluded.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. COPELAND. I withdraw my request.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to state that we should proceed during the morning hour with the consideration of the calendar. That was my understanding.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I had no such understanding. I thought it was understood that we should proceed with the calendar until the call of the calendar had been completed; and it seems to me rather strange that the Senator from New York, who has had a number of bills disposed of here one way or the other, should seek to bring up at this time the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill referred to by him.

Mr. COPELAND. I had assumed that at 2 o'clock it would be in order to take up the matter.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I make the point of order that the Senate met today following a recess; that, therefore, there is no morning hour; and that the order of business is to continue with the consideration of the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I shall not renew the request until the calendar shall have been disposed of; but I hope, if possible, before the end of the session today that the War Department appropriation bill may be disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will proceed with the call of the calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 24) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws by discouraging, preventing, and punishing the crime of lynching was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 164) for the relief of Donald L. Bruner was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I notice that bill is opposed by the Department, and, therefore, I will ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1452) providing for the employment of skilled shorthand reporters in the executive branch of the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1453) to create a board of shorthand reporting, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ZELMA HALVERSON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 952) for the relief of Zelma Halverson, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $50 per month in an amount not to exceed $5,000 to Zelma Halverson to compensate her for the death of her husband, Harry Halverson, who lost his life August 21, 1933, while fighting a forest fire in Montana: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOGAN MULVANEY

The bill (H. R. 816) for the relief of Logan Mulvaney was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Logan Mulvaney, the sum of $233.40 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for property destroyed by fire at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., on February 18, 1922.

COST OF PRODUCTION OF COTTON MANUFACTURES

The resolution (S. Res. 104) submitted by Mr. METCALF on the 13th instant, and reported by the Committee on Finance without amendment, authorizing the United States Tariff Commission to investigate differences in the costs of production of cotton manufactures, under paragraphs 903 and 904 of the Tariff Act of 1930, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is directed, under the authority conferred by section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, and for the purposes of that section, to investigate the differences in the costs of production of the following domestic article and of any like or similar foreign articles: Cotton manufactures, included in paragraphs 903 and 904 of such act.

LT. COMDR. G. C. MANNING

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 884) for the relief of Lt. Comdr. G. C. Manning, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$200" and insert "$146", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Lt. Comdr. G. C. Manning the sum of $146 as reimbursement for damages to his furniture by the Navy in shipment from Shanghai, China, to New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REDUCED RATES FOR OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN ON LEAVE OF ABSENCE

The bill (S. 95) to provide for the carrying at reduced rates of officers and enlisted men of the military and naval forces while on leave of absence or furlough at their own expense was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, will the Senator afford me an opportunity to explain the bill?

Mr. KING. Very well; I withhold the objection.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, under the law, the Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized to afford reduced rates to members of the Marine Corps and officers and enlisted men of the Navy ordered to their homes or the hospital, but the law does not go to such an extent that they may be authorized to afford reduced rates to enlisted men and officers while on leave of absence, traveling to and fro from their posts of duty to their homes. The bill seeks to broaden the law so that the Interstate Commerce Commission, if they deem proper, may authorize reduced rates to the men personally while traveling on leave of absence. I cannot see why the law should not be changed to that effect. That is, briefly, the explanation of the bill.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph (1) of section 22 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended by striking out the semicolon immediately following the phrase "under arrangements with the board of managers of said homes" and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the following: "or to officers and enlisted men of the military and naval forces of the United States while on leave of absence or furlough at their own expense;".

CLAIMS OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF MINNESOTA

The bill (S. 1494) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota to submit claims to the Court of Claims", approved May 14, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 555), was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all suits filed under the act entitled "An act authorizing the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota to submit claims to the Court of Claims", approved May 14, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 555), either party, with the consent of the court first had and obtained, shall have the right to amend the pleadings at any time prior to the entry of final judgment so as to include all claims said Indians may have under said act against the United States and any defense the United States may have thereto.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2241) to authorize an appropriation to carry out the provisions of the act of May 3, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 484), was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HESTER HAMILTON

The bill (H. R. 829) granting 6 months' pay to Hester Hamilton was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the appropriation "Pay of the Army, 1935", to Hester Hamilton, dependent mother of Milton Hamilton, deceased, late of Company K, Twenty-second Regiment United States Infantry, an amount equal to 6 months' pay at the rate said Milton Hamilton was receiving at the date of his death.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 363) to increase the efficiency of the Veterinary Corps of the Regular Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 18) to amend section 1015 of the Revised Statutes was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 17) making it a contempt to willfully fail to appear after having been admitted to bail was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I also ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

REVOLVING FUND FOR CROW INDIANS

The bill (S. 2145) extending the time for repayment of the revolving fund for the benefit of the Crow Indians was announced as next in order.

Mr. RUSSELL. Over.

Mr. KING. I should like an explanation of that bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in 1920 the Congress passed a bill creating a revolving fund for the Crow Tribe of Indians. The revolving fund has worked so well that the Department wants to have it extended from June 30, 1935, when, otherwise, the authority will expire, and to keep the fund intact. The revolving fund is serving a large number of Indians, and it should be kept intact and loaned and reloaned. The bill involves no new appropriation, but extends the time during which this money may be used for this, in my opinion, worthy purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for repayment to the tribe of the $50,000 revolving fund for the benefit of the Crow Indians, created by the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 755), for the purchase of seed, animals, machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment is hereby extended from June 30, 1935, to June 30, 1945, and said fund is hereby made available for such purposes for the further period of 10 years from and after June 30, 1935.

WALTER J. BRYSON PAVING CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 659) for the relief of Walter J. Bryson Paving Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Walter J. Bryson Paving Co., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,500.50, in full and final settlement of all claims against the Government for certain dredging work performed by said company in the improvement of the channel in the Anclote River, Fla.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 566) for the relief of George Yusko was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ESTATE OF R. A. WALLACE TREAT

The bill (H. R. 2569) for the relief of the estate of R. A. Wallace Treat was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of R. A. Wallace Treat the sum of $876. Such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of the damages sustained by the late R. A. Wallace Treat, former American consul at Smyrna, as a result of fire in the consulate of Smyrna on March 23, 1923.

INDIANS OF FLATHEAD RESERVATION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2146) for the relief of certain Indians of the Flathead Reservation killed or injured en route to dedication ceremonies of the Going-to-the-Sun Highway, Glacier National Park, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments; on page 1, at the beginning of line 6, strike out "to compensate", and insert the words "in full settlement of all claims of"; at the beginning of line 8, to strike out the word "injured" and insert the words "against the United States, arising out of any and all injuries sustained while"; and on page 2, line 14, after the word "ceremonies", to strike out "in full settlement of all claims against the United States arising out of the death or injury of these Indians while en route to the dedication ceremonies of the Going-to-the-Sun Highway in Glacier National Park", and insert "of the Going-to-the-Sun Highway in Glacier National Park in full settlement of all claims against the United States arising out of the death of the said Indians on the said occasion", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,890 in full settlement of all claims of the following Indians of the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont., against the United States, arising out of any and all injuries sustained while en route to the dedication ceremonies of the Going-to-the-Sun Highway in Glacier National Park in the amounts indicated: Sopie Conko, $600; Mary Calowahcan Smallsalmon, $190; Alexander Calowahcan, $250; Michael Smallsalmon, $250; Joseph Woodcock, $30; Martine Siwahsah, $20; Sophie C. Granjo, $20; Sophie Moiese, $600; Isabel Granjo, $30; Eneas Granjo, $50; Mary Kyser Stateah, $600; Eneas Michel Conko, $50; Pierre Pierre, $50; William Michel, $50; Andrew Manybear, $100: Provided, That if any of the beneficiaries under this act are deceased, payment herein authorized shall be made to their heirs; and to pay the sum of $3,000 to the heirs of Louise Cullooyah, deceased, and the sum of $3,000 to the heirs of Michel Kizer, deceased, also of the Flathead Indian Reservation, who were killed while en route to the said dedication ceremonies of the Going-to-the-Sun Highway in Glacier National Park in full settlement of all claims against the United States arising out of the death of the said Indians on the said occasion.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SISKIYOU NATIONAL FOREST, OREG.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1513) to add certain lands to the Siskiyou National Forest in the State of Oregon, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "lands", to insert "subject to valid existing rights", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the boundaries of the Siskiyou National Forest, in the State of Oregon, are hereby extended to include the following-described lands, subject to valid existing rights:

Section 31, township 30 south, range 9 west.

Sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 16, 17, and 18, township 31 south, range 9 west.

Sections 16, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36, township 30 south, range 10 west.

All of township 31 south, range 10 west.

Sections 1, 2, 3, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 33, 34, 35, and 36, township 31 south, range 11 west.

All of Willamette meridian.

SEC. 2. Lands hereafter conveyed to the United States within the above-described area, upon acceptance of title, shall become parts of the said Siskiyou National Forest and subject to all laws relating thereto. Any lands within the above-described area which are part of the land grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co., title to which revested in the United States under the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. 218), shall remain subject to all laws relating to said revested land grant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DESCHUTES NATIONAL FOREST, OREG.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1680) to include within the Deschutes National Forest, in the State of Oregon, certain public lands within the exchange boundaries thereof, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment, on page 2, at the beginning of line 1, to strike out "Secretary of Agriculture" and insert "Secretaries of Agriculture and of the Interior", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act authorizing the adjustment of the boundaries of the Deschutes National Forest, in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes", approved February 2, 1922, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 2. Such lands in public ownership within 6 miles of the exterior boundaries of the Deschutes National Forest, in the State of Oregon, as may be found by the Secretaries of Agriculture and of the Interior to be chiefly valuable for national-forest purposes, may be added to the Deschutes National Forest by proclamation of the President, subject to any valid existing claims in such lands."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PISGAH NATIONAL FOREST, N. C.

The bill (S. 1787) to add certain lands to the Pisgah National Forest, in the State of North Carolina, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the tract of land in Buncombe County, N. C., locally known as the "Grove Tract", acquired by the United States on December 19, 1927, for the use of the Veterans' Administration, being approximately 442 acres, be, and the same is hereby, added to the Pisgah National Forest and made subject to all laws and regulations relating to the use and administration of the national forests: Provided, however, That the tract shall be so managed as to conserve and protect the water thereon, which water shall remain available for the use of the Veterans' Administration.

LOSSES FROM ERADICATION OF MEDITERRANEAN FRUIT FLY

The bill (S. 933) to provide for an investigation and report of losses resulting from the campaign for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruit fly by the Department of Agriculture was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, at the request of an absent Member of the Senate, I ask that the bill go over for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, is the Senator from Oregon willing to divulge who the absent Member is who is objecting to the bill?

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], who has been opposed to the bill, is not present, and I think it should go over.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I merely want to get a little information, and inquire whether the Senator from Michigan is opposing the bill now? He has opposed it once or twice before, but I thought he finally withdrew his objection at a previous session of Congress.

Mr. McNARY. I recall when he has been here he has opposed it, and I thought, in all fairness, in his absence the Senator from Florida would be willing that the bill should go over, of course.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I regret it very much. This bill has been pending for some time and a similar bill has been passed by the Senate on three or four occasions at different sessions of Congress. I should much appreciate it if the Senator who opposes it would be present the next time the bill shall be reached on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 5) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein; to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. RUSSELL. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

AMERICAN CONSERVATION WEEK

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 3) favoring the designation and appropriate observance of American Conservation Week was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Whereas under the inspiring leadership of President Cleveland it became the settled policy of this Nation to conserve its natural resources; and

Whereas the establishment of an American Conservation Week will have the desired effect of bringing the American people to realize in the words of that great conservationist, President Roosevelt, that "the conservation of our natural resources and their proper use constitute the fundamental problem which underlies almost every other problem of our national life": Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States is requested to issue each year a proclamation designating the first week in April as American Conservation Week and inviting the people of the United States to observe that week in schools, churches, museums, parks, and other suitable places, with ceremonies appropriate to the occasion.

The preamble was agreed to.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1988) to revive and reenact section 5 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of certain bridges and to extend the times for commencing and for completing the construction of other bridges over the navigable waters of the United States", approved March 4, 1933, was announced as next in order.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I should like to have some explanation of the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, let the bill go over for the present, until its author may be present.

CHESAPEAKE BAY BRIDGE

The bill (S. 2156) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Chesapeake Bay between Baltimore and Kent Counties, Md., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Chesapeake Bay between Baltimore and Kent Counties, Md., authorized to be built by the Chesapeake Bay Bridge Co. by section 11 of the act of Congress approved March 4, 1933, and extended by act of Congress approved June 12, 1934, are hereby further extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

DANIEL FREEMAN HOMESTEAD, NEBRASKA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1307) to establish a national park on the Daniel Freeman homestead in Gage County, Nebr., which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "that", to insert the words "the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to acquire, on behalf of the United States, by gift, purchase, or condemnation"; in line 11, after the name "Daniel Freeman", to strike out the words "be purchased and designated as a national park to be named the 'Homestead National Park of America'" and to insert the words "and that when so acquired the said area be designated 'The Homestead National Monument of America'"; on page 2, line 5, after the word "appropriated", to strike out the words "the sum of" and insert the words "a sum not to exceed"; in line 8, after the words "purpose of", to strike out the word "purchasing" and insert the word "acquiring", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to acquire, on behalf of the United States, by gift, purchase, or condemnation, the south half of the northwest quarter, the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter, and the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter section 26, township 4 north, range 5 east, of the sixth principal meridian, Gage County, Nebr., the same being the first homestead entered upon under the General Homestead Act of May 20, 1862, by Daniel Freeman, and that when so acquired the said area be designated "The Homestead National Monument of America."

SEC. 2. That there is authorized to be appropriated a sum not to exceed $24,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of acquiring said tract.

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to lay out said land in a suitable and enduring manner so that the same may be maintained as an appropriate monument to retain for posterity a proper memorial emblematical of the hardships and the pioneer life through which the early settlers passed in the settlement, cultivation, and civilization of the great West. It shall be his duty to erect suitable buildings to be used as a museum in which shall be preserved literature applying to such settlement and agricultural implements used in bringing the western plains to its present high state of civilization, and to use the said tract of land for such other objects and purposes as in his judgment may perpetuate the history of the country mainly developed by the homestead law.

SEC. 4. For the purpose of carrying out the suggestions and recommendations of the Secretary of the Interior, the necessary annual appropriations therefor are hereby authorized.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to establish the Homestead National Monument of America in Gage County, Nebr."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in connection with the bill just passed, I ask that the report of the committee be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the report (No. 365) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1307) to establish a national park on the Daniel Freeman Homestead in Gage County, Nebr., having considered the same, recommend that the bill pass with the following amendments:

Strike out the title and insert a new title to read as follows:

"A bill to establish the Homestead National Monument of America in Gage County, Nebr."

Page 1, line 3, after the word "that", insert "the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to acquire, on behalf of the United States, by gift, purchase, or condemnation."

Page 1, lines 9 and 10, strike out the language "be purchased and designated as a national park to be named the Homestead National Park of America" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and that when so acquired, the said area be designated the Homestead National Monument of America."

Page 2, line 2, strike out the words "the sum of" and insert in lieu thereof "a sum not to exceed."

Page 2, line 3, strike out the word "purchasing" and insert in lieu thereof the word "acquiring."

As thus amended the committee recommends the passage of the bill.

It is the object of this proposed legislation to establish a proper memorial which will be emblematical of the hardships and the trials of pioneer life in the settlement of the great West. That part of the country which is now the bread basket of the Nation was, in the main, settled under the national homestead law.

The National Homestead Act was signed by Abraham Lincoln and took effect on the 1st day of January 1863. It is still on the statute books, but there now remains only a comparatively small proportion of the public domain available to entry under its terms. Indeed, withdrawal orders have, for the present at least, suspended its operation. This legislation seeks to preserve for posterity the historic emblems and relics of a period in our Nation's history which is rapidly being forgotten. The committee believes it is eminently proper that the events of this period should be preserved and while the place of commemoration might be selected anywhere in the country settled under the Homestead Act, yet it is fitting that the place selected for its preservation should be on the land which constitutes the first homestead entry made under the act.

Daniel Freeman was a Union soldier in the Civil War. He was in Nebraska on a leave of absence from his command. This leave of absence was about to expire, and in order to get back to his command before its expiration it was necessary that the land office at Brownville, Nebr., where his homestead filing was made, be opened at 12 o'clock midnight in order to permit him to make the filing. This was done and Mr. Freeman made his filing during the first few minutes of the day on which the homestead law took effect and started immediately back to his command. He served during the entire Civil War and then returned to the homestead and in due time made final proof thereon.

Under this act there have been taken up in original homestead entries more than 505,000,000 acres of land and an area in excess of 275,000,000 acres has gone to final proof and United States patents have been issued therefor.

It is expected, if this bill becomes a law, that this homestead will become a museum in which the literature, the implements of agriculture, the means of transportation, and all other past incidents of pioneer life of the period through which the western settlers had to pass in winning the great West will be preserved to future generations.

ARMY DAY

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 13) was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Saturday, April 6, 1935, be recognized by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, as Army Day, and that the President of the United States be requested, as Commander in Chief, to order military units throughout the United States to assist civic bodies in appropriate celebration to such extent as he may deem advisable.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, in connection with the concurrent resolution just adopted, I ask that the report of the Committee on Military Affairs may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the report (No. 316) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred Senate Concurrent Resolution 13, to recognize April 6, 1935, as Army Day, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with a recommendation that it do pass.

Practically ever since the World War, April 6 of each year has been observed throughout the United States as Army Day. The purpose of Senate Concurrent Resolution 13 is to give official recognition to this date for the present year. It requests the President, as Commander in Chief, to order military units throughout the United States to assist civic bodies in appropriate celebration to such extent as he may deem advisable.

The spirit in which Army Day was conceived and in which it is commemorated each year is excellently and laconically set forth in the following extract from a recent editorial:

"Army Day is devoted to the maintenance and development of the Army of the United States and to memorialize the great patriotic figures who have honored the Army by their service in it and who have been honored by the Army by their service in it."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 87) to prevent the shipment in interstate commerce of certain articles and commodities, in connection with which persons are employed more than 5 days per week or 6 hours per day, and prescribing certain conditions with respect to purchases and loans by the United States, and codes, agreements, and licenses under the National Industrial Recovery Act, was announced as next in order.

Mr. RUSSELL. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CHARLES E. UPSON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3071) for the relief of Second Lt. Charles E. Upson, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, after the word "organization", to insert the words "on May 8, 1918", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Second Lt. Charles Upson, who was a member of the Three Hundred and Thirty-ninth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on May 8, 1918: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CORA A. SNYDER

The bill (H. R. 2117) for the relief of Cora A. Snyder was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN S. CANNELL, DECEASED

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1575) to correct the military record of John S. Cannell, deceased, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 8, after the word "have", to strike out the words "been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said organization on the 13th day of September 1918" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "died on the 12th day of September 1918 as a member of said organization, and that his death was in the line of duty and was not the result of his own misconduct", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows, or dependent relatives, John S. Cannell, late of the Provisional Military Police Company, First Depot Division, American Expeditionary Forces, shall be held and considered to have died on the 12th day of September 1918 as a member of said organization, and that his death was in the line of duty and was not the result of his own misconduct: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall accrue as a result of the passage of this act, except what may accrue by reason of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act for the relief of John S. Cannell, deceased."

JOHN W. DADY

The bill (S. 2333) for the relief of John W. Dady was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of John W. Dady, superintendent and special disbursing agent of the Mission Indian Agency, Riverside, Calif., for payments aggregating $582.50, made to Thomas Lucas, an Indian, as mileage for travel performed by automobile while employed as subforeman in emergency conservation work.

QUALIFICATIONS OF PRACTITIONERS OF LAW IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 395) relative to the qualifications of practitioners of law in the District of Columbia, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, on page 2, after line 4, to insert the following new paragraph:

A member of the bar of the highest court of any State, not recorded as disbarred upon the membership rolls of the bar of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, shall be entitled to represent parties or interests in the courts of the District of Columbia in causes which arise from time to time affecting parties and subject matter without the District of Columbia. No court of the District of Columbia shall enforce against any such member of the bar of the highest court of any State any rule promulgated by such court which would require that there be joined of record associate counsel having an office in the District of Columbia or providing for the exclusion of such member of the bar from practice in such causes if the party represented shall file, at the time counsel enters his appearance, with the clerk having jurisdiction consent that service upon said clerk shall be service upon said party and his counsel.

So as to make the section read:

That the act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901, as amended, be, and the same hereby is, further amended by inserting after section 218 thereof the following:

"SEC. 218a. No person who is not a member of the bar of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia shall engage in the practice of law, or any branch thereof, in the District of Columbia; nor shall any partnership, corporation, association, or firm engage in the practice of law, or any branch thereof, in the District of Columbia, except associations, partnerships, and firms all of the members of which are members of the bar of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

"A member of the bar of the highest court of any State, not recorded as disbarred upon the membership rolls of the bar of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, shall be entitled to represent parties or interests in the courts of the District of Columbia in causes which arise from time to time affecting parties and subject matter without the District of Columbia. No court of the District of Columbia shall enforce against any such member of the bar of the highest court of any State any rule promulgated by such court which would require that there be joined of record associate counsel having an office in the District of Columbia or providing for the exclusion of such member of the bar from practice in such causes if the party represented shall file, at the time counsel enters his appearance, with the clerk having jurisdiction consent that service upon said clerk shall be service upon said party and his counsel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 10, after the word "same", to strike out "nor to prevent any person or firm now registered or hereafter registered by the United States Patent Office as an 'attorney' or otherwise from engaging in or holding himself or itself out as qualified to engage in the preparation or prosecution of any patent application or case in the United States Patent Office on behalf of any inventor or applicant; nor to prevent any person now registered or hereafter registered to practice by the United States Patent Office, who is a member of the bar of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, from engaging in the general practice of law", and to insert in lieu thereof, "nor shall anything in said sections contained prevent any person, partnership, or firm, now or hereafter registered by the United States Patent Office, to practice before it, and not a member of the bar of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, from performing any and all of the services incident to patent, trade mark, copyright, and unfair competition practice before and out of the Patent Office and out of court; nor prevent any member of the bar of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, who is also a member of or an associate of a firm or partnership which is registered to practice before the United States Patent Office, but all the members of which are not members of the bar of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, from practicing law to the full extent of his authority as a member of said bar"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 218d. Nothing contained in section 218a, 218b, or 218c shall prevent persons or partnerships who are now or shall hereafter be admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the United States, the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, or the Court of Claims, from practicing before the same, or prevent them from using the words forbidden to be used by section 218b when such words are used (1) in connection with other words stating the court or courts before which they are then so admitted to practice, or (2) in their practice before said courts or any of them; nor shall anything in the said sections contained (a) prevent persons or partnerships who are now or shall hereafter be authorized or permitted by any department, commission, bureau, agency, or other authority of the United States or of the District of Columbia to practice before the same from doing so, or (b) apply to the use by them of words forbidden by section 218b when such words are used (1) in connection with other words stating the department, commission, bureau, agency, authority, or one or more or all of them before which they are so authorized or permitted to practice, or (2) in their practice before the same, nor shall anything in said sections contained prevent any person, partnership, or firm, now or hereafter registered by the United States Patent Office, to practice before it, and not a member of the bar of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, from performing any and all of the services incident to patent, trade mark, copyright, and unfair competition practice before and out of the Patent Office and out of court; nor prevent any member of the bar of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, who is also a member of or an associate of a firm or partnership which is registered to practice before the United States Patent Office, but all the members of which are not members of the bar of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, from practicing law to the full extent of his authority as a member of said bar, or prevent any person from acting as attorney for the United States Government while actually engaged by it so to do, nor shall anything in the said sections referred to be construed so as to prevent any title insurance company while authorized to carry on its business in the District of Columbia from examining, abstracting, reporting upon, certifying, guaranteeing or insuring titles to real estate, settling sales, conveyances, and exchanges thereof, or doing conveyancing work in connection therewith.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901, as amended, be, and the same hereby is, further amended by inserting after section 218 thereof the following:

"SEC. 218a. No person who is not a member of the bar of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia shall engage in the practice of law, or any branch thereof, in the District of Columbia; nor shall any partnership, corporation, association, or firm engage in the practice of law, or any branch thereof, in the District of Columbia, except associations, partnerships, and firms all of the members of which are members of the bar of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

"A member of the bar of the highest court of any State, not recorded as disbarred upon the membership rolls of the bar of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, shall be entitled to represent parties or interests in the courts of the District of Columbia in causes which arise from time to time affecting parties and subject matter without the District of Columbia. No court of the District of Columbia shall enforce against any such member of the bar of the highest court of any State any rule promulgated by such court which would require that there be joined of record associate counsel having an office in the District of Columbia or providing for the exclusion of such member of the bar from practice in such causes if the party represented shall file, at the time counsel enters his appearance, with the clerk having jurisdiction consent that service upon said clerk shall be service upon said party and his counsel.

"SEC. 218b. No corporation or association shall, nor shall any person or partnership forbidden by section 218a to practice law in the District of Columbia, use therein in any way except as hereinafter expressly allowed the expressions 'attorney at law', 'counselor at law', 'lawyer', 'attorney', 'counselor', 'law office', or any of them, or the plural of any of them, or any other title, word, or phrase as descriptive of the user or of the office, business, or practice of the user which indicates that the user thereof is engaged or is entitled to engage in the practice of law in said District of Columbia.

"SEC. 218c. Every letter, writing, circular, postal card, picture, print, engraving, photograph, newspaper, pamphlet, book, or other publication, matter, or thing of any kind, containing any matter forbidden by section 218b is hereby declared to be nonmailable, and the mailing or attempted mailing of the same to be a misdemeanor and subject to the penalties hereinafter provided.

"SEC. 218d. Nothing contained in section 218a, 218b, or 218c shall prevent persons or partnerships who are now or shall hereafter be admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the United States, the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, or the Court of Claims, from practicing before the same, or prevent them from using the words forbidden to be used by section 218b when such words are used (1) in connection with other words stating the court or courts before which they are then so admitted to practice, or (2) in their practice before said courts or any of them; nor shall anything in the said sections contained (a) prevent persons or partnerships who are now or shall hereafter be authorized or permitted by any department, commission, bureau, agency, or other authority of the United States or of the District of Columbia to practice before the same from doing so, or (b) apply to the use by them of words forbidden by section 218b when such words are used (1) in connection with other words stating the department, commission, bureau, agency, authority, or one or more or all of them before which they are so authorized or permitted to practice, or (2) in their practice before the same, nor shall anything in said sections contained prevent any person, partnership, or firm, now or hereafter registered by the United States Patent Office, to practice before it, and not a member of the bar of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, from performing any and all of the services incident to patent, trade mark, copyright, and unfair competition practice before and out of the Patent Office and out of court; nor prevent any member of the bar of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, who is also a member of or an associate of a firm or partnership which is registered to practice before the United States Patent Office, but all the members of which are not members of the bar of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, from practicing law to the full extent of his authority as a member of said bar, or prevent any person from acting as attorney for the United States Government while actually engaged by it so to do, nor shall anything in the said sections referred to be construed so as to prevent any title insurance company while authorized to carry on its business in the District of Columbia from examining, abstracting, reporting upon, certifying, guaranteeing or insuring titles to real estate, settling sales, conveyances, and exchanges thereof, or doing conveyancing work in connection therewith.

"SEC. 218e. No corporation, association, person, or partnership shall do on behalf of another anything which that other is forbidden to do by sections 218b or 218c.

"SEC. 218f. Every person, corporation, and association, who or which shall violate any provision of section 218a, 218b, or 218c shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 1 year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court, and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and the police court of the District of Columbia shall have concurrent jurisdiction of all prosecutions under this section."

SEC. 2. If any clause, sentence, paragraph, word, or part of this act shall, for any reason, be invalid or inoperative the remainder thereof, and each sentence, paragraph, and part of this act shall stand with like effect as though separately and severally enacted, unaffected by the invalidity or inoperativeness of any other part.

SEC. 3. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed to the extent of such inconsistency or conflict.

GRADY D. COLEMAN

The bill (S. 983) for the relief of Grady D. Coleman was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers and their widows and dependent relatives Grady D. Coleman, late private, Troop E, Fourth Regiment United States Cavalry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said organization on May 29, 1931: Provided, That no back pay, bounty, pension, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATIONS

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Nehalem, Miami, Kilchis, Wilson, Trask, and Tillamook Rivers, in Tillamook County, Oreg., with a view to the control of floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

FLOOD CONTROL ON WILLAMETTE RIVER, OREG.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 865) authorizing a survey of the Willamette River and its tributaries, in the State of Oregon, with a view to controlling floods, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the words "cause a", to strike out the word "survey" and insert in lieu thereof the words "preliminary examination"; in line 5, before the word "tributaries", to insert the word "its"; in line 6, after the words "view to", to strike out the words "preparing detailed plans and estimates at the cost of such work as may appear advisable for"; in line 8, after the word "floods", to strike out the words "and for the protection of eroding banks"; and on page 2, line 2, after the word "such", strike out the word "survey" and insert the words "preliminary examination", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Willamette River and its tributaries, in the State of Oregon, with a view to the prevention and control of floods in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917. The cost of such preliminary examination shall be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:: "A bill authorizing a preliminary examination of the Willamette River and its tributaries, in the State of Oregon, with a view to controlling floods."

MARYSVILLE SCHOOL DISTRICT, SNOHOMISH COUNTY, WASH.

The bill (S. 1533) to provide funds for cooperation with Marysville School District No. 325, Snohomish County,

Wash., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children was announced as next in order.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Over.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator his objection to the Marysville bill?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It conflicts with the President's financial program.

Mr. BONE. The report of the committee does not so indicate. The report of the committee is very precise and indicates that the proposed legislation would not conflict, as I recall the statement.

A group of Indian pupils were attending a Federal school which was closed and those pupils were sent to the public school at Marysville. That school district is financially unable to carry the additional burden. A similar bill passed the Senate last year, but I think was lost in the House in the closing days of the session. The bill has had the approval of the Department and was introduced at their request because conditions in Marysville school district were becoming intolerable.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator say the Department has approved it?

Mr. BONE. It did last year.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The letter of the Acting Secretary of the Interior concludes with the statement:

While I personally favor enactment of S. 1533, the Director of the Budget, under date of March 4, 1935, advises that the proposed legislation would not be in accord with the financial program of the President.

Mr. BONE. It may not be in financial accord with his program, but it is assuredly not in financial accord with the condition of the school district. The Federal Government put the burden on a little school district which could not and cannot carry it. If the Federal Government wants to do a thing of that kind, I am perfectly willing.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I withdraw my objection.

There being no objection the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $38,000 for the purpose of cooperating with Marysville School District, No. 325, Snohomish County, Wash., for extension and improvements of school buildings: Provided, That the expenditure of any moneys so appropriated shall be subject to the condition that the schools maintained by said district shall be available to all the Indian children of the district on the same terms, except as to payment of tuitions, as other children of said school district: Provided further, That such expenditures shall be subject to such further conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

AGREEMENT RESPECTING WATERS OF COLUMBIA RIVER

The bill (S. 1077) to further extend the time in which the States of Washington, Idaho, Oregon, Montana, and Wyoming may enter into a compact or agreement respecting the disposition and apportionment of the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time within which the States of Washington, Idaho, Oregon, Montana, and Wyoming may enter into a compact or agreement respecting the disposition and apportionment of the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries as authorized by the act entitled "An act to permit a compact or agreement between the States of Washington, Idaho, Oregon, and Montana respecting the disposition and apportionment of the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries, and for other purposes", approved March 4, 1925, as amended and extended, is extended to January 1, 1937.

AGREEMENT RESPECTING WATERS OF LITTLE MISSOURI RIVER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1571) granting the consent of Congress to the States of Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement for division of the waters of the Little Missouri River, which had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "January 1", to strike out "1936" and insert in lieu thereof "1937", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That consent of Congress is hereby given to the States of Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement not later than January 1, 1937, providing for an equitable division and apportionment between the States of the water supply of the Little Missouri River and of the streams tributary thereto, upon conditions that one suitable person, who shall be appointed by the President of the United States, shall participate in said negotiations as the representative of the United States and shall make report to Congress of the proceedings and of any compact or agreement entered into: Provided, That any such compact or agreement shall not be binding or obligatory upon either of the parties thereto unless and until the same shall have been approved by the legislature of each of said States and by the Congress of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF TIMBER ON NATIONAL FORESTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2881) authorizing the adjustment of contracts for the sale of timber on the national forests, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after the words "prior to", to strike out "May 1, 1933" and insert in lieu thereof "June 30, 1934", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, upon application of the contracting parties involved, and after due notice publicly given, when such action is necessary in his judgment to prevent hardship or unemployment, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to terminate any contract made prior to June 30, 1934, for the sale of timber on national forests, without requiring the payment of damages for failure to cut all of the timber involved, except as the value of the remaining timber may have been reduced by the cutting and removal done by the purchaser: Provided, That all applications for action by the Secretary under the authority of this act shall be submitted within 1 year from the date of its approval.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

IMPORTS OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, on Tuesday last I submitted a resolution (S. Res. 111) simply requesting information from the departments respecting certain tariff items. I have conferred with the majority leader, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and he is perfectly willing the resolution should be adopted with the preamble stricken out. I am willing to perfect the resolution by eliminating the preamble, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I understand the Senator desires to strike out the preamble?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. The resolution merely seeks information from the Treasury, Commerce, and Agriculture Departments?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is the total extent of the resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. I see no objection, although I think it is the better practice for such resolutions first to go to a standing committee.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to transmit to the Senate full and detailed information regarding the imports of agricultural products into the United States from January 1, 1934, to March 1, 1935, by countries of origin, dates of importation, the kinds, volume, and value in dollars of such imports, the names of the transporting ships, and the United States ports of entry; be it further

Resolved, That the Secretaries of Commerce and Agriculture and Special Foreign Trade Adviser Hon. George N. Peek be requested to transmit to the Senate any information available in their departments covering the calendar or fiscal years from 1904 to December 31, 1934, showing the cotton acreage, annual production and consumption, and the annual import and export in volume and dollar value of the cotton produced and consumed by the separate countries of the world, together with the annual world surplus; and be it further

Resolved, That the Secretaries of Commerce and Agriculture and Special Foreign Trade Adviser Hon. George N. Peek be requested to transmit to the Senate any information available in their departments covering the calendar and/or fiscal years from 1904 to December 31, 1934, showing the wheat acreage, annual production and consumption, and annual import and/or export in volume and dollar value of the wheat produced and consumed by the separate countries of the world, together with the annual world surplus.

The preamble was stricken out.

ERADICATION OF MEDITERRANEAN FRUIT FLY

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to calendar 374, the bill (S. 933) to provide for an investigation and report of losses resulting from the campaign for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruit fly by the Department of Agriculture. I think it was objected to under a misapprehension when it was reached on the calendar.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I hope that my colleague's request may be granted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment, on page 3, line 13, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$25,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$10,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That a board is hereby created, to be known as the Mediterranean Fruit Fly Board, to be composed of five individuals to be appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture, two of whom shall be representatives of the Department of Agriculture (one to be chairman of the board), two citizens of the State of Florida, and one man at large. Any vacancy occurring in the board shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment. Each member of the board, other than members holding office under the State or Federal Government, shall receive compensation at the rate of $10 per day while actually employed on the business of the board. The board shall cease to exist upon transmitting its report under section 2 of this act.

SEC. 2. The board is authorized and directed to conduct a complete investigation and survey of all losses sustained by growers and farmers in the State of Florida resulting from the campaign to eradicate the Mediterranean fruit fly in such State and transmit to the Secretary of Agriculture not later than December 31, 1935, a full report of the results of such investigation and survey: Provided, That such report shall serve as information only and shall not be construed as imposing any legal or moral obligation upon the Government of the United States. The Secretary of Agriculture shall, not later than January 10, 1936, transmit such report of survey to Congress, together with such recommendations as he may, in his judgment, deem advisable.

SEC. 3. With the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, the board may (1) without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States employ and fix the compensation and duties of such employees as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act; but the compensation of such employees shall correspond, so far as may be practicable, to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; and may (2) make such expenditures, including expenditures for travel and subsistence expenses, for personal services at the seat of government and elsewhere, and for printing and binding, as are necessary for the efficient execution of its functions under this act. All expenses of the board shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the Board and the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 4. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6359) to repeal certain provisions relating to publicity of certain statements of income, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. DOUGHTON, Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL, Mr. CULLEN, Mr. TREADWAY and Mr. BACHARACH were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5913) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 10, 17, 26, 28, and 32 to the said bill and concurred therein; and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7 and 25 to the bill and concurred therein, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 403. An act to amend the act of Congress approved March 1, 1899, entitled "An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to remove dangerous and unsafe buildings and parts thereof, and for other purposes", and to further amend said act by adding at the end thereof new sections numbered 5 and 6;

S. 406. An act to amend an act approved May 1, 1906, entitled "An act to create a Board for the Condemnation of Insanitary Buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes"; and

H. J. Res. 174. Joint resolution to permit articles imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the California-Pacific International Exposition, San Diego, Calif., to be admitted without payment of tariff, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT OF INLAND WATERWAYS CORPORATION ACT

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, when Senate bill 1994 was reached on the calendar, a Senator objected to its consideration. It is a bill introduced by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], referred to the Committee on Commerce, and favorably reported. There is no objection to it. The Department recommends it. The bill merely extends to certain waterways in California the provisions of the Inland Waterways Corporation Act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida ask unanimous consent to recur to that bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1994) to amend the Inland Waterways Corporation Act, approved June 3, 1924, as amended, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (e) of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to create the Inland Waterways Corporation for the purpose of carrying out the mandate and purpose of Congress as expressed in sections 201 and 500 of the Transportation Act, and for other purposes", approved June 3, 1924, as amended, is amended by striking out the words "or Snake Rivers" and inserting in lieu thereof "Snake, Sacramento, or San Joaquin Rivers."

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. RUSSELL. In conformity with the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore entered into, I now ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6718, the agricultural appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6718) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will read the bill.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Title I—Department of Agriculture—Office of the Secretary—Salaries", on page 3, line 19, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$33,400", so as to read:

For the Secretary of Agriculture, Under Secretary of Agriculture, Assistant Secretary, and for other personal services in the District of Columbia, and elsewhere, $584,712: Provided, That in expending appropriations or portions of appropriations contained in this act for the payment for personal services in the District of Columbia in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, with the exception of the Assistant Secretary, the average of the salaries of the total number of persons under any grade in any bureau, office, or other appropriation unit shall not at any time exceed the average of the compensation rates specified for the grade by such act as amended and in grades in which only one position is allocated the salary of such position shall not exceed the average of the compensation rates for the grade, except that in unusually meritorious cases of one position in a grade advances may be made to rates higher than the average of the compensation rates of the grade but not more often than once in any fiscal year and then only to the next higher rate: Provided further, That this restriction shall not apply (1) to grades 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the clerical-mechanical service, or (2) to require the reduction in salary of any person whose compensation was fixed as of July 1, 1924, in accordance with the rules of section 6 of such act, (3) to require the reduction in salary of any person who is transferred from one position to another position in the same or different grade, in the same or different bureau, office, or other appropriation unit, (4) to prevent the payment of a salary under any grade at a rate higher than the maximum rate of the grade when such higher rate is permitted by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and is specifically authorized by other law, or (5) to reduce the compensation of any person in a grade in which only one position is allocated: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to contract for stenographic reporting services, and the appropriations made in this act shall be available for such purposes: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to expend from appropriations available for the purchase of lands not to exceed $1 for each option to purchase any particular tract or tracts of land: Provided further, That not to exceed $33,400 of the appropriations available for salaries and expenses of officers and employees of the Department of Agriculture permanently stationed in foreign countries may be used for payment of allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light, as authorized by the act approved June 26, 1930 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 5, sec. 118a), but the amount so used for any one person shall not exceed the amount permitted by law to be so used, during the fiscal year 1936, for any one person in the foreign service of the Department of Commerce:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 16, after the word "any", to strike out "statement, oral or written" and insert "written statement", so as to read:

Provided further, That no part of the funds appropriated by this act shall be used for the payment of the salary of any officer or employee of the Department of Agriculture who as such officer or employee, or on behalf of the Department of Agriculture, issues or causes to be issued or to be made public any written statement which advocates reduced consumption of, or which asserts that it is harmful or undesirable to use, any wholesome agricultural food commodity or any manufacture thereof; but this proviso shall not apply to any assertion that an article is adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, as amended, or to the issue or publication of any suggested balanced diet for food or feed purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Extension Service—Payments to States, Hawaii, and Alaska", on page 16, line 6, after the name "Washington", to strike out "$85,000" and insert "$97,030", so as to read:

Agricultural exhibits at fairs: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make suitable agricultural exhibits at State, interstate, and international fairs held within the United States; for the purchase of necessary supplies and equipment; for telephone and telegraph service, freight and express charges; for travel, and for every other expense necessary, including the employment of assistance in or outside the city of Washington, $97,030.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 20, after the word "expenses", to strike out "$902,754" and insert "$914,784", and in line 21, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$510,536" and insert "$516,536", so as to read:

In all, salaries and expenses, $914,784, of which amount not to exceed $516,536 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 23, to increase the total appropriation for the Extension Service from $4,974,754 to $4,986,784.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 25, to increase the grand total appropriation, Office of the Secretary of Agriculture, from $11,622,554 to $11,634,584.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Weather Bureau—Salaries and expenses", on page 20, line 2, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$482,819" and insert "$494,419", so as to read:

Total, Weather Bureau, $3,429,204, of which amount not to exceed $494,419 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Animal Industry", on page 25, line 16, before the word "elsewhere", to strike out "and/or" and insert "and", so as to read:

Animal husbandry: For all necessary expenses for investigations and experiments in animal husbandry; for experiments in animal feeding and breeding, including cooperation with the State agricultural experiment stations and other agencies, including repairs and additions to and erection of buildings absolutely necessary to carry on the experiments, including the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, rent outside the District of Columbia, and all other necessary expenses, $757,663, including $12,500, for livestock experiments and demonstrations at Big Springs and elsewhere in Texas, to be available only when the State of Texas, or other cooperating agency in Texas shall have appropriated an equal amount or, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, shall have furnished its equivalent in value in cooperation for the same purpose during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 9, after the "products", to strike out "$366,755" and insert "$391,755", so as to read:

Diseases of animals: For all necessary expenses for scientific investigations of diseases of animals, including the construction of necessary buildings at Beltsville, Md., the maintenance of the Bureau experiment station at Bethesda, Md., and the necessary expenses for investigations of tuberculin, serums, antitoxins, and analogous products, $391,755.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 2, before the words "of which", to strike out "$11,298,419" and insert "$11,323,419", so as to read:

Total, Bureau of Animal Industry, $11,323,419, of which amount not to exceed $789,029 may be expended for departmental personal services in the District of Columbia, and not to exceed $55,325 shall be available for the purchase of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles necessary in the conduct of field work outside the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I have no disposition or desire to slow up the consideration or passage of this measure; but I should like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], whether there is any legislation in the committee amendments?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri is advised that there is no legislation whatever in the committee amendments. If the committee had reported any amendment in the way of legislation, the entire bill, of course, would have been subject to a point of order and would have been recommitted.

There is a minor amendment in the nature of legislation which provides for the establishment of a meteorological station in the State of Montana, and makes an annual appropriation of $10,000 therefor, which the Senator in charge of the bill has been requested by the committee to offer from the floor. No other amendment embracing legislation will be offered by the Senator having the bill in charge.

Mr. CLARK. That was precisely the purpose of my inquiry—to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether it is the intention of the committee to offer, on behalf of the committee, any amendments creating new offices or involving a real legislative change.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Missouri is advised that no such amendment could possibly be involved, unless it be the amendment in which the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is interested, providing for the establishment of a meteorological station to attempt to safeguard against forest fires.

Mr. CLARK. I have no objection, and I am certain no Member of the Senate has any objection, to that amendment. What I was trying to guard against was what happened in the last session, when the office of Under Secretary of Agriculture was created by a committee amendment without what I regard as due notice to the Senate.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Missouri is on the floor and may object to any amendment that is offered. He is as familiar with the rules as any other Member of this body, and much more familiar with them than is the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I do not expect to bring this matter before the Senate, but there has been a great deal of criticism of the county agents in the Extension Service acting as secretaries of the various corn-hog committees. I therefore ask that the testimony of Dr. Warburton, commencing on page 37 of the Senate committee hearings on the bill and ending on page 40, be inserted in the RECORD at this point, so as to show the position of the Department with reference to this particular phase of the work.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SERVICE OF COUNTY AGENTS IN A. A. A. ACTIVITIES

Senator DICKINSON. Dr. Warburton, what percentage of the time of the county agents in the Extension Service is now being taken up with the expansion and direction and activities of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration?

Dr. WARBURTON. That varies greatly, Senator DICKINSON, according to the importance of the adjustment effort in the particular county. In the Iowa counties, for instance, where on the average 1,700 corn-hog contracts were written, necessarily a very considerable portion of the time of the county agent is taken up with that work.

Senator DICKINSON. What is the reason for the county agent being selected as the secretary of these corn-hog committees in the various counties?

Dr. WARBURTON. The corn-hog associations, as well as other production-control associations, elect their own officers; and in Iowa a considerable number of the county associations have elected the county agent as the secretary of the association. That is accomplished by free vote of the members of those associations.

Senator DICKINSON. The suggestion I wanted to make was that either your Extension Service is not of any value, or it is being absolutely laid aside and subrogated to the A. A. A. program. I know of no reason why the corn-hog committee in a county in Iowa or any other State should not select its own secretary, and let the county agent do the Extension Service work that he used to do.

Either you must admit that your Extension Service work was not of value, or you must admit that the work is being absolutely laid aside and nothing is being done on your extension work, and you are giving your whole time to the economic end of the problem, rather than the educational and scientific end of it that was formerly the duty of the county agent.

Dr. WARBURTON. I certainly would not admit, and I think you would not admit, that the Extension Service has been of no value.

Senator DICKINSON. No; I do not admit it, and I want you to think about the offering of an amendment here which will provide that none of the funds appropriated in this bill shall go to pay the salary of a county agent who gives any of his time to the A. A. A. program.

Senator O'MAHONEY. Would not that tend to increase the expenditure?

Senator DICKINSON. No; it does not tend to increase it at all. Why? What they are doing is diverting the county agent's salary over to the A. A. A. program and neglecting the Extension Service work and saving the A. A. A. the expense of doing what they ought to do, and that is to select their own secretaries and pay them.

Dr. WARBURTON. I know of nothing that would more quickly wreck the Extension Service than such a prohibition as the Senator suggests.

A little less than 2 years ago, when the Agricultural Adjustment Act was passed, the question was raised as to whether the Extension Service should provide the field representation for the Adjustment Administration. The Extension Service had a wide-spread organization with representatives in the larger part of the agricultural counties in the United States. There was no comparable organization in, I think, any other Government activity. There was no other agency which could so quickly have presented the plans of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration to the farmers of the country. If the Agricultural Adjustment Administration had not used the Extension Service and had set up an organization wholly of its own, paralleling the Extension Service, the net result would have been very generally that the farm people of the country would have said, "There are just too many Federal agents in this county; and the one that we can do something about getting rid of is the extension agent, because we pay part of his salary."

Senator DICKINSON. You are playing right into their hands by admitting that the county agent is not worth anything as an extension agent, and therefore he becomes an economic agent of the corn-hog man.

Dr. WARBURTON. Not at all, Senator. The Adjustment Administration is putting into effect agricultural economics in a way that the Extension Service has not been able to do. We have been talking for years about the agricultural outlook, trying to get farmers to produce in accordance with prospective demand; but on that we have not been able to accomplish a great deal. We have had some effect on production. The Adjustment Administration, through the production-control contracts, has made a definite effort to accomplish something along that line; and in some counties I admit that a very considerable part of the county agent's time has been taken up with the adjustment effort. That has been time that has been well used by the extension agents; and, for one thing, it has given the extension agents opportunity to contact a very large number of farmers who never came near their offices before. They have a very much wider acquaintance than they ever had before. They have shown the rural people that they are in a position to give them service, which opportunity they have not had to so great a degree at any previous time.

There is a very considerable demand on the part of the rural public for what we might call the old-line extension work, a desire on the part of the farm people of the country to have the extension agents get back to giving a much larger share of their time than they have given during the past year or year and a half to such things as insect control, the best ways of feeding livestock, advice on fertilizers, and all the other subjects on which many farmers have come to look to the extension agents for advice. We feel that there will be opportunity, during the next year or so, for the extension agents to give a much larger part of their time to the regular extension program, because in these production-control associations there are many thousands of farm people—committeemen, officers of the associations—who are much more familiar with the plans and procedure of the Adjustment Administration than was the case a couple of years ago.

Senator DICKINSON. The strongest answer to your argument is the fact that the counties got along just as well where the county agent was not made secretary of the control committee as they did where he was made secretary.

Dr. WARBURTON. Your view as to the county agent being secretary of the control association is entirely in accord with mine. I should very much prefer that the county agent not be secretary of the control association, just as I should prefer to insist that he not be the manager of a cooperative marketing association. However, the members of these county control associations in a considerable number of cases have elected the county agent as secretary, and it did not seem wise for us to say definitely that the county agent should not serve.

What I hope will develop, and develop rather promptly, is that, as farmers become more familiar with the operation of the Adjustment Administration, the county agents very largely will be replaced as secretaries.

Senator DICKINSON. Why not replace them this year? There is a committee in every county. They know what the business is. There is no reason why they should not select their own party and pay him in their own way. What this really amounts to is a diversion of a large amount of money from the educational and scientific work of the Extension Service.

What is the total amount that you pay out as county agents' salaries?

Dr. WARBURTON. The total of the county agents' salaries from Federal funds?

Senator DICKINSON. Of Federal funds; yes.

Dr. WARBURTON. The total Federal appropriation for extension work going to the States is about $9,000,000. I cannot say offhand what proportion of that goes into salaries of county agricultural agents.

Senator DICKINSON. About half of it, does it not?

Dr. WARBURTON. Probably half of it.

Senator DICKINSON. Somewhere around there. All right. What it means, then, is that you are diverting from the educational and scientific work of the Extension Service $4,000,000 worth of service over the adjustment program, which is presumed to finance itself; so it means, indirectly, that you are financing this work out of regular appropriations.

Dr. WARBURTON. That depends entirely on how far you go in your proposed prohibition. If it looks only to a prohibition of the service of a county agent as secretary of a control association, that is a comparatively small matter. If you forbid a county agent to have anything to do with the adjustment program, giving any information about it, or assisting in any way with the adjustment program, that is a very different matter. On the whole, a comparatively small number of county agents are now serving as secretaries of control associations.

Senator DICKINSON. Can you give me that number?

Mr. WARBURTON. I cannot give you the number for the entire country. I know that by far the larger part of the county agents in Iowa happen to be serving in that way. In some States there are no county agents whatever who are serving as secretaries of control associations.

There are conditions under which the service of the county agent as secretary of the control association is desirable.

Senator DICKINSON. I would like to know what they are.

Mr. WARBURTON. I am thinking particularly of the counties which have a comparatively small membership in those associations, counties which are in very poor financial shape, which cannot support from county funds the employment of a county agent, and if the county agent serves as secretary of the control association, the control association provides the local cooperation in the employment of the agent which normally would be provided from county funds. There are some counties which have been unable, or which have refused, to make appropriations for county agents. In order to have a county agent there we have accepted a contribution from the control association, and in return for that have permitted the county agent to serve as secretary of the association.

Senator DICKINSON. Is that common?

Dr. WARBURTON. That is not the basis for such service in a State like Iowa. That is more common in the Dakotas and in some of the Montana counties than I think in any other part of the country. It is not a general practice.

Senator WHEELER. Counties in eastern Montana have been so hard hit it has been impossible for them to contribute anything to the county agents.

Dr. WARBURTON. The same is true in the Dakotas and in some of the Nebraska counties.

Senator RUSSELL. Referring to the bottom of the page, line 21, adding $6,000 to the salary limitation on Extension Service, that will not be necessary unless the appropriation for the agricultural exhibit at fairs were included.

Mr. JUMP. Yes. It is a contingent amendment, dependent upon the action taken on the major amendment there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be continued.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Bureau of Plant Industry", on page 32, line 12, after the word "control", to strike out "$36,635" and insert "$136,635, of which $100,000 shall be expended in connection with State agricultural colleges for scientific investigation concerning control and eradication of weeds", so as to read:

Botany: For investigation, improvement, and utilization of wild plants and grazing lands, and for determining the distribution of weeds and means of their control, $136,635, of which $100,000 shall be expended in connection with State agricultural colleges for scientific investigation concerning control and eradication of weeds.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

On page 32, line 14, after the word "of" and just before the word "weeds", I move to insert "binder weed, bind weed, and other noxious", so that, if amended, it will read:

Investigation concerning control and eradication of binder weed, bind weed, and other noxious weeds.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no objection to that amendment. I think it will carry out the intention of the committee perhaps better than the verbiage contained in the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, now that the amendment as amended, has been adopted, I desire to say just a few words. I do this mainly for the purpose of placing the facts in the RECORD. I thought I had here the material which I wished to put in, but I find that I do not have it, so I shall have to rely upon my memory to state the facts.

I desire to place in the RECORD something in relation to this particular amendment in order that the conferees may have it before them when they come to consider the amendment.

Among the many pests of agriculture there is now one which in a way is comparatively new, and that is the bind weed. People generally, at least outside of the Missouri Valley and the Middle West, do not understand exactly what it is, and a great many of those people have not yet come in contact with it. It is one of the worst pests I know to the farmer and to agriculture; and this year in particular, when the farmers all through that part of the country have been suffering, the probabilities are that on account of the drought itself this dangerous pest, called "bind weed", will be scattered over a large portion of the country which so far has not been bothered with it.

The bind weed is a weed looking something like the morning glory. It takes full possession of farm lands when it gets started. It will grow in wet weather and in dry weather. The drought has had no effect upon it. When land becomes infested with the weed, and it covers the land, the land becomes practically useless. So far, no method of extermination has been devised that is practical for the farmer to use.

Twenty States in the Middle West are now infested with this weed. It spreads by seed and also by its roots. The bind-weed plant grows out 15 feet from the place where it starts, so, when it is full grown, it covers a radius of 30 feet; and when the weed once covers the soil it costs more to eradicate the weed and get rid of it thoroughly than most soils are worth.

This amendment is intended to enable the Federal Government to assist the States in discovering, if possible, some more economical method of exterminating this weed.

Estimates very carefully made in the State of Kansas show that, although a comparatively small number of acres, considering the entire State, are infested, to exterminate the bind weed existing in Kansas by methods now known would cost $8,000,000 and take 10 years. The chemical which must be used to kill it is too expensive.

Perhaps the most practical method employed by farmers in exterminating bind weed has been intense cultivation, using a cultivator shovel which spreads out, with very sharp edges which cut the weed off. It grows again, however, and has to be cut off several times. It takes 2 years of such active cultivation to kill bind weed and exterminate it. During the 2 years the farmer loses the use of his land.

Loan companies at this time are refusing to make loans on land where it is known to be infested with this pest. The Federal Government refuses to lend on such farms. The Federal farm-loan banks will not lend money now upon land so infested.

There was recently held in the city of Washington a sort of a convention, attended by farmer delegates from Wisconsin, Illinois, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas, and, I think, from some other States. Those delegates earnestly urged the scientific men of the Department of Agriculture to devise some way by which the destruction of this pest could be made more economical and more effectual.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. It was the hope, in offering this amendment, that there could be set up a special subdivision on weed eradication.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. And that, doing so, the Department would put experts in position to work in conjunction with the agricultural colleges of the various States in the Middle West.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the idea.

Mr. DICKINSON. For that reason, the amendment provided that the work was to be done in cooperation with the State agricultural colleges.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. The next weed they seem to have in mind is what is known as the "creeping Jennie", which is another very obnoxious weed, and which practically eliminates a crop where it once infests the land.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; it is almost impossible to get rid of it.

Mr. President, I simply desired to call attention to this bind weed because it is a comparatively new pest. I wanted to call this to the attention of the Congress, and especially to the attention of the member of the committee who will be on the conference committee, so that he will understand the seriousness of this particular amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I am much impressed by the Senator's argument, and will endeavor to see that the amendment is retained in the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. In what kind of soil does this weed grow?

Mr. NORRIS. It will grow in almost any soil.

Mr. FLETCHER. Sandy soil or rich soil?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; in dry soil or wet soil.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I do not like to ask anything unusual, but the Committee on Finance is meeting, and I am very anxious to go to the meeting. Will not the Senator permit me at this time to offer an amendment, which is very simple in its nature, and with which I think the Senator is familiar?

Mr. RUSSELL. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. On page 33, line 18, after the numerals "$290,346", I move to insert a comma and the following words, "of which at least $7,500 shall be available for the continuation of the Mississippi-Alabama experiment station at West Point, Miss."

This amendment merely calls for $7,500. It does not increase the appropriation in the aggregate, but merely makes it possible for this experiment station to continue. There is a condition in Mississippi affecting farm crops such as grains. The station has been of wonderful benefit to the section of the State where it is located, and I hope the Senator will permit the amendment to go into the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no objection to having the matter go to conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 33, line 18, after the numerals "$290,346", it is proposed to insert the words "of which at least $7,500 shall be available for the continuation of the Mississippi-Alabama experiment station at West Point, Miss.", so as to read:

Forage crops and diseases: For the purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of new and rare seeds; for the investigation and improvement of grasses, alfalfa, clover, and other forage crops, including the investigation and control of diseases, $290,346, of which at least $7,500 shall be available for the continuation of the Mississippi-Alabama experiment station at West Point, Miss.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 1, after the figures "$406,435", to insert a comma and "of which sum not exceeding $20,000 shall be used for experimenting in Sea Island cotton", so as to read:

Cotton and other fiber crops and diseases: For investigation of the production of cotton and other fiber crops, including the improvement by cultural methods, breeding, and selection, fiber yield and quality, and the control of diseases, $406,435, of which sum not exceeding $20,000 shall be used for experimenting in Sea Island cotton.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 12, after the word "storage", to strike out "$1,151,192" and insert "$1,178,692", so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Public Roads—Federal-Aid Highway System", on page 69, after line 16, to insert:

For the survey, construction, reconstruction, and maintenance of main roads through unappropriated or unreserved public lands, nontaxable Indian lands, or other Federal reservations other than the forest reservations, under the provisions of the act of June 24, 1930 (46 Stat. 805), and as authorized by section 6 of the Highway Act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 994), $2,500,000, to be immediately available and remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 70, to strike out:

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY HIGHWAY FUNDS

For emergency construction of public highways and other related projects in accordance with section 1 of the act entitled "An act to increase employment by authorizing an appropriation to provide for emergency construction of public highways and related projects, and to amend the Federal Aid Road Act, approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes", approved June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 993), the sum of $100,000,000 (being the remainder of the amount of $200,000,000 authorized to be appropriated by section I of such act) shall be made immediately available for the foregoing purposes from the appropriation in section 1 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 and continue available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, at the end of line 25, to increase the total appropriation for the Bureau of Public Roads, from $48,559,256.14 to $51,059,256.14.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 8, before the word "condition" to strike out "and/or" and insert "and"; so as to read:

Market inspection of farm products: For enabling the Secretary of Agriculture, independently and in cooperation with other branches of the Government, State agencies, purchasing and consuming organizations, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, or other associations of business men or trade organizations, and persons or corporations engaged in the production, transportation, marketing, and distribution of farm and food products, whether operating in one or more jurisdictions, to investigate and certify to shippers and other interested parties the class, quality, and condition of cotton, tobacco, fruits, and vegetables, whether raw, dried, or canned, poultry, butter, hay, and other perishable farm products when offered for interstate shipment or when received at such important central markets as the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time designate, or at points which may be conveniently reached therefrom, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, including payment of such fees as will be reasonable and as nearly as may be to cover the cost for the service rendered: Provided, That certificates issued by the authorized agents of the Department shall be received in all courts of the United States as prima facie evidence of the truth of the statements therein contained, $431,203.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Food and Drug Administration", on page 83, line 19, after the word "therein", to strike out "$1,515,879" and insert "$1,765,879", so as to read:

Enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act: For enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act of June 30, 1906 (U. S. C., title 21, secs. 1–15), entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated, or misbranded, or poisonous, or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes"; to cooperate with associations and scientific societies in the revision of the United States Pharmacopoeia and development of methods of analysis, and for investigating the character of the chemical and physical tests which are applied to American food products in foreign countries, and for inspecting the same before shipment when desired by the shippers or owners of these products intended for countries where chemical and physical tests are required before the said products are allowed to be sold therein, $1,765,879.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, line 7, before the words "of which", to strike out "$1,943,637" and insert "$2,193,637"; in the same line, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$595,262" and insert "$662,352"; and in line 9, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$21,860" and insert "$30,740", so as to read:

Total, Food and Drug Administration, $2,193,637, of which amount not to exceed $662,352 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, and not to exceed $30,740 shall be available for the purchase of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles necessary in the conduct of field work outside the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Forest roads and trails", on page 90, line 3, after the figures "1934", to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall, upon the approval of this act, apportion and prorate among the several States, Alaska, and Puerto Rico, as provided in section 23 of said Federal Highway Act, the sum of $10,000,000 authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, by the act approved June 18, 1934: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall incur obligations, approve projects, or enter into contracts under his apportionment and prorating of this authorization, and his action in so doing shall be deemed a contractual obligation on the part of the Federal Government for the payment of the cost thereof: Provided further, That total expenditures on account of any State or Territory shall at no time exceed its authorized apportionment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 91, after line 9, to insert:

SEC. 2. No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used for the payment of personal services or for the maintenance of any activity not specifically authorized by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That concludes the committee amendments.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate a matter on which the committee has spent considerable time. It has to do with the language found on page 4, commencing with the word "Provided", on line 11.

There was a good deal of discussion in the committee as to the purpose and propriety of this proviso. The various conflicting ideas in regard to it have now been reconciled, and I think I can speak for the entire committee when I move to strike from the bill the language found on page 4, commencing with the word "Provided", in line 11, down to the word "purposes", in line 24.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 4, line 11, to strike out the proviso, as follows:

Provided further, That no part of the funds appropriated by this act shall be used for the payment of the salary of any officer or employee of the Department of Agriculture who as such officer or employee, or on behalf of the Department of Agriculture, issues or causes to be issued or to be made public any written statement which advocates reduced consumption of, or which asserts that it is harmful or undesirable to use, any wholesome agricultural food commodity or any manufacture thereof; but this proviso shall not apply to any assertion that an article is adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, as amended, or to the issue or publication of any suggested balanced diet for food or feed purposes.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will not the able Senator from Georgia be good enough to explain the ends to be achieved by the motion? As I understand the language proposed to be stricken, I am in sympathy with the purpose of the motion, but I should like to have the RECORD show the reasons for it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I do not know that I could state the effect of the motion as it might appeal to the minds of the members of the committee, for there was a wide difference of opinion as to what the language proposed to be stricken out meant, as well as to the effect of the proviso. The construction I placed upon it was that no part of the funds appropriated by this bill should be used to pay the salary of any officer or employee of the Department of Agriculture who, as such officer or employee, or on behalf of the Department of Agriculture, issued or caused to be made public any statement, oral or written, which advocated the reduced consumption of or which asserted that it was harmful or undesirable to use any wholesome agricultural food commodity or any manufacture thereof. The last clause relaxed this prohibition somewhat, however, and provided that the restriction should not apply to the issue or publication of any balanced diet for food or feed purposes.

The controversy originally arose, I understand, through the belief of certain milling interests, and others interested in the production and consumption of wheat in this country, that various bulletins being issued by the Bureau of Home Economics, particularly those for the use of relief organizations and also prescribing a balanced diet for families within various income ranges, had a tendency to reduce the consumption of wheat in the United States.

The Secretary of Agriculture appeared before the committee, with the expert at the head of the Bureau of Home Economics, and asserted that that would not be the effect of the use of the diets suggested; that if, as a matter of fact, these diets could be placed in all of the homes in the country, the result would be an enormous increase in the consumption of wheat. There was one school of thought in the committee in favor of striking out this language in its entirety because they thought it was an improper restriction on an important department of Government in the performance of a duty which had been delegated to it by law.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It was, if I recall correctly, testified with reference to information disseminated by the Department of Agriculture that if the suggested balanced diets were generally used there would be consumed at least two and one-half billion pounds more of wheat flour and cereals annually than in the period 1931–33.

Mr. RUSSELL. Not only did the Secretary of Agriculture make that statement, but if the Senator from Colorado will read the entire record he will find that other experts testified that would be the effect of a wide use of the bulletin which this provision sought to suppress. They expressed the opinion the effect of the diet would be to increase the use of wheat and cereals.

As I have stated, and as the Senator from Colorado, perhaps, did not understand, all the parties in interest have now agreed that the inclusion of this language in the bill can serve no useful purpose, and I move that it be stricken.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not understand just what the Senator's purpose is. What does the Senator propose to strike out?

Mr. RUSSELL. It is proposed to strike all of the language on page 4, commencing with the word "Provided", in line 11, down to and including the word "purposes", in line 24; in other words, to strike out any reference whatever to a limitation upon the Bureau of Home Economics or any other branch or department of Government in carrying out the duties and functions which are imposed upon them by law.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If I understand the motion, the effect of it will be to permit the dissemination by the Department of Agriculture of the results of scientific research?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Colorado is eminently correct.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to express my hearty accord with the amendment which the Senator in charge of the bill has offered, not only as it relates to the particular controversy which has arisen but because I believe that if a provision of this type were permitted to be written into the agricultural appropriation bill, we should find other interests in the country requesting similar provisions regarding other departments of the Government; and ultimately it might result in the complete abandonment of all the scientific research which has been carried on by the various departments of the Government and the dissemination of information of a useful character to the citizens of this country.

I certainly hope the Senate conferees will insist upon this amendment if it should prevail.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is the last inquiry I expect to make.

In confirmation of what the able Senator from Georgia has said, and what has just been stated by my friend the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], is it not true that if this clause were permitted to remain in the bill, and the bill were to become law, there would be interference under the law with the practice of the Department of Agriculture of disseminating information, such as that with respect to the effects of certain food on pellagra, or the importance of milk to children and expectant mothers? It is my understanding that there was testimony before the committee supporting the apprehension that such information, unless the language being discussed is stricken, could not be distributed by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. RUSSELL. Some opinion was expressed to the effect that that would be the result of the language. However, it was my personal opinion that the last clause of the proviso which is proposed to be stricken would have permitted the publication of the bulletins in question without regard to the other language of the proviso, because it specifically excepts "the issue or publication of any suggested balanced diet for food or feed purposes."

However, I hold to the opinion expressed by the able Senator from Colorado that it is entirely proper that the entire provision should be stricken from the bill, that it constitutes an improper limitation on a most important agency of Government which is now serving a very useful purpose in promoting the public health, and otherwise protecting the interests of all concerned.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am very happy to join with the Senator in this matter.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I am sure, very sure, that it would be a great pity if we attempted to place any limitations on the Department in giving advice to expectant mothers and to the people generally. I hope the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in order again to make a record so that the conferees may have it, I desire to add my approval to that of the Senator in charge of the bill, and put into the RECORD a reference to some very interesting results of investigations which have been brought about on account of this language having originally been put into the bill by the House. It was inserted under what I believe to have been a false theory on the part of those who suggested it who were of the opinion that a certain bulletin, no. 296, providing for diets, would, if given publicity, have the result of decreasing the amount of wheat that might be sold or that might be used. A great many people, including millers and some farmers who were opposed to that suggestion, found fault, I think unjustly, with this particular bulletin.

The various organizations all over the United States who are interested in health and the protection of health, and in economy in housekeeping, have taken up this matter; and I desire to put into the RECORD the names of some of the organizations which have given study to it, and, as a result of their study, have asked that this language be stricken out of the bill.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to ask the Senator if any criticism was made of the diets suggested as to their effect on health.

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. GERRY. The criticisms were purely to the effect that activities along this line were not advisable financially from the standpoint of those who grow wheat?

Mr. NORRIS. That is all. I do not believe anyone would accuse me, for instance, of trying to work against the wheat farmers. I am in entire sympathy with them; but I should not be in favor of advising a diet which had too much wheat in it, even though it did result in the financial benefit of all those who produced wheat.

Mr. GERRY. Anyone who knows the Senator of course knows that to be true.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I wish to say that there is nothing in these publications which seeks to reduce the consumption of wheat. The discussion was wholly about how much better it is to balance wheat with other articles of food. So, even the wheat farmer need have no complaint about that.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think the wheat farmer is going to lose; but it is a question far beyond that of financial benefit to anyone. The organizations to which I referred are the American Association of University Women, the American Diet Association, the American Home Economics Association, the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, the National League of Women Voters, and the National Woman's Trade Union League. They have all studied this matter and have all reached the same conclusion.

I desire to have printed in the RECORD an article, which, while rather lengthy, is one to which I have given my most careful consideration, and I commend it to those who are interested in a fair discussion of this question. It is an article prepared and issued on behalf of the American Home Economics Association, room 620, Mills Building, Washington, D. C. I ask unanimous consent that the document be printed at this place in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SUMMARY

An amendment attached to the agricultural appropriation bill at the instigation of a few milling and baking interests would prevent any employee of the Department of Agriculture from giving information that might be construed as advocating reduced consumption of any wholesome food product.

The amendment is based on allegations by these interests that a circular published by the Bureau of Home Economics advocates reduced consumption of wheat products in the United States.

The amendment should not be passed by Congress for several very important reasons:

1. The circular in question does not advocate reduced consumption of wheat. On the contrary, if its recommendations were carried out in accordance with what people can afford to eat in the United States on the basis of existing income distribution, America would consume a considerably larger quantity of flour and cereals than it now consumes.

2. Certain milling and baking interests have deliberately twisted one aspect of the circular to suit their argument. In the dietary plans presented for people at different income levels, milk, vegetables, fruits, meat, and eggs are shown in increased quantities at the top level. Because the size of the human stomach is limited, this means a reduced quantity of grain products. But it represents what actually happens when families have comfortable incomes and cannot be regarded in any sense as "propaganda" against wheat.

3. The material in the circular is based entirely on the work of the world's recognized authorities in nutrition, and the circular itself is a valuable and useful contribution in this field.

4. It is conservative and scientific and has nothing to do with dietary fads, as organized interests allege.

5. Considered from any angle, its dietary suggestions would result in increased consumption of important agricultural products, and therefore are in the interest of farmers, not opposed to them, as alleged.

6. Carrying on research and disseminating information about human and animal nutrition is a necessary function of the Department of Agriculture. Like medical research, it is for the benefit of the people as a whole. The purpose of the amendment is to cripple this work for the sake of supposed interest of a small but powerful commercial group. This is as indefensible as crippling research in medicine for similar selfish reasons.

7. Although the final clause in this amendment nullifies its provisions to a considerable extent, its purpose and tendency is still to cripple the legitimate work of scientists. To let the amendment stand would be to open the door for other private interests to attempt the same kind of dictation and regimentation of scientific activities.

Proposed and sponsored by certain milling and baking interests, an amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill has been pushed to successful passage in the House of Representatives. It is now being considered by the Senate.

The acknowledged aim of the amendment is to hamstring nutrition work and suppress the giving of information about nutrition.

The Government agencies chiefly affected are the Bureau of Home Economics, the Extension Service, and land-grant colleges receiving Federal aid, all of which carry on work in this field for the benefit of consumers, and the various agencies in the Department of Agriculture that carry on work in animal nutrition for the benefit of farmers and consumers.

The reasons for defeating this amendment are overwhelming and unanswerable. These reasons are briefly presented herewith.

THE SCIENCE OF NUTRITION IN THREE SENTENCES

Working hand in hand with modern medicine, the science of nutrition in modern times has made splendid contributions to lessening mortality in early life, increasing the average expectancy of life, reducing the ravages of disease, making better health possible for children and adults, and, in the field of animal nutrition, greatly increasing the productiveness of farm animals, helping farmers to keep animals in vigorous, healthy condition.

These achievements are based on three simple facts, the first of which was a startling discovery only a few years ago:

1. Certain elements in foods are absolutely essential for life, physical well-being, and protection against disease; and certain foods must be eaten in large enough amounts to give the body a sufficient supply of these elements.

2. The stomach of man or animal is limited in size.

3. Therefore, in order to achieve the proper balance and get enough of certain wholesome foods, it is necessary to limit the quantity of other wholesome foods eaten.

Stripped of all complex details, this is the sum and substance of the whole modern science of nutrition, which has been potent in its effects on human welfare.

WHAT THE AMENDMENT PROHIBITS

Fact no. 3 above presents an inescapable dilemma that follows from the limited size of the stomach. No scientist, teacher, doctor, nurse, or anyone else can give advice of any sort about nutrition and avoid this dilemma.

But the amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill, in its first clause, expressly prohibits a Department of Agriculture employee from issuing or making public any statement, orally or in writing, that might be construed as advocating reduced consumption of "any wholesome agricultural food commodity or any manufacture thereof."

What would this mean in specific cases?

In the homes of ignorant people children sicken and die from the wrong kind of diet—that is, eating too much of certain essentially wholesome foods, too little of others. Department of Agriculture employees would not be allowed to tell parents how this could be remedied.

Sugar is fatal to people with diabetes. No Department of Agriculture employee would be allowed to say so, orally or in writing. It would result in reduced consumption of a wholesome food.

People with tuberculosis or threatened with tuberculosis or people suffering from anemia need considerable quantities of certain foods. The diet in specific cases may need to be changed completely. No Government employee could advise this, however, even if life depended on it, because it might mean reducing the consumption of some wholesome foods in favor of others.

In the South pellagra is common in some areas. It is caused entirely by deficiencies in the diet—too much salt pork, molasses, and corn, too little of other necessary foods. But for a Government employee to say so or to advocate a diet that would wipe out pellagra would be against the law. For salt pork, molasses, and corn are all wholesome foods.

Expectant and nursing mothers need increased quantities of milk and other foods if they are to safeguard their own health and have healthy children. In a great many, perhaps most cases, this means changes in the diet and eating less of some things that are perfectly wholesome in themselves. A Government employee would be unable to advise expectant mothers how to change their diet.

Nor would any Government employee be able to advise farmers how to feed their animals in order to get increased production of milk, eggs, pork, beef, at less expense. Such advice involves advocating less of one wholesome product, more of another.

SINISTER IMPLICATIONS OF THE AMENDMENT

These are not extreme or isolated examples. Some of them are in line with the everyday work of the Department of Agriculture. And this kind of work has been considered vital to the needs of the people whom the Department is supposed to serve.

Perhaps the interests that framed the amendment to the appropriations bill did not have these specific things in mind. They could not have realized the absurdities to which their amendment would lead. But the fact is that the amendment has these far-reaching implications.

Workers in the Department of Agriculture and in the Public Health Service and doctors in the Army and the Navy have a splendid record of achievement in fighting diseases and disabilities that attack men and animals alike. Some of these men and women have been on the dramatic frontiers of science, among the hunger fighters, and the microbe hunters. This kind of work is directly menaced by such legislation as this amendment, intended solely to gratify a small but powerful commercial group.

It is fair to believe that the amendment is only an entering wedge. If it is finally passed by Congress other groups will rightly consider that the way is open for them to come and do likewise.

Impartial scientific work in the public welfare is often in apparent conflict with certain special interests. The principle at stake is whether these interests shall dictate what may and what may not be done in this work.

MORE WHEAT—NOT LESS

The question naturally arises: What is the basis for the amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill? Why was it proposed and pushed with all the adroit propaganda certain milling interests could command?

The reason advanced by millers and bakers is that the Bureau of Home Economics has been advocating reduced consumption of wheat products. Specifically, they object to Circular 296, published by the Bureau, and called "Diets at Four Levels of Nutritive Content and Cost."

A brief analysis of this circular, which suggests healthful dietary plans for American families in accordance with what they can afford to eat, will be presented later. But here it can be said unequivocally and categorically that the circular does not and is not intended to advocate reduced consumption of wheat products.

On the contrary, analysis of the material in the circular shows that if the American people as a whole lived up to its dietary suggestions for different income levels we would consume at least two and one-half billion pounds more wheat flour and cereals annually than we did consume anunally in 1931-33.

For three-fourths of the American people the circular suggests a greater consumption of these products than is the case at present.

Whether deliberately or not, millers have overlooked or failed to present this aspect of the circular. They have concentrated on another aspect and used this to convince Members of Congress that the Bureau of Home Economics carries on propaganda against wheat products.

All this has nothing to do with the principles involved in the controversy. But it adds an ironical note. Some commercial group other than the millers might readily raise a hue and cry against the Bureau of Home Economics for carrying on propaganda in favor of wheat at the expense of the particular product of that group. This would be precisely as justifiable as the assertions of the millers. It all depends on what commercial interest is interpreting the material.

Repressive legislation, in favor of conflicting private interests, inevitably leads to absurdities of this sort. The scientist is left to twiddle his thumbs. There is nothing he can say without offending somebody.

WHAT CIRCULAR 296 DOES

The circular under attack was prepared to assist people in planning food purchases so as to have a sound, healthy diet, no matter what the income level. To do this involved three things:

1. Summarizing modern knowledge of nutrition, using accepted facts gathered from the world's recognized authorities.

2. Translating this technical knowledge into terms of everyday foods available to the consumer.

3. Suggesting dietary plans based on food costs, so that a family might fit its meals to its pocketbook and at the same time be sure of safeguarding health.

Four broad dietary plans were suggested, with cost as the limiting factor:

1. A restricted diet, for emergency use—suitable for families at the lowest income level; perhaps, at present, those with incomes of $800 to $900 a year.

2. An adequate diet, at minimum cost—suitable, at present food prices, for families with incomes of around $1,000 to $2,500 a year.

3. An adequate diet, at moderate cost—suitable for families with incomes roughly approximating $2,500 to $3,800 a year.

4. A liberal diet—suitable for families with incomes of perhaps $4,000 a year and up.

Information that reliably correlates diet with food costs is difficult to obtain. At the same time, it is the one thing consumers most want to know, since it answers the housewife's pressing question: "How can we be sure of getting healthful meals with the money we have available for food?" Circular 296 is recognized by authorities as an exceptionally thorough job and a sorely needed contribution in this field.

Statistics on income distribution show that—

More than 75 percent of the American people cannot afford to spend more for food than is needed for the two lower-cost dietary plans.

Less than 25 percent can afford to spend enough for the two higher-cost plans.

About 10 percent can afford the most expensive dietary plan.

WHAT CIRCULAR 296 DOES NOT DO

It recommends nb food fads and no dietary extremes. Advocates of the amendment have persistently asserted that it does. But reputable nutritionists are as opposed to fads and extremes as reputable physicians. The information given in the circular is drawn entirely from, and checks with, the work of reputable nutritionists outside the Bureau of Home Economics.

It attempts no regimentation of diet. Proponents of the amendment have asserted that it does this also. On the contrary, the dietary plans are purposely made so flexible in the choice of specific foods that they can be used by people of any nationality, or in any section of the United States, to plan meals that fit familiar tastes and habits. Foods are divided into broad groups only, and the proportions between these groups balance the diet.

It does not advocate reduced consumption of wheat products. At the lower income levels grain products are given a larger place in the diet than is common in America, and the circular stresses their importance as the backbone of any economical diet. At the higher income levels there are increasing amounts of milk, vegetables, fruits, meat, and eggs. The quantity of grain products is therefore necessarily less.

The amounts of milk, vegetables, fruits, meat, and eggs suggested at the higher levels are based entirely on the findings and recommendations of leading modern nutritionists, and check with their published technical material.

But quite aside from nutrition, it is well known that with a more liberal income people naturally tend to eat more of these products and less grain.

The contrast is strikingly illustrated by the diet of a Chinese coolie compared with that of an American miller. The coolie lives almost entirely on grain—rice. The miller does not—and presumably he is healthier and happier for it. Similarly, a poor East Indian is content to wear nothing but a loin cloth. A United States miller would be unhappy under these circumstances.

To recognize tendencies such as this is plain common sense and has nothing to do with propaganda. It is also good business sense. To the extent that business men fume over such everyday facts, they impair their judgment and efficiency, ruin their digestions, and spoil their enjoyment of life.

HOW THE UPPER TENTH EATS

The liberal diet offers the greatest variety of any of the four plans. The foods included are also the most costly—for example, there is provision for a liberal use of meat, which is expensive in comparison with bread and many other foods.

But comparison with actual family expenditures shows that the liberal diet is closely in line with what people at this income level ordinarily buy. In other words, it suggests no radical departure from the dietary habits of people with comfortable incomes.

It contains the largest amounts of the elements that spell resistance to disease and maximum all-round health. In that sense it is a desirable diet, and nutritionists would repudiate everything modern science teaches if they did not say so.

But by the same token, trips to Bermuda or Florida, vacations in the mountains and at the seashore, and an occasional world tour are all desirable for human beings, and they doubtless conduce to good health. The Bureau of Home Economics would not seriously consider recommending them, however, to the average person who comes to the Government for advice about troublesome everyday problems.

The parallel with these dietary plans is very close. It will be a long time before any large proportion of Americans could possibly afford the kind of meals that only people earning at least $4,000 a year—less than 10 percent of the population—can now afford. By that time the present generation in the milling industry and the Department of Agriculture will very likely have been forgotten.

The Bureau of Home Economics points out that the liberal diet is desirable for anyone who can afford to spend this much for food, and that it is in line with the way people who can afford it do eat. That is all the Bureau says. Is this what has aroused the enmity of milling interests to the point where they wish to suppress dietary information?

MISLEADING ARGUMENTS

Certain arguments presented in favor of this amendment have greatly confused the issue. For example, authorities in the field of nutrition were asked whether they believed that a reduction in the quantity of wheat consumed by the American people is desirable. They answered, naturally, in the negative. It was then argued that this disproved the contentions of the Bureau of Home Economics.

It has been shown that the Bureau does not advocate a reduction but an increase in the consumption of wheat in America on the basis of dietary plans made to fit existing economic levels. Had the Bureau been asked the same question—which it was not—the answer would have been the same as that of the authorities outside the Government.

Efforts were also made to convince farmers that the recommendations of the Bureau are against their interests. As a matter of fact, improvements in the American dietary suggested by the Bureau would benefit not only grain farmers but all farmers, for—

1. Raising the dietary to the levels represented by the four plans, in accordance with present income distribution, would considerably increase the consumption of wheat products.

2. Adding more milk and meat to the dietary would not only greatly benefit dairy farmers, cattlemen, and hog farmers, it would also necessitate a corresponding increase in grain acreage to feed these animals.

With foreign markets as they are, anything that would tend to increase domestic consumption of major farm products is certainly not to be discouraged. To attempt to persuade farmers that the Bureau of Home Economics is working against their interests is a particularly gross and insidious falsification of the facts.

WHY THE AMENDMENT SHOULD BE DEFEATED

The final clause of the amendment, providing that it "shall not apply * * * to the issue or publication of any suggested balanced diet for food or feed purposes", was bitterly fought by the milling interests. Their opposition to it is final proof of their unalterable intention to destroy all efforts on the part of the Department of Agriculture to work for better nutrition for human beings or animals.

Exactly what lies behind this intention only the milling interests know.

The final clause certainly makes the amendment less objectionable. But its tendency and intent is still to tie the hands of impartial scientists working for human welfare and for the benefit of farmers and to limit the information they can give.

Farmers produce food for human beings and for animals. The problems of human and of animal nutrition cannot help being intimately bound up with the problems of agriculture. They always have been and they always will be. Some of the greatest contributions to modern knowledge in this field started with work done with animals to help farmers.

To permit small special groups to cripple this work in any degree would be as inexcusable as to permit them to cripple medical research. The object of both is to save lives, reduce suffering, and improve the lot of mankind. By comparison with these things the interests of special groups do not weigh in the balance.

Through all the biased pleading and adroit arguments this should be kept firmly in mind. It is the real issue at stake.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have a great deal of other literature which would be valuable; but it seems to me the article I have just submitted covers the ground rather fully, and I am content to leave the matter there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. From the Committee on Appropriations I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 19, after line 18, it is proposed to insert the following:

Meteorological station, western Montana: For the establishment, equipment, and maintenance of a meteorological station, upon a site to be selected by the Secretary, for western Montana, $10,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 45, line 9, it is proposed to strike out "$134,435" and insert "$174,435."

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to provide funds for carrying on certain experimental stations in Montana. For many years in the past great areas in that section have been plowed up and cultivated and subsequently abandoned. As a result, soil conditions are such that wind erosion is completely destroying large portions of that region.

In addition to that, various sections there have also been affected by overgrazing, and the Department have set up these experimental stations for the purpose of studying ways and means of correcting such conditions and saving the land.

The station to which I have particular reference is known as the "Northern Rocky Mountain Forest and Range Experiment Station." It has been in operation for many years and has conducted some very valuable investigations. It is necessary that that work be continued in order to safeguard against the conditions which are developing in the western section of the country.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, while the amendment was not presented to the Committee on Appropriation, I have no objection to its going to conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I offer an amendment to come in on page 88, line 11. I send the amendment to the desk and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 88, line 11, it is proposed to strike out "$281,362" and insert in lieu thereof "$531,362."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, this amendment will provide compensation, if I may so express it, for all the work that is being done in reforestation at the present time. The money will be used entirely for research work and for dealing in a research way with the problems which are facing our forest and range land. The amendment will provide for a work national in scope and will not be devoted to any particular section. The need for this amendment becomes apparent when it is realized that the small sum appropriated is divided into four different parts, and that the only money that will come to the research investigation in plant development in attempting to overcome soil erosion will be something like $17,000 a year.

I think that the chairman of the committee will not have objection to this amendment. In order that its purposes may be more fully explained, I ask that a statement be inserted in the RECORD at this point for consideration when the bill comes before the conferees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

The proposed amendment of $250,000 for soil-erosion investigations is for research on forest and range lands. This money would be used to expand and carry on the work now inadequately financed at various forest and range experiment stations throughout the United States. There are seven major regions where watershed investigations are badly needed to furnish basic information on which policies and programs of forest and range land management can be based.

Four of these regions are in the West, where the primary problem is the management of watersheds in order to provide for the delivery of maximum supplies of usable water for irrigation, power, and domestic use. Also, the problem of controlling destructive floods is of vital concern. These problems grow out of forest fires, overgrazing on large areas of range land, and destructive timber cutting.

Three of these regions are in the East, largely in the Mississippi River drainage. The problem is not one of water supplies, but of the control of excess silt-laden flood waters. Conservationists are becoming increasingly convinced, on the basis of research to date, that the most effective control is that which provides sufficient vegetation to check the water where it falls. The problem is so complex and so extensive that it will be adequately met only by considerable expansion of research.

Investigations have been under way in California for several years. These have shown the great importance that attaches to maintaining a good cover on chaparral-clothed slopes to prevent floods and destructive erosion. Similar investigations are needed in the forest-covered Sierras, where heavy cutting and destructive fires threaten expensive irrigation and power developments. Such investigations are all the more needed now that California is embarking upon a comprehensive scheme of water conservation in order to develop more adequately the latent agricultural values in the Great Valley. The proposed investigations would furnish the basis for proper watershed management on streams where water is extremely valuable both for irrigation and for domestic use.

Investigations have been under way in the intermountain region for several years studying the effect of mountain grassland cover on erosion and water delivery, especially on the Boise River irrigation project in southern Idaho and in central Utah. These have shown that as a result of destruction of the vegetative cover accelerated erosion and destructive floods have become more prevalent. They indicate relative value of different vegetative types in the areas studied in erosion control and water delivery. The studies of flood and erosion control in northern Utah, where large values are at stake, should be intensified. Also, intensive studies should be started on the Colorado River Watershed, where a preliminary survey shows more or less serious erosion and unsatisfactory water delivery on about 75 percent of the watershed north of the Arizona-Utah line.

Investigations in the Southwest, which have been under way for several years, on chaparral and semidesert forest and range lands show the importance of reestablishing a perennial grass cover on these semidesert lands. An adequate water supply is of vital concern to southwestern irrigation. Floods on the Rio Grande and on other rivers are often destructive. The investigations in Arizona need to be intensified, and similar intensive studies should be started on the Rio Grande Watershed in New Mexico.

In the northern Rocky Mountains at the headwaters of the Colorado River large areas of forests have been turned to brush fields by destructive fires. The proposal has been advanced that continued burning is necessary to prevent further fires. Several very destructive floods have occurred, however, from these brush-covered slopes following torrential rains of the last few years. Detailed investigations of the effect of forest and brush cover on behavior of streams is extremely important in the control of floods and the permanency of important engineering structures on the Columbia River.

The Southern Appalachian Mountains of Kentucky, Tennessee, and North Carolina are at the headwaters of many of the major tributaries of the Ohio River. Floods in these streams annually cause great property losses and occasionally loss of life. Most of these floods originate in these high mountains where rainfall is the heaviest in the eastern United States. The construction of the Norris Dam and other big developments on the Tennessee River make necessary that utmost efforts be made to control erosion and to regulate water supplies. This undoubtedly means that forestry will be called to play an even greater part than it has in the past and in safeguarding these investments. It is but natural, therefore, that investigations furnish the basis for such watershed management.

Although on a meager scale to date, the erosion stream-flow investigations in the South have furnished the basis for much of the emergency erosion-control work now carried on by numerous agencies in that region. One needs only to recall the flood disasters of the Cold Water River in northern Mississippi this year to realize the necessity for expanding the current investigations so as to provide for more adequate control of destructive floods and erosion. The Ouachita-Ozark Plateau is a region in which most of the destructive floods of the lower Mississippi River develop. Here repeated heavy rainfall on badly burned, heavily grazed, and destructively logged forest lands send huge volumes of soil-laden water into the Mississippi River. Investigations elsewhere have shown that through forest practices it would be possible to control the destructive powers of these storms, at least in part. Investigations therefore seem necessary in this region to furnish the basis for proper action to safeguard values threatened nearly every year in the lower Mississippi Valley.

Throughout the rolling lands of the lower Ohio River and other similar streams in the Central States region, fires, overcutting, grazing, and submarginal farming have reduced the forest to scattered open stands. It is believed these stands can be so improved as to have a marked bearing on water absorption, hence on floods, regularity of stream flow, abundance of ground water, and silting of streams. Investigations of this problem are urgently needed and should aid in an important manner in the rural rehabilitation of this area.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 91, after line 13, after the committee amendment heretofore agreed to, it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 3. That the processing tax authorized by Public Act No. 10, Seventy-third Congress, when levied upon cotton, shall be assessed and collected at the time that the goods are invoiced for sale by the processor.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I merely wish to explain in a few words the object of the amendment.

The processing tax upon cotton is levied at the time the bale of cotton is delivered to the processor. As a result, when under conditions in the cotton-textile industry such as now exist, the manufacturer is willing to operate his mill in order to afford employment to his operatives, even though he has no demand for the goods he is manufacturing, he is required on the delivery of the cotton to pay the tax to the collector of internal revenue. Then when he manufactures the goods and the goods are stored for 6 months the Government has the use of his money. In the case of every other tax of this kind the tax is collected and assessed at the time of the sale of the commodity. It should be collected from the cotton manufacturer at the time he sells or invoices his goods for sale. If that should be done, the Government would collect its money, but it would not collect it from the manufacturer months before he ever has an opportunity to sell his goods.

Just at this time some manufacturers are urging as a reason for shutting down their mills and putting operatives out of employment that they cannot continue to operate if they are forced to pay the tax at the moment the bale of cotton is delivered to the mill. I hope there will be no objection to the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina. I think it is very meritorious and will affect beneficially my State; but unfortunately, under the rules, I am forced to make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. I concede that the point of order applies, but in order that action may be taken I ask unanimous consent that rule XVI of the Senate be suspended in order that the amendment may be in order and may be offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina for unanimous consent that rule XVI of the Senate, on which the point of order is based, be suspended so that the amendment may be in order and may be considered at this time?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, am I not correct in my understanding that there should be a notice given of a proposal to suspend the rule?

Mr. BYRNES. Of course, without such notice the rule may only be suspended by unanimous consent.

Mr. McCARRAN. I will ask that the notice go over.

Mr. BYRNES. I may say to my friend the Senator from Nevada, of course, if I should be required to give notice a day ahead it would not be possible to have the amendment attached to the pending bill and considered by the conferees. I may say to the Senator, in order that he may understand the situation existing today in the cotton-textile industry, that operatives are writing to every Member of the Senate from the southern States where cotton mills are located, and from the States of New England, that hundreds and hundreds of men and women are threatened with dismissal from their employment on the ground, as the manufacturers state, that they cannot operate when they have no immediate sales in prospect, if they have to pay the processing tax at the time the cotton is delivered instead of at the time it is sold. If such a requirement is not made of them, then they can go ahead and manufacture and continue to give their operatives employment, but they cannot do so if they have to pay the tax at the time the cotton is delivered to the mill.

I will state further to the Senator from Nevada that at the time the original bill was pending in the Senate last year the Senate unanimously adopted an amendment similar to this, but it was eliminated in conference. The employees of the cotton mills throughout the country are vitally interested in anything which at this time may enable them to continue their work. I ask the Senator if he will not waive his objection and allow this amendment to go to conference?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I wish to say that, of course, so far as the employees of the cotton mills are concerned, I am for anything that will give employment, but as I listened to the amendment as read from the desk it struck me that it really belonged to another piece of legislation. In other words, it has to do with the processing tax which comes under the A. A. A., as I understand.

Mr. BYRNES. It is in the nature of an amendment to the original bill which was passed in 1933, but if it were introduced in the form of a bill and referred to the committee and then passed by the Senate and sent to the other body for action, the Senator from Nevada knows that it is a very serious question as to when it could be finally passed, and, in the meantime, great harm would be done to a number of people in whom I know the Senator from Nevada is as much interested as am I.

Mr. McCARRAN. I have an interest in them, of course, although I am not at all interested in this particular line of industry, because there is no industry of this kind in the State which I happen, in part, to represent; but, at the same time, the explanation of the Senator from South Carolina is exceedingly plausible. The only question in my mind is whether the amendment belongs to the pending bill, whether or not the best results would be obtained from it; and whether or not it would augment the so-called "A. A. A." If it should do so I would oppose it.

Mr. BYRNES. I may say that the only reason it was eliminated last year by the conferees, so far as I could ascertain, was that someone connected with the A. A. A. objected to it being in the bill, on the ground that it would be difficult to administer. I could never find out, and until this day have never been able to find out, from any man connected with any department why it would be any more difficult to collect the tax at the time of the sale of the goods than at the time when the bale of cotton is delivered to the mill.

I have more confidence in the conferees upon this measure that if the amendment shall be added to this bill it may have better success than it did a year ago.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in view of the explanation of my good friend from South Carolina, and in view of the further fact that my friend from Virginia is also standing behind him, I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina that rule XVI of the Senate be suspended in order that he may offer the amendment? The Chair hears no objection, and the rule is suspended. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I was authorized by the committee to make inquiry concerning a certain item and then to offer an amendment to provide a greater amount of money for snow surveys. The committee did not include the item in the bill, chiefly for two reasons: One was an uncertainty as to the agency which should be charged with the disbursement of the money, and the other was the question of possible conflict and overlapping with other agencies of the Government. Upon inquiry of Mr. Clapp, Assistant Forester, and of other employees of the Department, I find that the amendment should be offered to the provision for the Bureau of Agricultural Engineering. I have not prepared the amendment, but orally I now move, on page 72, line 13, to strike out the figures "$370,669" and insert "$406,669." This will result in an increase in the appropriation for that Bureau of $36,000.

I ask if the Senator in charge of the bill is prepared to indicate his acceptance of the amendment?

Mr. RUSSELL. Gladly. The Appropriations Committee, as the Senator from Oregon stated, went into the matter fully, and authorized him to offer the amendment on the floor and authorized me to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask that the clerks be authorized to correct all totals in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, in connection with the matter just presented, I am advised by the Chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Engineering that no further amendment is necessary in order to make effective the appropriation just agreed to by the Senate, but others have suggested to me that the language now found on page 71 of the bill might not be sufficient. I shall not insist upon it, but I am going to submit a request to add, on page 71, appropriate language that will make certain that the appropriation just provided for shall be available. Accordingly I move, on page 71, line 17, following the word "irrigation", to insert the words "snow surveys and forecasts of irrigation water supplies."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 71, line 17, after the word "irrigation", it is proposed to insert the words "snow surveys and forecasts of irrigation water supplies", so as to make the clause read:

The customs regulations, and laws affecting irrigation, snow surveys and forecasts of irrigation water supplies.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, it may seem singular for me to ask the Senator from Georgia a question about the appropriation bill, inasmuch as I am Chairman of the Appropriations Committee; but I was not given an opportunity to attend the meetings of the committee at which the bill was fully considered, because I had charge of the relief joint resolution on the floor of the Senate.

I wish to ask the chairman of the subcommittee, who is now managing the bill, if there is any provision in the bill which specifically authorizes a publicity bureau in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia, with his long experience on the Appropriations Committee, knows that the supply bill for the Department of Agriculture covers in the neighborhood of 3,000 items. While I have diligently sought to familiarize myself with all of them, I fear there are some few activities in the Department with which I have not thoroughly acquainted myself. So far as I am advised, there is nothing specific in the bill which would justify such a bureau as indicated by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. I asked the question because an outstanding newspaperman told me the other day that there are more newspapermen now employed in the various bureaus and departments of the Federal Government than are employed on the newspapers themselves. Some of the bureaus are actually printing illustrated magazines, and one of them a triweekly newspaper.

I ask to have read at the desk that which I am now sending forward, so the departments may be upon notice hereafter that they have no lawful right to expend the money of the Government in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read the following:

WASHINGTON.—A law passed more than 20 years ago is causing some of the multifarious press-relations representatives of the new deal more sleepless nights than the airplanes which used to fly over the White House.

Title 5 of the United States Code, annotated, contains the following paragraph, on page 50:

"Publicity experts not to be employed without specific appropriation. No money appropriated by any act shall be used for the compensation of any publicity expert unless specifically appropriated for that purpose. (Oct. 22, 1913, c. 32, 38 Stat. 212.)"

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I have not made any extended investigation of the matter, but I personally know of one bureau which has a publicity branch and which has no more use for a publicity branch or agent than I have for some people I know. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, in connection with what the Senator from Virginia has said, it has been a matter of common knowledge for the last 3 or 4 or 5 years in Washington and over the country that many very highly paid eminent men in the newspaper profession have left responsible positions with great newspapers to take over publicity connections or relations with various bureaus and departments of the Government.

Mr. GLASS. There is a statute which provides that it may not be done except by specific authorization of Congress.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator knows as well as I do that it has been done.

Mr. GLASS. That is what I am complaining of now.

Mr. CLARK. I am complaining about it, too.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, request a conference with the House on the amendments, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. SMITH, Mr. KEYES, and Mr. NYE conferees on the part of the Senate.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on House bill 5913, the War Department appropriation bill, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
March 29, 1935.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 10, 17, 26, 28, and 32 to the bill (H. R. 5913) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, and concur therein;

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 7 to said bill, and concur therein with the following amendment: Omit the matter stricken out by said amendment, and, on page 10, line 20, of the engrossed bill, after the word "men", insert ", such additional sums to be available for the objects embraced by and in addition to other appropriations contained in this act"; and

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 25 to said bill, and concur therein with the following amendment: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

"No appropriation contained in this act shall be available for any expense for or on account of a larger number of mounted units and wagon and service companies of the National Guard than were in existence on June 30, 1932: Provided, That officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the National Guard and Organized Reserves who, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War, volunteer to participate without pay as competitors in the national rifle matches to be held during the fiscal year 1936, may attend such matches without pay, notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, but shall be entitled to travel and subsistence allowances at the same rates as are provided for civilians who attend and participate in said matches."

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments to Senate amendments nos. 7 and 25.

The motion was agreed to.

ACQUISITION OF LAND IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 404) to provide for the acquisition of land in the District of Columbia in excess of that required for public projects and improvements, and for other purposes, which was, on page 3, line 4, after "Columbia", to insert:

Provided, That in the event of sale as herein authorized, notice of not less than 20 days before such sale shall be published in a daily newspaper published in the District of Columbia, and notice by registered mail before such sale be mailed to the last known address of the persons listed on the records of the assessor of the District of Columbia as the owners of the land abutting the land to be sold and sold at not less than the fair market value at the time sold as determined by appraisement of the assessor of the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

SAFETY ON PUBLIC HIGHWAYS IN THE DISTRICT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 408) to promote safety on the public highways of the District of Columbia by providing for the financial responsibility of owners and operators of motor vehicles for damages caused by motor vehicles on the public highways in the District of Columbia; to prescribe penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. KING, Mr. COPELAND, and Mr. CAPPER conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. GERRY, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Joseph J. Cunningham, of North Providence, R. I., to be collector of customs for customs collection district no. 5, with headquarters at Providence, R. I., in place of Emery J. San Souci.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported favorably the nomination of Riley E. Elgen, of the District of Columbia, to be a member of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia for a term of 3 years from July 1, 1934.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for appointment, by transfer, in the Regular Army.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

The calendar is in order.

THE JUDICIARY

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Walter Bragg Smith to be United States marshal, middle district of Alabama.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

That completes the calendar.

JOSEPH J. CUNNINGHAM

Mr. GERRY. I ask unanimous consent for the confirmation at this time of the nomination of Joseph J. Cunningham, of North Providence, to be collector of customs for customs collection district no. 5, with headquarters at Providence, R. I.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nomination is confirmed.

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. ROBINSON. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in legislative session, took a recess until Monday, April 1, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate March 29 (legislative day of Mar. 13), 1935

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, MARCH 29, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most gracious God, with a chastening sense of sin and failure we pray Thee to enrobe us with the spirit of prayer. O divine Teacher of the art of right living, hear us, for our goodness is so little as our sins rise before us. Let them fade from our memory, and may the royal pardon cancel them forever. Almighty God, we praise Thee for Mary's Holy Child. Inspire us to learn of Him in joy and sorrow, in strength and weariness, in success and failure, and in life and death. Heavenly Father, this present day, flushed with pleasure, intoxicated with the wrong sense of freedom, and blinded by the pride of willfulness, O stay its alarming currents; touch that life which is below this painful and forbidding surface. Bring forth the elements of good and the possibilities of recovery. Revive and make new again the sources of righteousness, and may "Our Father" become the universal name for God the Omnipotent One. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 174. Joint resolution to permit articles imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the California-Pacific International Exposition, San Diego, Calif., to be admitted without payment of tariff, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6359. An act to repeal certain provisions relating to publicity of certain statements of income.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House thereon, and appoints Mr. HARRISON, Mr. KING, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. KEYES, and Mr. METCALF to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication, which was read by the Clerk:

MARCH 29, 1935.

Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby resign as a member of the Invalid Pensions Committee.

Respectfully yours,

J. BURRWOOD DALY.

The resignation was accepted.

CONFERENCE REPORT—WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1936

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 5913) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5913) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On amendment no. 1: Appropriates $200,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $180,000, as proposed by the House, for contingent expenses of the War Department proper at Washington.

On amendment no. 2: Appropriates $87,000 for contingencies, Military Intelligence Division, instead of $46,000, as proposed by the House, and $107,000, as proposed by the Senate, the amount agreed upon being intended more nearly to equalize the maintenance allowances of military and naval attachés.

On amendment no. 3: Appropriates $446,774 for field exercises, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $350,465, as proposed by the House, the increase being compensated for by a reduction in the appropriation "Travel of the Army."

On amendment no. 4: Corrects the text of the appropriation "Welfare of enlisted men."

On amendments nos. 5, 6, 8, 9, 11, and 12, relating to "Pay, etc., of the Army": Limits flying pay to not exceeding five medical officers, as proposed by the House; strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the clause making the additional appropriation for increasing the enlisted strength of the Regular Army available for objects of expenditure embraced by appropriations other than "Pay, etc., of the Army", and makes a direct appropriation of $20,000,000 on account of such increase in enlisted strength, as proposed by the Senate, instead of an indefinite appropriation, as proposed by the House; provides for the employment of 7 retired officers on active duty instead of 5, as proposed by the House, and 85, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $6,238,656 for rental allowances, as proposed by the House, instead of $6,299,516, as proposed by the Senate, and corrects totals.

On amendments nos. 13 and 14, relating to "Travel of the Army": Reduces the appropriation from $3,095,630, proposed by the House, to $2,999,321, as proposed by the Senate, the amount of the reduction being transferred to the appropriation "Field exercises", and broadens the proposal of the House with respect to using other appropriations for traveling expenses when approved by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

On amendment no. 15: Appropriates $50,000 for expenses of courts martial, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $35,000, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 16: Appropriates $4,450,221 for clothing and equipage, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $4,388,423, as proposed by the House.

On amendments nos. 18 and 19, relating to Army transportation: Permits the use of 390 modernized class B trucks, as proposed by the Senate, instead of 267 of such trucks, as proposed by the House, and strikes out the Senate proposal to permit the use, at the discretion of the Secretary of War, of any motor-propelled vehicle procured prior to January 1, 1920.

On amendment no. 20: Appropriates $297,155 for the purchase of 1,500 horses for the Army instead of $222,155 for the purchase of 1,000 horses, as proposed by the House, and $372,155 for the purchase of 2,000 horses, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 21: Appropriates $10,549,104 under the head of "Barracks and quarters and other buildings and utilities", instead of $10,049,104, as proposed by the House, and $11,094,104, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments nos. 22 to 24, both inclusive, relating to the National Guard: Makes a direct appropriation of $500,000 for increasing the enlisted strength of the National Guard, instead of an indefinite appropriation, to be expended at the discretion of the President, as proposed by the House, and a direct appropriation of $2,500,000, as proposed by the Senate, and strikes out the Senate proposal designed to require that a portion of the increase in the enlisted strength of the National Guard be used for establishing a National Guard air squadron in the State of Mississippi.

On amendment no. 27, relating to the Organized Reserves: Appropriates $6,372,178, as proposed by the House, instead of $8,258,428, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments nos. 29 and 30, relating to the Reserve Officers' Training Corps: Appropriates $4,452,304 instead of $3,452,304, as proposed by the House, and $4,896,078, as proposed by the Senate, and strikes out the proposal of the Senate to raise the ban on the maintenance of an additional number of mounted, motor transport, or tank units.

On amendment no. 31: Appropriates $2,000,000 for training approximately 30,000 citizens' military training camp trainees instead of $1,000,000 for training approximately 14,000, as proposed by the House, and $2,560,000 for training approximately 37,500, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments nos. 33 and 34, relating to rivers and harbors: Provides for including illustrations in printed reports of stream surveys, as proposed by the Senate, and appropriates $34,057,270, as proposed by the House, instead of $27,057,270, as proposed by the Senate.

Disagreements

The committee of conference have not agreed upon the following amendments of the Senate:

No. 7: Relating to increasing the enlisted strength of the Regular Army.

No. 10: Relating to rental and subsistence allowances of officers.

No. 17: Relating to laundry charges.

No. 25: Limiting the number of National Guard units.

No. 26: Relating to traveling expenses of dependents of Regular Army personnel traveling in connection with the Organized Reserves.

No. 28: Relating to training retired and disabled officers of the Officers' Reserve Corps.

No. 32: Relating to the extension of Vicksburg National Cemetery.

TILMAN B. PARKS,
THOMAS L. BLANTON,
THOMAS S. MCMILLAN,
J. BUELL SNYDER,
JOHN F. DOCKWEILER,
CHESTER C. BOLTON,
D. LANE POWERS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, the War Department appropriation bill, as reported to and passed by the House, carried a total of $378,699,448.

The House did not add a single dollar to the bill, and when it left here it carried $542,795 less than the total of the Budget estimates, exclusive of two contingent indefinite appropriations for increasing, at the discretion of the President, the enlisted strength of the Regular Army and the National Guard.

The Senate placed 34 amendments on the bill, 17 of that number affecting the amounts of money carried in the bill.

They added $28,977,206, and they reduced the river and harbor appropriation by $7,000,000, making a net increase over the House bill of $21,977,206.

The gross increase was made up very largely of six items, namely:

1. A direct appropriation instead of an indefinite appropriation for increasing the enlisted strength of the Regular Army	$20,000,000
2. An increase for maintenance of public works under the cognizance of the Quartermaster	1,000,000
3. A direct appropriation instead of an indefinite appropriation for increasing the enlisted strength of the National Guard	2,500,000
4. An increase to provide 15-day training for 30,000 Reserve officers, instead of 20,000 as provided by the House	1,866,250
5. An increase to permit the establishment of 113 additional R. O. T. C. units	1,443,774
To which was coupled other increases totaling	193,460
6. An increase to take care of 37,500 C. M. T. C. trainees, instead of 14,000 such trainees, as provided by the House	1,560,000
These particular items total	28,583,484

As agreed to, the Senate has yielded in money as to those particular items a total of $5,583,484.

With the reduced amount there will be available—

A direct appropriation of $20,000,000 for increasing the enlisted strength of the Regular Army;

A direct appropriation of $500,000 for increasing the enlisted strength of the National Guard;

An increase of $500,000 for maintenance of barracks and quarters;

An increase of $1,000,000 for establishing additional R. O. T. C. units; and

An increase of $1,000,000 for additional C. M. T. C. trainees—between a total of 28,000 and 30,000.

The Senate receded entirely from its proposal to increase the appropriation for the Organized Reserves.

The reduced amount agreed upon for the National Guard is considered adequate for an increase of 5,000 in the enlisted strength of the Guard, the conferees were advised, on the basis of only such additional expenditures as are contemplated on account of additional enlisted men taken into the Regular Army. In other words, the increase will be used in expanding existing units and not for establishing new units and providing them with motor equipment and implementation of various kinds. I assume no responsibility for this reduction.

There are one or two other items of general interest to which I might refer:

The Senate receded from its amendment increasing the number of medical officers who might draw flying pay; also, from its amendment increasing from 5 to 85 the number of retired officers who may be employed on active duty. The number agreed upon is 7, 2 more than the House had proposed.

We compromised on horses and provide for the procurement of 1,500, or 500 less than the Senate had proposed.

Of course, we would not and could not agree to the proposal to reduce the amount provided by the House for the maintenance of existing river and harbor works. This reduction, your conferees were advised, was made entirely through a misunderstanding.

As agreed to, the bill carries a total of $341,348,204 for military activities and $60,649,966 for nonmilitary activities. This is an increase of $23,216,722 over the House bill for military activities and $82,000 for nonmilitary activities. In the aggregate, the bill carries $401,998,170 for both military and nonmilitary activities.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKS. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Do I understand it is the gentleman's purpose, with reference to Senate amendment no. 7, to move to recede and concur in the amendment?

Mr. PARKS. That is the item for increase of the Army?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; for increasing the enlisted strength of the Army.

Mr. PARKS. Yes.

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKS. I yield.

Mr. WITHROW. As I understand it, the Senate amendments increased the War Department appropriation bill as it left the House approximately $24,000,000.

Mr. PARKS. With the reductions it amounts to about $21,000,000.

Mr. WITHROW. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW].

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, I yield to no Member in the desire to provide adequate funds for national defense, but the conference report we are considering today, particularly in view of the amendments of the Senate, goes far beyond the point of providing adequate national defense.

It seems peculiar, but very characteristic, that when this House, and particularly the Appropriations Committee, are considering the War Department or Navy Department appropriation bills the lid is off entirely; and, literally speaking, they run hog wild. There are, of course, individuals and groups who are very desirous of spending huge sums of money for War Department activities, but the interests of these individuals are selfish; they will profit by reason of these extraordinary activities. These groups have spread a great deal of propaganda; they have built up a "straw man" and the "straw man" is that there is danger of the United States engaging in war with some foreign country. At the present time it is most convenient, and it is the main factor in their propaganda, that there is grave danger of a war with Japan.

I know of no better argument against this false assumption than the argument offered by Franklin D. Roosevelt himself, when he was Assistant Secretary of the Navy, in an article he wrote and authorized to be published, and which was published in the magazine, Asia, in July 1923. This article was reprinted, I believe, about a year ago. In this article he dealt with the fallacy, the absolute absurdity of a war between Japan and the United States. I shall quote briefly from that article written by the man who now is President of the United States, but who at that time was the Assistant Secretary of the Navy. I quote:

* * * For the Japanese to have invaded—or rather to have maintained any invasion—on our Pacific coast would have been an impossible task. * * * The point will bear the emphasis of repetition, that this impasse was reached before the days of effective submarines and aircraft, and that, even at that time, when offensive operations over long sea distances were less difficult than now, war would, in all probability, have been decided on economic issues. And in these the United States had, and has, a vast superiority.

From the same article I quote the following:

As long as 10 years ago naval experts said that a fleet crossing a wide ocean from its home base must of necessity lose from a quarter to a third of its fighting value. If that judgment was true 10 years ago, then the principle is even more true today; for the addition of two new dimensions, under water and in the air, to the fighting area has made the protection of the capital ship, superdreadnaught or battle cruiser, the fundamental fighting unit—a much harder task than it was then.

* * * And on the other hand, even if Japan in 1914 had any false notion that she could threaten us either through Mexico or by direct invasion of the Pacific coast, it is safe to say that her strategists have now tacitly abandoned such ideas.

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. WITHROW. If those arguments were pertinent at that time, they are doubly so today. Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me to be entirely inconsistent to grant an appropriation of this kind without hardly the "batting of an eye" at a time when thousands of schools throughout the Nation are closing for lack of sufficient funds. As the authority for the acute education situation we have none other than the statement of Dr. Richard W. Hogue, director of the Public Education League, who states. I quote:

Approximately one-eighth of the country's school children face the prospect of being unable to attend school through the final term of the current session. Their schools will be closed to them soon after the 1st of April, if not before that date, due to exhaustion of local and State funds as a result of the prolonged depression. This calamity can and must be prevented by the Federal Government.

Day before yesterday a gentleman on your side of the aisle rose and offered a resolution asking for an appropriation of $30,000,000 in order to prevent the closing of these schools. The first question that was asked him when the resolution was read was, Where are we going to raise the money? When it comes to a question of providing funds for educational purposes there are Members of this body whose first question is, How are we going to raise the money?—but when it comes to a question of providing huge sums for the war lords of this country these same gentlemen are not interested in how the money is to be raised. Mr. Speaker, I say that is an entirely inconsistent position.

When the original War Department appropriation was brought in by the Appropriations Committee, the committee said that the funds provided for in the appropriation would provide adequate national defense. However, the measure as it is before the House today had been amended by the Senate, and the appropriation has been boosted by approximately $21,000,000 by reason of these amendments. Notwithstanding these facts, the Appropriations Committee is willing to accept the amendments without a struggle. I say again, in this measure we are going far beyond the point of providing adequate national defense.

In conclusion, may I say that we have been mighty liberal in appropriating the taxpayers' money to the War Department. May I ask that we be equally liberal in appropriating funds for educational purposes and for emergency relief for our dairy farmers. Our dairy farmers, our veterans, and our ordinary citizens are entitled to receive the same consideration which we are giving to our national defense. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to say that this bill has been very thoroughly debated during the time it was before the House. It is very much desired that we finish it rapidly, and I hope that in 4 or 5 minutes we will be able to move the previous question on the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] 5 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am not a militarist and have never been, but I am willing, and it is my purpose as long as I am on this committee, to give the Government everything it needs in order to repel any internal insurrection of domestic enemies at home, and to prevent any foreign enemy from ever landing on our shores.

We have given the General Staff of the Army and our War Department everything that they have assured us they need in order adequately to protect and safeguard this Government. An ounce of preventative is worth a pound of cure. We can safeguard human life and property by being prepared. We can keep out of war by being prepared.

Mr. Speaker, I was one of those who on April 6, 1917, voted to declare war against the Imperial German Government. In the preceding Congress there had been introduced by a distinguished newspaperman from the South, who happened to be at that time a Member of Congress, Mr. Jeff McLemore, of Texas, what was known as the "McLemore resolution", which in substance provided that where there were two foreign governments fighting and had their hands on each other's throats in a death grapple, this Government would not afford the protection of its flag to any of its nationals who foolishly saw fit to enter the war zone. This country was not yet ripe for such sound and wise legislation. Those howling for war hooted, ridiculed, and attacked Mr. McLemore, even accusing him of being "yellow." Yet, after all, he had far more courage, both moral and physical, than those who maligned him. That man went to his premature death because of the ridicule that came from the "jingoes" of the country.

Mr. Speaker, if that McLemore resolution had been passed, there would have been a chance for the United States of America honorably to have kept out of that horrible and costly war. The present Secretary of State, the Honorable Cordell Hull, is making now a careful investigation of just such a proposal as to whether this Government should embark upon the kind of policy expressed in the McLemore resolution.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a minute, after I have finished what I have on my mind. I will then gladly yield to my friend from Mississippi.

If you are sitting on your front porch, you have a perfect right and an inherent right to cross the street at will. You may leave your yard and cross to the other side of the street whenever it pleases you to do so. But if you see two mad dogs fighting over there, you would be a fool to cross over there and enter their war zone.

It is ridiculous for this country on behalf of the selfish interests of a few traders and a few merchants and a few traveling pleasure seekers to involve the safety and the rights of 125,000,000 people of the United States and thrust us into a terrible war simply because those few merchants and pleasure seekers want the protection of our flag in order to visit the war zone.

I hope that our distinguished Secretary of State, Mr. Hull, will see fit to submit to this House before long a recommendation that will bring to life that kind of a policy expressed in the McLemore resolution, and it will keep us out of war. Now, while there is no war, is the time for us to take steps to keep out of war. If the President should send us such a recommendation, I hope that Congress will pass it immediately.

When I remember all of the tearful protestations made by France when she sent her high commission here begging for money and men, at a time when Germany had her on her knees practically begging for mercy, and I remember the great sacrifices our people made to buy bonds to furnish that money and the sadness and grief that entered so many American homes when their boys bravely donned uniforms and went across mine-laden oceans, menaced on all sides by deadly submarines, and saved France from peonage, I am disgusted and have no patience with the base ingratitude France has displayed toward our friendly Nation ever since the war.

Of all human traits, ingratitude is the most despicable. Ingratitude in a nation is many times more despicable than it is in an individual.

I remember a patriotic citizen in Texas who, when he failed in business, turned over to his creditors everything he possessed, including even his home, which was exempt from debts, and thereafter on borrowed capital opened up a small drug store in Fort Worth. The local committee selling liberty bonds to raise the needed money to loan France and our other Allies notified him that they had marked him down to purchase a thousand-dollar bond. He tried to explain to them that it was impossible, because he was wholly without means; but when he came to his place of business the next morning he found that during the night the front of his store and his front sidewalk had been painted yellow.

Besides giving their sons, thousands of families in various States made great sacrifices to buy these bonds and thus furnish this money for France and our other Allies.

France charged us outrageous sums for transporting our soldiers to Europe in her ships when they were crossing the ocean to save France from destruction. For every little imaginary injury to highways caused by our caissons moving to defend France and for alleged injury to trees and property naturally incident to all warfare France made us pay to the very limit, when had it not been for our men and munitions Germany would have annihilated France.

While I was one of those who in 1917 voted to declare war against the Imperial German Government, remembering now all the base ingratitude of France in repudiating her sacred debt of honor to our country, if Germany and France should again cross swords, which God forbid should happen, I hope the Imperial German Government will whip the very devil out of France, and while she is doing it I want to see our Government remain absolutely neutral, and keep all of our men, money, and munitions at home.

Never again will I vote to send American youths over to Europe to protect France, when France has not appreciated it, and has shown such base ingratitude.

Mr. Speaker, our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW], than whom there is no more valuable Member in this House, has introduced a resolution here providing that where there is no invasion, before this Government can declare war, it must be left to a plebiscite. That is where there is no invasion. His resolution also provides that when this Government does enter war it may take over every resource of the country needed to win the war. That will take the profits out of war, and when you eliminate the profits there will be no wars.

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. May I say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] that I hear a great many of these "dollar-a-year" men, who are now worth millions of dollars, clamoring for us to tax the profits of the next war. I want to tax the profits of the last war, then we will not have any next war in your day and mine. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. I will help the gentleman do that any time he brings in such a bill. I will vote for it any time the gentleman gets such a bill on the floor for consideration. The World War created a whole army of millionaires and multimillionaires. I have always been in favor of making them disgorge.

When I remember those infamous costs plus 10-percent contracts and the 10 percent plus profits that were made on those contracts, where contractors had men build up structures and then tear them down and build them up again in order to increase costs, so as to increase profits, I want to see those profits taken out and those fellows made to disgorge.

I hope that every friend of the resolution which has been introduced by my friend the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] will go before the Committee on the Judiciary in a few days when this hearing is held and let that committee know their views upon it. If you are in favor of it, I hope you will help the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] get this resolution out of committee and passed in this Congress before we adjourn.

What are the particular provisions in this bill that are criticized? Oh, all that our friend who last spoke against it gave us was general criticism. He stated the committee had gone hog-wild. In what way has it gone hog-wild? On what item has it gone hog-wild? Is there anything here that the committee has done that you would not have done? The sentiment of this House when this bill left it to go to the Senate was that there should have been provided in the first instance 165,000 men for the Army. This was the sentiment of the House, and the only thing that kept the committee from following it was our understanding that the President preferred for the matter to be left to him. When we found out that the President was not adverse to the increase your committee readily agreed that the increase should be provided, and I believe your committee did this with the approval of the great majority of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON].

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to read a short letter from a distinguished constituent of mine, a man in Topeka, Dean John Warren Day, a patriot and a thinker. He writes me as follows:

> As a citizen of the United States and a World War veteran, I am taking this opportunity to express my complete disapproval of the present militaristic trends of the administration and its policies. More particularly do I wish to express my thorough disapproval of the contemplated naval maneuvers in the northern Pacific from May 3 to June 10.
> It would seem to me, in the present situation existing between Japan and the United States, that nothing could be more carefully planned to excite the Japanese and to display a "nose thumbing" attitude of our Government toward the Japanese people. The contemplated naval maneuvers are not only provocative but seemingly arranged by an insane desire to excite the Japanese people against the people of the United States. I hope you will do everything in your power to stop this policy of saber rattling.

[Applause.]

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF].

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman for granting me this time. I appreciate it very highly. I realize that whatever I may say against this increased appropriation for the military and naval establishments will accomplish nothing and get nowhere in this House, but I want to be sure that I make my own record here and that my own record is a protest against these vast increases.

I am not opposed to adequate appropriations to insure our security, but I am opposed, and without reservation, to vast increases that before this session is through will amount to $1,500,000,000 for the Army and the Navy; and during the same period of time, during this month of March, 5,000 elementary schools in these United States have closed for lack of funds. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], told us only on Wednesday that in the State of Texas where they are appropriating $20,000,000 for the sake of airports and naval bases and structures in connection therewith, 250 schools have already closed and 1,000 more schools will close within the next 2 weeks.

This is a national question. As your and my President stated in a message to Congress—

Education has been regarded in this country as a responsibility of the State and local governments and should remain so. In the joint attack on economic security which we suggest, Federal participation, however, is most desirable. To a considerable extent the Federal Government is already participating in this endeavor and we believe that it should continue to do so, if possible, on an extended scale.

This is the message of Franklin D. Roosevelt this year, and we claim that these appropriations for our schools should have been made before you come in with an Army and Navy appropriation. We have nearly 700,000 school children in this country attending schools that are condemned as unsafe and unfit. In the State of Mississippi 2,000 school districts do not even have a schoolhouse. In the State of Arkansas there are children who, for 2 or 3 years, have not even had a textbook. Yet we go on increasing and increasing, first in one House and then in the other, these vast appropriations for armament and for war with a country that nobody can name.

In addition to this, I want to add this one other significant point. There are in the neighborhood of 400,000 school children going to schools where the drinking water is polluted and over 300,000 school children attending schools where there are no toilet facilities of any kind whatsoever.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. What does the gentleman think of the present policy of using P. W. A. funds for building battleships?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Well, that is one more thing that this Democratic Congress will have to defend itself for next year.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Does not the gentleman believe that it is a dangerous policy for this Congress to surrender the power which the Anglo-Saxon people captured during a thousand years of struggle of control over war expenditures, by giving the Executive money for one purpose which he is using for an entirely different purpose?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I may add to the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota that when you get your works-relief-program bill back here from the Senate, which you will probably have today, you will find that the $40,000,000 amendment that Senator CUTTING had placed on that measure in the Senate, has been deleted, and we cannot even get $40,000,000 for our schools, while we are appropriating over $400,000,000 in this one bill alone. [Applause.]

This appropriation bill for the Army represents an increase of $50,000,000 over last year. The Senate, not satisfied with that vast increase, added $21,000,000 more, so that the bill, as it now comes before us, means an increase of $71,000,000 over last year. But that is not all. Last Wednesday a Navy bill was before us which contained an appropriation of $38,000,000. Mind you, that is not the regular appropriation bill for the Navy. By no means. That sum, $38,000,000, is merely an extra relating to construction, and so forth. Here are some of the items:

Storehouse at Mare Island	$800,000
Graving dock	3,500,000
Floating drydock	10,000,000
Cold-storage plant	595,000
Industrial-shop building	1,400,000
Quarters for officers	3,071,000
Carpenter shop at Newport	80,000

Here is the report on this carpenter shop:

The present carpenter shop is a two-story, wooden structure, supported on piles. It is 28 years old and in danger of collapse because of extreme deterioration of the piling and superstructure.

Let me point out to you gentlemen that there are thousands of elementary schools in the United States that are 60 to 70 years old, and little children are sitting in them every day for 4 and 5 hours. Think of it, Mr. Speaker! Old, decrepit structures 60 to 70 years old in which little boys and girls must attend school, their very lives threatened every minute, but not one single, solitary dollar is appropriated to take care of this appalling situation, while $80,000,000 is hustled through the Congress without question to build a new carpenter shop for the Navy because the present one is 28 years old. That is the very thing I wish to protest against this afternoon. It is my contention that education is a fundamental necessity in a republic. It should receive primary consideration but it is being relegated to the background while many less important matters are receiving first consideration. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] has a very meritorious measure before the Committee on Education. It seeks to appropriate $30,000,000 for the immediate needs of our schools.

The very pressing needs of this money have been shown without question. Dr. Studebaker and Dr. Dawson have testified before the committee and have shown that unless there is immediate Federal aid one-eighth of the school children of this country will not have any school of any kind for the balance of this school year. And what about our teachers? What is their present situation? A survey by the N. E. A. indicates that $100,000,000 is now due the school teachers of this Nation for back salaries, which are unpaid, and which will remain unpaid unless there is Federal aid. I recall that Vice President Dawes secured a loan of $90,000,000 for his bank that was already insolvent when he got it. Ninety million dollars for General Dawes' busted bank but not one cent for our school teachers. There are between 900,000 and 1,000,000 school teachers in this country. That means about as many as the membership of the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars combined, and yet they get nothing. Why not? Because they are not organized. There are school teachers in our country getting as low as $24 per month. That is less than relief workers. The trouble with the school teachers is that they are not organized. If they had a union and were a part of the American Federation of Labor, you can rest assured that they would get every consideration. My advise to the teachers is to get together. Arouse the mothers of this Nation to the dangers confronting our elementary-school system. Bring pressure to bear on those in authority, and your demands will receive prompt attention, and your wrongs will be redressed.

COMMITTEE ON INSULAR AFFAIRS

Mr. KOCIALKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Insular Affairs be permitted to sit this afternoon during the session of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Insular Affairs be allowed to sit this afternoon during the session of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT, WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion by Mr. PARKS to reconsider the vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 25, after the word "increasing", strike out "at the discretion of the President and in such increments as he may deem necessary from time to time."

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 7: Omit the matter stricken out by said amendment, and on page 10, line 20, of the engrossed bill, after the word "men", insert the following: ", such additional sums to be available for the objects embraced by and in addition to other appropriations contained in this act."

So that if this amendment be adopted, taken in conjunction with amendment no. 6, to which the House has agreed in the adoption of the conference report, the entire provision with respect to increasing the enlisted strength of the Regular Army will read as follows: "together with such additional sums as may be necessary, not exceeding $20,000,000, to defray the cost of increasing the enlisted strength of the Regular Army from an average of 118,750 to an average of 165,000 enlisted men, such additional sums to be available for the objects embraced by and in addition to other appropriations contained in this act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas to concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 8, after the figures, insert:
" : Provided further, That effective from and after July 1, 1935, the value of one subsistence allowance, as that term is used in section 5 of the Pay Readjustment Act of June 10, 1922 (42 Stat. 628), as amended, shall be and remain fixed at 60 cents per day; and the rate for one room for the purpose of computing the money allowance for rental of quarters authorized in section 6 of said act shall be and remain fixed at $20 per month."

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 6, after the figures " 1936 ", insert:
" : Provided, That laundry charges, other than for service now rendered without charge, shall be so adjusted that earnings in conjunction with the value placed upon service rendered without charge shall aggregate an amount at least equal to the cost of maintaining and operating laundries and dry-cleaning plants."

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 25: Page 51, beginning in line 21, strike out lines 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25, as follows:
" No appropriation contained in this act shall be available for any expense for or on account of a larger number of mounted and medical units, and military police, wagon and service companies of the National Guard than were in existence on June 30, 1932."

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:
" No appropriation contained in this act shall be available for any expense for or on account of a larger number of mounted units and wagon and service companies of the National Guard than were in existence on June 30, 1932: Provided, That officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the National Guard and Organized Reserves, who, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War, volunteer to participate without pay as competitors in the national rifle matches to be held during the fiscal year 1936, may attend such matches without pay, notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, but shall be entitled to travel and subsistence allowances at the same rates as are provided for civilians who attend and participate in said matches."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 26: Page 53, following the word " reserves ", in line 2, insert: " and for travel of dependents, and packing and transportation of baggage of such personnel."

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 28: Page 54, after the word " State ", in line 19, insert: "Provided, That nothing in this provision shall be so construed as to prevent the application of funds herein contained to the pay, allowances, or traveling expenses of any officer or enlisted man of the Reserve Corps who may surrender said pension, disability allowance, disability compensation, or retired pay for the period of his active duty in the Reserve Corps."

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I move the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 32: Page 65, after line 7, insert: " For purchase of additional land for the extension of the Vicksburg National Cemetery, $82,000."

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKS. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Is there any bonded indebtedness on the county in which this cemetery is located; and, if so, will the county ask the Federal Government to take over the bonds belonging to that county in order that they may be redeemed?

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, this is a part of the national park at Vicksburg, and there is no indebtedness upon it. That is our information about it. It is a Federal national park, a part of the cemetery at Vicksburg.

Mr. RICH. Later on the Federal Government will not be asked to redeem any bonds?

Mr. PARKS. I understand not. I do not see how it could be possible.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLICITY OF INCOME TAX

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6359) to repeal certain provisions relating to publicity of certain statements of income, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 6359, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to inquire whether this is the " pink slip " bill?

Mr. DOUGHTON. It is.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. DOUGHTON, Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL, Mr. CULLEN, Mr. TREADWAY, and Mr. BACHARACH.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 176

Resolved, That J. BURRWOOD DALY, of Pennsylvania, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the Standing Committee of the House of Representatives on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Also the following resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 177

Resolved, That Theodore B. Werner, of South Dakota, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the Standing Committee of the House of Representatives on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MILITARY AFFAIRS COMMITTEE—PERMISSION TO SIT DURING SESSION OF HOUSE

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs be granted permission to sit during the session of the House this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes, to make an important statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes following the statement of the gentleman from Iowa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes, following the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. How many more are there? I shall not object to this one, but must object to any others.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. Speaker, at the request of a group of the membership of this House who have been working rather earnestly and unremittingly in the study of legislation of particular interest to agriculture, I have filed a motion with the Clerk of the House to discharge the Rules Committee from the consideration of Resolution 161.

I have asked for this time to make an explanation of why many of us feel that is the necessary procedure.

In the early part of the session there was introduced in the House and in the Senate companion measures which were to be known as the "Farm Credit Act of 1935", correcting certain necessary matters in the various laws pertaining to the furnishing of farm credit. In the Senate the bill S. 1384 was called up and an amendment was adopted which is popularly known as the "Wheeler amendment", and which, among other things, cuts the interest on Federal land-bank loans from 4½ to 3½ percent. It passed the Senate by a close vote, was messaged to the House, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and on the 18th day of February it was reported to this House by the Committee on Agriculture. At the request of the chairman of that committee it was given a privileged status and placed upon the Union Calendar of the House, where it has remained from that day to the present.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. Does the gentleman have a petition on that bill on the desk now?

Mr. GILLETTE. It is not on that bill. I am just explaining it.

Mr. CULKIN. What I am getting at is, that is intermingled with other subjects? That decrease in the interest rate does not stand alone, but it is intermingled with other subjects?

Mr. GILLETTE. No; the measure takes up other matters of correction as well as the Wheeler amendment.

That, as I stated, has been on the Union Calendar of this House since February 18. I am informed that there is no intention, and, from the 6 weeks that have elapsed, there is probably no intention of bringing it before the Membership of this House. I am informed that under the rules no one can call it up except the chairman of the committee or someone whom the Committee on Agriculture directs to call it up. Therefore we have taken the only method that was open to us, the introduction of a resolution which was referred to the Rules Committee, Resolution No. 161, asking that that measure be made a special order in the House and authorizing another member of the Committee on Agriculture to call it up for action, dividing the time between the chairman of the committee and the member to be recognized to call it up. That resolution has been in the hands of the Rules Committee for 8 or 9 legislative days without being reported. Then it was necessary to file a motion to discharge the Rules Committee from consideration of that resolution, which I have done. That petition is now on the desk to get the 218 signatures, if possible.

I do not have the time nor the intention nor the desire to discuss the wisdom or unwisdom of the rule under which we are operating. This House adopted it. The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] last Tuesday stated that we are operating here by a majority; that a majority could do anything. A majority of what? A majority of a quorum can pass a bill. Under this rule it takes a majority of the 435 Membership of this House before we can bring a measure up for consideration. There is no desire to transcend or contravene or interfere with the rights of a committee. Committees are appointed to assist this House in functioning.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] has expired.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. Speaker, due to necessary absence from the city, may the RECORD show that I am excused from attending the sessions of the House until Wednesday, April 3?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request is granted.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, this morning the papers told us there are strikes imminent in the automobile industry, the textile industry, the rubber industry, and the coal industry—strikes which will affect approximately 1,000,000 workers, to say nothing of their dependents, which will probably reach somewhere near 10,000,000 people in the United States.

I rise at this time to call to the attention of this body that the Committee on Labor, of which I have the honor to be chairman, in the last session of Congress reported a 30-hour work week bill to this House, and in the present session of Congress, has reported an equal labor representation bill to this House, and if those bills, together with the Wagner-Connery labor-disputes bill, were passed by this House there would be no strike in the automobile industry, the textile industry, the coal industry, or the rubber industry. Somebody will ask, "Why are they not passed?" We reported the 30-hour-week bill in the last session of Congress. We could not get a rule from the Rules Committee. We got 83 names only on the petition which I filed to discharge the Rules Committee. We could not get a rule on it. The Wagner-Connery bill, which is to settle labor disputes and give the National Labor Relations Board real power to settle labor disputes, was cast aside in the last session of Congress, was not allowed to come up for action and an innocuous resolution was brought in in the last days and passed to pacify labor, which did nothing for labor even though the members of the National Labor Relations Board did everything humanly possible to help labor. Their hands were tied because they had no power.

In this session of Congress the Committee on Labor has unanimously reported a bill to the House of Representatives calling for equal labor representation on the code authorities and on all boards having to do with the betterment of the conditions of workers in the United States. That bill is now before the Rules Committee. We cannot get a rule on that bill. That bill would do something for labor. It would do justice to labor. The codes of the N. R. A. as written today are written to crush labor. The code authorities are composed of all the big employers anxious to crush unionism and to drive the small independent business man out of business. Testimony before our Labor Committee showed instances of big cigarette industries making net profit of $779,000,000 in 10 years, while their labor costs were only 2 percent. Under the present code set-ups the rich are getting richer and the poor are getting poorer. The bills reported by the House Labor Committee would cure these evils and prevent strikes and bloodshed. Why does not this House demand their passage? I am telling you today, my colleagues, that the responsibility for the 1,000,000 men who will go out on strike in the very near future, the loss of bread and wages to their families rests upon you here and not upon labor. It rests upon you, the Congress of the United States.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield, but I only have 5 minutes.

Mr. RICH. I think the Members of Congress realize that the 30-hour-week bill will do more injury to labor and to the country than anything they can do at this time, and for that reason they are not interested in passing a bill of that kind.

Mr. CONNERY. That is merely the opinion of my friend from Pennsylvania. Why not bring the 30-hour work week bill on the floor here and discuss it, and not try to smother it as other labor legislation is being smothered?

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I think this is of tremendous importance, and I would like to make my statement, and then if I have any time left I will be glad to yield.

Mr. MOTT. I did not understand whether the gentleman said the Labor Committee of this House had already reported the 30-hour bill or not.

Mr. CONNERY. Not this session. The House Labor Committee at present is awaiting action by the Senate on the Black 30-hour bill, which, I understand, may come up this coming week in the Senate for a vote. The Labor Committee of the House would, I believe, report out the Connery 30-hour bill unanimously tomorrow morning if we could get a rule from the Rules Committee to get it on the floor, but we know we cannot; we have been informed we cannot get a rule.

Mr. MOTT. I am for the 30-hour bill. Why not report it out and then circulate a petition to discharge the Rules Committee?

Mr. CONNERY. Because to discharge the committee requires 218 signatures, and we got only 83 in the last session.

Mr. MOTT. But we got 218 on the bonus petition.

Mr. CONNERY. We are going to take up the petition question in the committee next Tuesday morning.

Mr. MOTT. I hope the gentleman's committee will report it out.

Mr. CONNERY. Our committee will decide upon its plan of action on Tuesday, and I am sure that the House will have an opportunity soon to act on the 30-hour-week bill by the petition unless the Rules Committee change their views.

Let me say this in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want the House to know that these strikes could be avoided. Before the Military Affairs Committee a few days ago I offered a bill to prohibit the use of the National Guard in strikes unless permission is first secured from the Secretary of War. We know by bitter experience what is going to happen throughout the coal strike, throughout the automobile strike, throughout the rubber strike, throughout the textile strike; on the cry of "protect property rights" Governors will call out the National Guard and drive the strikers back into the mills with their bayonets as they did in Georgia; you are going to have National Guard men sticking their bayonets in the strikers' backs and then stepping on their bodies to pull the bayonets out. We heard such testimony before the Committee on Military Affairs. Human rights will mean nothing. You are going to have another spectacle such as that where the National Guard drove 300 striking girls into a warehouse and kept them there merely because those girl strikers asked for a decent wage and a decent opportunity to live.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. MAY. In the instance of the striker who had the bayonet stuck in his back, it was done right on his own front porch in front of his family.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes, on his own front porch; and in practically all instances where strikers have been shot and killed in these strikes they have been shot or bayoneted in the back, which proves they were not taking the aggressive and trying to look for trouble. I think the House of Representatives realizes the importance of preventing such atrocities, the importance to the House of Representatives and to the American people of 1,000,000 workers going out on strike solely and only because they have been forbidden the right to bargain collectively, forbidden to call their souls their own; forbidden to join a union labor organization under penalty of discharge; spied upon at their work to find out if their sympathies were with the unions; speeded up like animals by the stretch-out and speed-up system.

Mr. Speaker, I could recount at length the atrocities committed against American workers by hired thugs and gunmen of the employers. I feel that unless Congress passes the legislation to which I have referred, then this House of Representatives is directly responsible for the desperation which drives 1,000,000 American workers to strike, because they feel that their Government is controlled by the big-moneyed employers of the country and that they can no longer look for justice or protection of their rights to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a very few remarks about a claims bill which is extraordinary and unusual, and which will be considered probably within the next few days—that is, the Minnesota fire sufferers claim bill, H. R. 3662, introduced by me and favorably reported by the Claims Committee.

This bill is unusual in that the President of the United States has asked the Attorney General to make an investigation into the provisions of the bill, and the Attorney General has reported that the bill is meritorious. The President has joined in that finding of the Attorney General in writing.

The claims arise out of damages that occurred in October 1918 when the Government was operating our railroads. Fires caused by negligent operation of the railroads destroyed 1,500 to 2,000 square miles of territory in northeastern Minnesota. Seven thousand homes were burned in that fire, and 500 people lost their lives. Litigation was started and dragged on for years, and cases arising from various areas represented in this bill went to the Supreme Court of the State of Minnesota, and were decided by that court in favor of the claimants, establishing the liability of the Government in the areas dealt with in this bill. After a couple of years it became evident that because of the condition of the calendar and the number of claims involved it would be impossible to determine those claims in the courts of Minnesota in any reasonable time. It was estimated that if all the courts in Minnesota worked on nothing but fire-claim suits it would take 10 years to decide them. Consequently, it was absolutely necessary that some settlement be arrived at. The Government sent out its claim agents and asked the people to submit their claims. They submitted their claims, and the Government scaled the claims down and agreed upon what they, the Government attorneys, believed was the actual loss sustained. They did not pay that actual loss but paid 50 percent of what they themselves determined was the actual loss these people sustained.

I want to clear up one of the misapprehensions that has existed about these claims, and to make the unequivocal statement that there is no paid lobby working for the enactment of this bill. The bill contains the usual attorneys' fees clause limiting attorneys' fees to 10 percent.

This bill was considered in the Seventy-third Congress and previous Congresses, and was in the last session of the Seventy-third Congress passed unanimously by the Senate. Lengthy hearings have been held in the past by the Claims Committee of the House, and the bill has been reported favorably by that committee several times. Since this bill has unquestioned merit and has been found to be meritorious by the Claims Committee, the Attorney General, and the President, I hope that its passage will not be prevented by failure to examine and ascertain its merits by the Members of the House.

In the Seventy-third Congress some question arose as to the President's endorsement of the merits of this bill, and in order to put that fact beyond question of doubt I wish here to insert a letter written by Mr. M. H. McIntyre, secretary to the President:

MAY 7, 1934.

Hon. PAUL KVALE,
Hon. EINAR HOIDALE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Reference is made to Congressman KVALE's letter under date of May 1 pertaining to S. 770, a bill for the relief of the sufferers by fire in Minnesota in 1918, and to previous correspondence on this same subject.

I have taken up with the President the question raised in Mr. KVALE's letter, and he has asked me to tell you gentlemen that it is true that the Attorney General said that the bill is meritorious and that he, the President, concurred in what the Attorney General said.

Sincerely yours, M. H. MCINTYRE,
Assistant Secretary to the President.

I wish to include herein a letter written by John P. Devaney, chief justice of the Supreme Court of the State of Minnesota, concerning these claims.

MAY 11, 1934.

Hon. EINAR HOIDALE,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: In response to your letter of the 10th inst. in which you request me to make a brief statement of facts concerning the Minnesota forest fire cases of October 1918, a bill for the relief of claimants is now pending before Congress, will say:

It gives me great pleasure to relate to you the facts within my knowledge concerning this great catastrophe. Early in the year 1919 I became associated with other attorneys in representing a large group of claimants in the Moose Lake Lawler Soo Line area.

We tried the Anderson case in this district in the fall of 1919 and secured a jury verdict in favor of the plaintiff. The case was taken to the supreme court and was there affirmed. The rule of law applicable to the fire cases there laid down was never disturbed.

In the spring of 1920 the so-called " Cloquet " cases were grouped under a stipulation for a trial before five district judges on the question of liability and at about the same time a group of between 800 and 1,000 cases in the Moose Lake area was agreed to be tried under a similar stipulation before the same district judge.

The Cloquet cases were determined by the judges about the middle of September and by that determination liability was fixed upon the Railroad Administration for the destruction of the city of Cloquet and this case was later affirmed in the supreme court.

Following the Cloquet judge decision and on September 20, 1920, we began the trial of the Moose Lake cases. This trial continued with a few short intermissions until May 1921. The evidence was then concluded but because of the great number of witnesses the amount of territory covered and the enormous amount of detail work necessary to analyze the various cases, decision was not made by the judges.

I feel safe in saying that in the great majority of these cases there was little question but that the plaintiffs would recover the full amount of their loss.

In July 1921 the Cloquet case was decided in the supreme court and considerable effort was made to secure an adjustment not only of adjudicated cases but those not yet concluded where it was safe to say liability would be established.

One can hardly appreciate the condition of these claimants. Their homes and all their personal belongings, except what they had on their backs at the time of the fire, was destroyed. They had neither property, money, nor credit. Money had to be raised to meet the necessary expenses of the witnesses and plaintiffs while the cases were being tried. The courts of the district were literally glutted with actions. Many thousands were pending. It was humanly impossible to determine all of these cases separately within any reasonable time. After the determination in the Cloquet case the Railroad Administration announced that it would be their policy from then on to insist upon the trial of each case to a jury and to a final determination in the supreme court and that no cases would be permitted to be grouped. This policy of the Administration in view of the then conditions, amounted to a denial of justice for they well knew that the claimants in their destitute condition were powerless to continue such an unequal fight against the United States Government.

Prior to the grouping of these cases, it was specifically announced that the Administration wanted some determinative adjudication—something that would be outstanding—and for that reason the Cloquet cases were grouped because they afforded an excellent opportunity to determine a large amount of damages and broad scope of territory and also afforded as good a defense as the Administration had hoped to present in any case. We were also advised that if the claimants succeeded in that case they would be paid 100 cents on the dollar for their losses. But if they were defeated, the Government would pay nothing and it would practically determine the controversy.

We found a reversal of announced policy and a change of attitude on the part of the Administration when they were defeated in the Cloquet cases. Their (the Railroad Administration) subsequent conduct indicated very clearly that they were intent upon making as small a settlement as possible with the claimants. They were in a position to force such settlement and proceeded to do so.

When judgments were entered in the various cases demand was made for payment and payment was refused. Under the Federal statutes the Director General was instructed to promptly pay final judgments. This he refused to do.

In the fall of 1921, after final determination in the Cloquet case, the Director General proposed a somewhat general settlement in which he insisted that all determined cases be included and offered 50 percent of the net loss provided everyone accepted the settlement; otherwise no one was to be paid. In this proposal he stipulated further that each claimant must prepare and file with him an itemized, verified statement setting forth in great detail each item of loss.

As I have indicated, claimants were in great distress—many were living on charity. They knew that the Government could continue litigation indefinitely and any settlement that would give them partial relief they were compelled to accept.

The fact that they were not permitted to levy an execution to enforce payment of their judgments was a determining factor in compelling this settlement. After their acceptance of the proposal they filed verified statements of loss and the railroad claim agents and investigators carefully examined and scrutinized the claims and the administration itself, contrary to the desire and wishes of the claimant, fixed and determined the amount of the loss. Then they applied the 50 percent to such determined amount. The result was that in practically every instance claimant did not receive in excess of 25 percent of his actual loss.

What your bill proposes to do, as I understand it, is to provide for the payment to these claimants whose losses were absolutely adjudicated, the balance of the amount the Government determined they lost. It is not a case of the ordinary railroad settlement where a claimant insists upon a large amount and a compromise amount is agreed upon and then paid in full.

These claimants were first compelled to itemize and verify their loss, then the railroad, after a complete investigation, arbitrarily determined the amount of the loss and then paid them only half of that determined amount.

I know it is hard for anyone who did not actually go through this litigation and know the terrible conditions that existed to understand the nature of this transaction. I do not hesitate in saying that, in my judgment, this amounts to coercion and duress arising from necessity and poverty and the unequal position of the litigants. The Railroad Administration had a revolving fund of $300,000,000 out of which these claims could be paid. They spent in the neighborhood of a million dollars defending the cases. The litigation continued over a period of about 7 years. The Administration absolutely refused to even make an offer of settlement in any district where adjudication was not had and liability fixed.

It is difficult to make a brief statement of the facts touching these cases. The fire extended over some 1,500 square miles of territory—more than 7,000 homes were destroyed, more than 500 people lost their lives, upwards of 2,000 people were so badly injured they needed medical attention.

No one who knows the facts can fail to sympathize with these people and their cause.

When they come before Congress asking for the balance of their loss, as determined by the Railroad Administration officials, they are only asking for justice. When this amount is paid in full the Government will have made a fair settlement of these losses.

The thing that appeals to me particularly in this situation is that in the first instance the Railroad Administration invited a determination by the district judges and the courts of Minnesota of the question of liability, and when that question was determined they absolutely ignored the findings of the courts of our State.

I do hope this statement may be of service to you in bringing this just cause to the attention of Congress in the interest of the people of Minnesota.

Respectfully submitted. JOHN P. DEVANEY,
Chief Justice Minnesota Supreme Court.

In order that there may be no misunderstanding about the method by which these claims were settled, I wish to insert the following statement indicating in sample cases the amounts claimed, the actual loss determined, and the amounts actually paid:

	Amount of loss claimed by fire sufferers	Amount of loss determined by Railway Administration	Amount paid by Government
Therese Kupso (Cloquet)	$3,827.62	$2,800	$1,400
Otto Bush (farmer)	13,134.50	7,900	3,160
James R. Grady (farmer)	23,976.75	12,000	4,800
Anton Dombrosky (farmer)	20,429.00	10,000	4,000
Erick Lundberg (farmer)	10,847.60	6,000	2,400
Ole Johnson (farmer)	12,571.50	9,500	3,800
George A. Parker (farmer)	11,816.35	7,000	2,800
Edmund Archambault (farmer)	9,385.65	5,000	2,000
Fred A. Balcom (farmer)	8,781.50	4,000	1,600
Henry F. Colson (mechanic)	6,139.59	4,000	1,600
Fred A. Peterson (farmer)	9,078.50	6,500	2,600
Charles DeWitt (mechanic)	8,782.58	6,750	3,375
John Iwasko (farmer)	19,875.40	13,000	6,500
Total	158,646.54	94,450	40,035

Every claim affected by this bill is based on similar judgment or determination by the Railway Administration.

In fairness, I wish to state that some of these claimants received insurance, the amount of which was deducted from the amount of loss determined by the Railroad Administration, and thereafter the Government paid a percentage of the amount after such deduction; so that no claimant received total payments of more than 50 percent of such determined loss.

A careful study and consideration of this bill will show without question the justice of these claims; and on behalf of the thousands of people who lost their homes and their property in this fire I wish to commend this bill, H. R. 3662, to your careful and impartial consideration.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a letter from the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the State of Minnesota and a letter from Mr. McIntyre, secretary to the President.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to say to the House that quite a large number of Members have requested time to speak; some ask for 30 minutes, and several are quite insistent upon speaking immediately after the reading of the Journal. I have made no objection to short speeches to limit of 5 minutes. But when the order of business is determined, and the majority whip has notified the Members and they convene in this way to help attend to that business, it is an imposition on the House to have to sit and listen to long speeches before the regular business of the day is taken up.

I have been trying to persuade all Members who feel they must have more time than 5 minutes to either take it during general debate or later in the day when it will not compel the other Members to sit here sometimes an hour or more waiting for the business of the House to begin. I do not want to be the sole censor of speeches, or how long they shall be, or when they shall be delivered, but I do feel that business is more important than speeches.

Today is, by unanimous consent, set apart for the consideration of the Private Calendar, and there are 240 bills on that calendar, and the authors and many other Members are here expressly for that purpose, and they have already listened to some half dozen speeches. Many Members complain of the custom of permitting numerous speeches, especially long ones, before business begins. Of course, on important anniversaries or some special occasion it may be eminently fitting.

As the temporary acting leader of the House I want to be courteous to all, and as fair as possible to both sides of the House, but I fear I am subject to some criticism for being too good-natured in relation to speeches. I just submit this situation to the House. If any other Member feels that a request to speak more than 5 minutes, especially before the business of the House is commenced, he will ordinarily have my hearty approval.

Mr. BACON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BACON. I will help the gentleman be the censor of the House. If he does not want to object, I will.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will appreciate the gentleman execising his good judgment for the orderly conduct of the business of the House. I am not going to object to this gentleman's request to speak 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I appreciate the position of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] in reference to Members who want time in order to make speeches. I also would like to have the Members have a little sympathy for those who are trying to protect the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, on the 14th, 15th, and 16th of March this year the Federal Treasury agents raided and seized 1,281 bootleg stills. For the entire year of 1934 their average per month was from 1,100 to 1,500 stills.

Mr. KNUTSON. Was that in the gentleman's district?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The capacity for the illicit production of liquor in this country, by Mr. Choate's own intimation, and he is Chairman of the Federal Alcohol Control Authority, exceeds the original allocations made to the legitimate distilleries of the United States. In my remarks I will dwell at some length on the misguided program and policy of the Treasury Department in seeking to cope with the bootleg element of this country, thereby not only serving to destroy the legitimate industry but seeking ostensibly also to destroy the cooperage industry as well.

Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the Members of the House, may I say that no beverage may be marketed in containers in excess of 1 gallon, and those containers must be glass. The glass people have a monopoly on all the containers used for this purpose at the present time at the expense of the cooperage industry. If the Members will read my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD tomorrow they will find that "snoopism" is going on to such an extreme that they are tracing every shipment of sugar, molasses, and all the ingredients that go into that good old Arkansas and Tennessee "corn" in the hope that they will thereby put the crossroads bootlegger and moonshiner out of business. If Mr. Morgenthau continues with this policy I am afraid he will have an agent camped on every doorstep to see whether the housewife is using the family sugar supply for domestic purposes or for conversion into illicit liquor.

Mr. ECKWALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. I may say to the gentleman that I was the only Member on the floor of the House who opposed the regulation in reference to bottle containers to which the gentleman refers. Will the gentleman join with me in getting that provision repealed?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will be only too happy to join with the distinguished gentleman from New York in an effort to rid the Nation of this bootleg industry at the expense of legitimate business.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The only way to stop bootlegging is to take the duty off all imported liquors and thereby throw all of the bootleggers of the country out of business.

Mr. DIRKSEN. What I started to say is there appeared this week in a press dispatch published in one of the Washington newspapers, a disclosure that in three raids made by the Treasury Department agents on March 14, 15, and 16, 1,281 illicit stills were seized. That in itself is a sad commentary on the handling of the liquor business in this country, but what intrigued me most about that report was that so-called "materials detectives" of the Treasury are tracing shipments of corn, molasses, sugar, and other materials to ascertain whether or not they go into legal or illegal channels. In fact, reports are now required from manufacturers, importers, jobbers, dealers, and others who must report allegedly large sales of sugar and molasses and other ingredients of the celebrated "cawn liquor", whether shipped by truck or train and to whom sold. If a confectioner buys a sizable quantity of such materials, he is investigated to determine whether it is being used for candy or "cawn liquor." In fact, it is boasted that mountain moonshiners are now having such difficulty in obtaining moonshine supplies that they now resort to the use of ordinary cane sugar, purchased in small quantities at the crossroads grocery. All of which proves by the Treasury's own admission that "snooping" is by no means a lost art and that the housewife better hide the family sugar bowl or the Treasury might become suspicious and place its agents on the trail to find out whether the family sugar supply is being used for fudge, angel food, coffee, and strawberries, or whether it is being converted into sparkling moonshine. Will governmental "snoopery" ever end, after a fateful 13 years of prohibition and 1 year of repeal, or must this generation go through life, as the snoopiest in the history of the Republic?

Perhaps an equally pertinent question would be: What has this mistaken policy of the Treasury accomplished—this policy of high but disappointing taxes, rigorous code regulations, burdensome restrictions, coupled with a determination to use more Federal agents, more Coast Guard cutters, and more enforcement methods to stamp out bootlegging? The answer might be nothing. Perhaps a better answer would be worse than nothing.

The Treasury stands condemned by its own record and its own accomplishment. One thousand two hundred and eighty-one illicit stills in 3 days in this month of March 1935. An average of from 1,100 to 1,500 seizures per month for the entire year of 1934. A total of $163,534,397 in revenue from distilled spirits for 1934 as against anticipated revenues that were estimated between $350,000,000 and $500,000,000. A total withdrawal of tax-paid spirits for consumption in 1934 of 69,648,303 gallons, of which 7,178,608 gallons were imported, as against an average consumption of 130,000,000 gallons between the years of 1912 and 1916, despite the fact that since that time we have gained 23,000,000 in population. It is a most inglorious record, and the question naturally arises as to how long the Treasury will persist in this mistaken policy before it sees the light and adopts a policy of crushing the illicit manufacture and sale of liquor by taking the profit out of that nefarious enterprise.

Conservative estimates are that the bootlegger is still doing from 50 to 70 percent of the Nation's liquor business. On the basis of all still seizures in 1934, it is estimated that the production capacity of illicit stills was in excess of 270,000,000 gallons, which is greater than the original allotted capacity of legal distilleries. Even Mr. Choate, the Administrator of the Federal Alcohol Control Authority, admits the probability that, aside from smuggling and illegal diversion of spirits, the bootleggers are producing a quantity of liquor that "cannot be much less than we drank before prohibition."

Why does the bootlegger persist? Why does he thrive as never before? If any one doubts the latter statement, permit me to say that a vinegar plant in New York went so far as to get an R. F. C. loan of $40,000, on which $25,000 has actually been disbursed, only to have the R. F. C. discover a little later that Government agents arrested the owner and proprietor of the plant for illegal diversion of alcohol. When bootleggers manage to procure R. F. C. loans, who will deny that they are thriving; and, if so, there must be a reason.

Obviously the first reason is high taxes. An excise tax of $2 per gallon plus a rectifiers' tax of 30 cents per gallon is a satisfactory profit in itself for any bootlegger, and so long as high taxes remain there will be bootlegging. As a natural corollary, so long as bootlegging flourishes a large proportion of the spirits consumed in this country will pay no taxes and the Federal Treasury will be the loser.

A second reason is the unjustifiable restrictions in the codes which prohibit the sale of liquor in any other containers except glass bottles with a capacity not in excess of 1 gallon. This restriction applies to all except rectifiers, blenders, and State-owned stores, who are permitted to purchase in bulk.

It was contended that the limitation of the sale and distribution of liquor to bottled goods made it easy to identify packages and aid in enforcing the regulations, but it must be apparent to everyone now that since the bootleggers market their fluid wares in 5-gallon cans, and since a vast number of retailers have taken to filling empty bottles with illicit liquor in a way which completely defies detection unless a Federal agent is at hand the very moment the operation takes place, it can no longer be contended that sale of liquor only in bottles is an aid to enforcement. The record in that respect speaks for itself.

On the other hand, this bottle restriction, together with added freight rates, adds from $1.25 to $1.60 and more to the cost of a gallon of liquor. First of all, it may be safely asserted that the cost of labels, corks, bottles, cartons, seals, bottling-machinery investment, and other items adds from $1 to $1.25 per gallon. In addition to that, a 48-gallon barrel of liquor when bottled into 16 cases of 24 pints each will weigh nearly 500 pounds more than when in bulk and, for average distances, will add from 25 to 35 cents per gallon to the cost because of extra freight charges. These extra charges when added to the high excise taxes offer some explanation of the fact that prices for liquors are high and thereby confer a decided advantage upon the bootlegger, who pays no taxes and markets his goods in bulk.

One of the penalties of this bottle limitation is that it is no longer possible for small distillers to finance a portion of their inventories by the sale of warehouse receipts. Time was when a tavern keeper could purchase whisky by the barrel, leaving it in bond and withdrawing it as it was needed. It was aged in the wood, and when withdrawn made it possible for him to sell good liquor in bulk at a reasonable price. Who will contend that liquor can age in a glass bottle, and who will deny that the redtape and the restrictions which now enmesh the sale and distribution of liquor have added materially to the price and opened the door for chiseling and cheating?

There appears in the picture, however, this additional consideration. The restriction on the sale and distribution of liquor in glass bottles not to exceed 1-gallon capacity has operated to penalize the cooperage industry which for years enjoyed prosperity, gave employment to quite a number of people, and scattered its benefits among farmers and growers of oak timber as well.

In anticipation of repeal they rehabilitated their plants in different sections of the country, contracted for timber and raw materials, and went to tremendous expense, only to find that through unjust and onerous regulations, their production would be confined almost entirely to standard 48-gallon barrels which are used to store and age whisky in warehouses. There are 119 of these plants in this country who could normally employ about 20,000 men, but today they employ little more than 4,000. If these arduous restrictions in the codes were lifted, they could not only manufacture more barrels but kegs of various sizes as well, and thereby employ many more men and aid to that extent in the solution of the most important problem before the Nation today—the problem of unemployment.

It is therefore imperative that the Treasury in the interest of more taxes, in the interest of fairness to legitimate industry, in the interest of ridding the Nation of bootleggers, in the interest of better and more reasonably priced liquor, and in the interest of playing fair with an industry which is as old as the Republic itself, that these code restrictions be lifted and that taxes be reduced.

Once more for the sake of emphasis, let me point out that the Federal tax today on 190-proof alcohol is $3.80 per gallon. This alcohol can be made and sold at a profit for 60 cents per gallon, making a total of $4.40. Bootleggers are now selling illicitly made alcohol for $1.80 per gallon, realizing a profit of $1.20, selling their wares at a price which is $2 per gallon below the tax and at the same time defrauding Uncle Sam and cheating the public. With such a large profit in this business and the spirit of adventure still moving some people to try a business that is so profitable, how can the Treasury ever expect to rid the Nation of this evil by its present policies?

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House the Clerk will call the Private Calendar, starting with the first bill on the calendar.

In accordance with the rule recently adopted, under which the Private Calendar will be called, two objections are required. The Chair, under the rule, will not be permitted to recognize any Member for a reservation of objection.

LAKE B. MORRISON

The Clerk called the first bill on the Private Calendar (H. R. 617), to correct the military record of Lake B. Morrison.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Lake B. Morrison, late of Captain Horner's company, Third Regiment Potomac Home Brigade Maryland Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 29th day of September 1862: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DANIEL W. SEAL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1846, for the relief of Daniel W. Seal.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Daniel W. Seal, who was a member of Company B, Fiftieth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 25th day of August 1865: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

SAMUEL KAUFMAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3722, for the relief of Samuel Kaufman.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice, because the bill has already passed the House and is now on the Senate Calendar. Through some mistake the clerk of the Military Affairs Committee has put this bill on the calendar twice. It was passed on a previous Private Calendar day.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman want this bill laid on the table?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may go over without prejudice, because the bill is already agreed to so far as the House is concerned.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

JOHN COSTIGAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 972, for the relief of John Costigan.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and laws conferring rights upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows, and dependent relatives, John Costigan shall hereafter be held and considered to have been in the military service of the United States as a private in Company D, Fifth Regiment United States Cavalry, from March 27, 1878, and to have been honorably discharged May 31, 1881: Provided, That no back pay, pension, or other back allowance shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the objection stage is passed.

The SPEAKER. The bill has been read and has passed the objection stage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NELLIE OLIVER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5133, for the relief of Nellie Oliver.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, the Members on both sides of the aisle, who are officially requested and designated to carefully examine into the reports and merits of all these bills on this Private Calendar, have not had time to sufficiently examine further than 65 or 70 of these bills, and, inasmuch as under the new rule, that we are considering these bills, next Tuesday is set apart for this calendar, I feel that we ought to give the examiners that time within which to finish the remainder of these bills and be prepared to take them up at that time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Did I understand the gentleman to say this calendar would be taken up again next Tuesday?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes. Under this new rule which we adopted the other day, the Private Calendar is in order on the first and third Tuesdays of each month, so that next Tuesday is definitely set aside for this calendar.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

H. R. 6026

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following bill to promote the general welfare of the citizens of the United States introduced by me.

A bill to promote the general welfare of the citizens of the United States by the exercise of the police powers of the Government through the imposition of an excise charge upon the privilege of the use and enjoyment of large landholdings, based upon their unimproved value, and a special excise charge with respect to the carrying on or doing business by corporations, joint-stock companies, or associations

Whereas through inadequate exercise of the State and National power to tax the unimproved value of land created by the existence of the community, grievous abuses have arisen, including speculation in land, deprivation of citizens of their free right to labor, and interference with industry by individual and corporate activity; and

Whereas it is desirable that the privilege of ownership in valuable tracts of land, rather than agriculture, industry, and the processes of production and exchange should bear a special burden through a levy upon the enjoyment of such privilege; and

Whereas for the purpose of promoting the general welfare it is incumbent upon the Government of the United States to levy such a charge and such levy is done as a carrying out of the police powers of the Government; therefore

Be it enacted, etc.,

DEFINITIONS

LAND; LAND VALUE

SECTION 1. (1) The term "land" shall mean and include the surface of the ground with all easements in, on, and over the same, whether covered by water or not, and including water power and rights, docks, natural deposits of minerals of all kinds, waters, oils, gases, peats, and other substances, and including advantages of access to markets, and including any rights-of-way, terminals, and franchise permits, and/or grants for the purpose of acquiring, constructing, maintaining, or operating any railroad, public utility, or water power, and/or for the purpose of the conservation and regulation of the height and flow of water in public reservoirs, and the term "land value" or "value of the land" shall not include the value of improvements, nor physical preparation cost, nor the value of standing timber, nor the value of original or improved fertility: Provided, That the value of the land thus ascertained shall not exceed the fair market value of the land.

IMPROVEMENT VALUE

(2) The phrase "value of improvement" shall mean and include, in their existing condition of depreciation, depletion or obsolescence, computed on the basis of original cost at the time when the improvement was made, not including interest and not on the basis of cost of reproduction, the value of all structures on, above, or under the surface of the ground, whether buildings, fences, wells, dams, tiling, mining improvements, road improvements, or other structures or improvements upon, over, or under the surface of the land, whether similar to these or not, which are or have been required to be constructed and maintained at the expense of the taxpayer.

PREPARATION COST

(3) The term "preparation cost" shall mean and include the net cost of clearing, drainage, or other original preparation of the land prior to or in preparation for improvement or cultivation and not requiring to be maintained at the expense of the taxpayer; and shall include any special assessments for permanent improvements assessed to the owner of the land: Provided, That from any valuation of preparation cost shall be deducted such part of said value as shall equal the accrual of 3 percent of the same for each year since the time when such preparation cost was incurred, and without interest on the same.

STANDING TIMBER VALUE

(4) The term "value of standing timber" shall mean and include the gross value on the stump of growing trees, whether natural growth, seeded, or planted, and the value of orchard trees, and shall not include such value as the land would have if depleted of standing timber or fertility but not cleared for cultivation.

FERTILITY VALUE

(5) The term "value of fertility" shall mean and include the value of the original and improved fertility of the soil but not including the value of the land in a depleted condition. The value of original fertility shall mean the value of the fertility of the soil in its original or virgin condition, determined as 50 percent of such value as the land would have exclusive of standing timber, preparation cost, improvements, and improved fertility in its existing location were its original fertility to remain at par: Provded, That in no case shall the value of original fertility exceed 50 percent of the value of the land for exclusively agricultural purposes. The value of improved fertility shall be determined as the reasonable value in existing condition of the fertility added to the land in excess of the value of the original fertility.

EXCISE CHARGE; CORPORATIONS

SEC. 2. All persons, firms, and associations not of a corporate character, owning land or lands whose aggregate value is in excess of $3,000, whether in possession or leased to others, shall be subject to an excise charge upon the privilege of the use and enjoyment of such excess at the rate of 1 percent per annum. Where land is leased and the value of the lease is in excess of $3,000, such value shall be deducted from consideration in determining the charge to be assessed against the owner, and shall be charged against the lease. Where the title to land is held in common or by entireties, or in joint tenancies, or subject to estates of dower or life estates or otherwise, so that the several ownerships make up the complete legal title and the entire ownership has a value in excess of $3,000, then the several ownerships shall pay an excise charge based upon their proportionate share in the ownership, and for the purpose of estimating the value of the proportionate share of those owning estates less than an unqualified fee simple, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall establish rules based upon average life expectancy or otherwise, as the case may be.

EXCISE CHARGE; NOT CORPORATIONS

SEC. 3. Every corporation, joint-stock company, or association, organized for profit and having a capital stock represented by shares, shall pay annually, aside from any special taxes levied upon them, a special excise charge with respect of the carrying on or doing business by such corporation, joint-stock company, or association, equivalent to 1 percent upon the value of land or lands whose aggregate value is in excess of $3,000 whether in possession or leased to others. The remaining provisions of section 2 shall apply to such corporations, joint-stock companies, or associations organized for profit in a manner corresponding to their application to persons, firms, and associations not of a corporate nature.

RETURNS

SEC. 4. It shall be the duty of every owner of any interest in land, including those holding an active trusteeship, held either in fee or in lease, the value of the fee or lease of which is in excess of $3,000, to return under oath his interest therein before March 1 of each year to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue on blanks to be prepared by him. Such blanks shall contain, among other information, provisions for the following:

Description of tracts in which an interest is held and the nature and extent of interest, price paid by owner, or, if he received the same by gift, death, devise, or inheritance, the amount paid by his predecessor in interest for the entire tract with its improvements, if any; valuation placed upon entire land or lease of interest therein by owner; offers received by owner for any parcel of such land or interest therein within the 2 previous years; price at which improvements have been reckoned in any offer of sale; amount spent by the owner, or, so far as he knows, any person in making improvements; net price at which owner would be willing to sell land with and without improvements; assessed value of land for all purposes with separate value of improvements if given separately on local tax books, and the values claimed for preparation cost, standing timber, and fertility.

Such return shall not be conclusive of the value of the land, but the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall determine therefrom, and from such other data as he may obtain, the true value of the landholdings of any owner. The returns shall be as of the date of the preceding December 31. But in any proceedings of condemnation or otherwise in which the United States may be concerned, said return may be used as evidence of facts therein stated as of the date of the return.

It shall be the duty of the owner in the event of the sale of all or of any part of the land of which he has reported himself the owner or any assignment of lease thereof within the calendar year in which his return is made to include in his return to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the price at which said sale or assignment may be taken place.

ASSESSMENT OF EXCISE CHARGE; NOTICE

SEC. 5. As soon as practicable after the return is filed it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to examine the same; to compute the amount of excise charge against each owner chargeable therefor and on or before the 1st day of June in each year to mail to the said owner a statement showing the amount of excise charge due and payable by him, but a failure on the part of said Commissioner to mail the same or on the part of the party charged to receive it shall not invalidate the assessment or relieve the owner of his duty to pay said excise charge.

PAYMENT OF EXCISE CHARGE

TIME OF PAYMENT

SEC. 6. (1) The total amount of excise charge imposed by this act shall be paid on or before the 1st day of August following the computation of the charge.

INSTALLMENT PAYMENTS

(2) The charge payer may elect to pay the charge in three equal installments, in which case the first installment shall be paid on the date prescribed for the payment of the charge, the second installment shall be paid on or before the 1st day of October thereafter, and the third installment shall be paid on or before the 1st day of December thereafter. If any installment is not paid on or before the day fixed for its payment, the whole amount of the charge unpaid shall be paid upon notice and demand from the collector.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR PAYMENT

(3) At the request of the taxpayer, the Commissioner may extend the time for payment of the charge, or any installment thereof, for a period not to exceed 6 months from the date prescribed for the payment of the tax or an installment thereof. In such case the amount in respect of which the extension is granted shall be paid on or before the date of the expiration of the period of the extension, together with interest at the rate of 6 percent per annum computed for the period of the extension.

FRACTIONAL PART OF A CENT

(4) In the payment of any charge under this act, a fractional part of a cent shall be disregarded, unless it amounts to one-half cent or more, in which case it shall be increased to 1 cent.

RECEIPTS

(5) Every collector to whom any payment of any excise charge is made shall, upon request, give to the person making such payment a full written or printed receipt therefor.

FAILURE TO FILE RETURN

SEC. 7. In case of any failure to make and file a return required under section 4 within the time prescribed by law, 25 percent of the excise charge shall be added to the charge, except that when a return is filed after such time and it is shown that the failure to file it was due to reasonable cause and not to willful neglect no such addition shall be made to the charge. The amount so added to any charge shall be collected at the same time and in the same manner and as a part of the charge, unless the charge has been paid before the discovery of the neglect, in which case the amount so added shall be collected in the same manner as the charge.

ADDITIONS TO EXCISE CHARGE IN CASE OF NONPAYMENT

SEC. 8. If any excise charge or installment thereof is not paid on or before the date prescribed for its payment, there shall be collected as part of the charge interest upon such unpaid amount at the rate of 1 percent per month from the date prescribed for its payment until it is paid.

COLLECTION AFTER ASSESSMENT

SEC. 9. If any excise charge or installment thereof shall remain unpaid at the time prescribed in section 6 (1 and 2) or after the time agreed upon in section 6 (3) such charge may be collected by distraint or by a proceeding in court, but only if begun within 6 years after the assessment of the charge or prior to the expiration of any period for collection agreed upon in writing by the Commissioner and the chargepayer before the expiration of such 6-year period. The period so agreed upon may be extended by subsequent agreements in writing made before the expiration of the period previously agreed upon.

SEPARABILITY CLAUSE

SEC. 10. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provisions to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 11. This act shall apply to the United States, Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico.

EFFECTIVE DATE OF ACT

SEC. 12. This act shall take effect upon its enactment, and the first return required under section 4 shall be made as of January 1, 1936.

THE 6-CENT EQUIPMENT ALLOWANCE

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I am impelled to say a few words in behalf of the rural letter carriers, to whom the Nation owes such a deep debt of gratitude for faithful, efficient service that means so much to the country.

There will be unanimity among Members of the House when I express appreciation of the work of these splendid public servants. Congressmen from country districts, familiar with the obstacles and burdens of the rural carrier, delivering mail over roads that are frequently in poor condition and in all kinds of weather, no matter how stormy, will be in particular agreement with me.

This leads to a mention of the Dockweiler bill (H. R. 6724), which would increase the equipment allowance of these carriers from 4 to 6 cents a mile and would limit the length of future routes to 60 miles. This bill received the unanimous approval last year of the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and will, I am confident, be approved by the committee again this year. Before the measure was introduced, Congressman DOCKWEILER conferred with Chairman "JIM" MEAD, of the committee, who has long been an advocate of the 6-cent rate and the 60-mile limit.

The justice of the 6-cent rate is especially noteworthy in South Dakota, where 80 percent of the highways are dirt roads. In my State it is doubtful if even 6 cents a mile is a sufficient equipment allowance, but probably it would be a fair middle-ground figure for the whole country. Even if 4 cents is enough in some localities, it is not enough in most places, and it is very unjust to the carrier to expect him to take care of the wear and tear of his equipment out of a measly 4 cents for each mile of the route.

CLAIMANTS WHO SUFFERED LOSS FROM FIRES SET BY GOVERNMENT-OPERATED RAILROADS IN MINNESOTA IN 1918

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for yesterday, on page 4644, I discussed some features of the Minnesota fire claimants' bill introduced by Congressman RYAN. It is H. R. 3662, and the report number is 255. I pointed out that the Government operated the railroads, set the fires that caused the damage, and that the courts so held. Then, as I indicated in my remarks, the Government refused to pay for the loss in full, but insisted on a so-called "compromise", and paid only a portion of the loss.

I want to discuss with you this so-called "compromise", because one of my colleagues remarked today that the bill, according to his information, ought not pass the House because the claimants executed releases to the Government. I said to him: "That statement that has been made to you is only a half truth. You have not been told that the governmental officials did things that amount to coercion." He admitted that he had never heard about that.

I think, perhaps, that other colleagues may have been misinformed as to the so-called "releases" and "satisfactions of judgments" in connection with these various claims. It is true that these documents were executed. But the people who signed them had no choice in view of the attitude of the Railroad Administration which dictated absolutely the terms and conditions.

Congressman Goodwin, of Minnesota, said in the hearing before the Claims Committee, on March 28, 1930:

> The ordinary man who has a claim against the Government realizes the tremendous power that lodges in the Government. They are rather fearful and hesitant about pressing a claim which involves litigation—long-drawn-out litigation. So that when the Railroad Administration, or the Government, which is the same thing in this case, offered these settlers certain terms, amounting to 40 percent or 50 percent on the dollar, with the hopelessness of the situation confronting them, they were just as much obliged to settled those cases in their helpless situation as though a man stood over them threatening physical violence.
> I see no difference between a threat of physical violence and the terms offered these settlers. These Government agents told those settlers on what basis they would settle, and the settlers understood that if those terms were not accepted the Government would proceed to try every case individually, and there would be years and years of delay and a tremendous expense imposed upon people who did not have a dime with which to pay attorneys or prosecute their claims. I maintain that these families who have suffered this tremendous loss—they lost everything they had in the world, and most of them stood under the open sky with empty hands, fathers with families and wives and children dependent upon them, and no place to turn for shelter or help—are entitled to fair consideration.

There is no doubt that former Congressman Goodwin correctly stated the circumstances under which releases and satisfactions of judgment were secured. It is ridiculous to suggest that there was any fairness in the method followed to obtain these documents. The Ryan bill, H. R. 3662, is entitled to your support.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the majority leader what the program is for Monday?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The Consent Calendar will be called on Monday, and, I understand, there are quite a number of bills on this calendar. There may be some suspensions also.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is it the expectation to take up the conference report on the works-relief bill on Monday?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We expect to; that is the present intention.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, does the majority leader know what bills will be taken up under suspension of the rules?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No, I do not; that is in the hands of the Speaker.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, is the Chair able to tell us what bills are likely to be taken up under suspension?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not in position to give the gentleman this information. The Chair has made no commitments for suspensions except probably with respect to a bill in reference to a treaty with Mexico relating to reciprocity.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD in my remarks made upon the floor this morning a small portion of a letter I received from Dr. Richard W. Hogue relative to the educational situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes on Monday after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table. I wish to talk about the textile industry. We are having an extremely difficult time in this industry, as is known.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is very sure the gentlewoman from Massachusetts will have no trouble Monday if she will defer this request, in view of the announcement the Chair made a week or two ago with reference to requests for permission to address the House at a future date.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The Chair wishes me to make the request on Monday?

The SPEAKER. If the gentlewoman from Massachusetts does not mind deferring it until then.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and under the rule referred as follows:

S. 732. An act for the relief of Zinsser & Co.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. J. Res. 174. Joint resolution to permit articles imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the California-Pacific International Exposition, San Diego, Calif., to be admitted without payment of tariff, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 403. An act to amend the act of Congress approved March 1, 1899, entitled "An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to remove dangerous and unsafe buildings and parts thereof, and for other purposes", and to further amend said act by adding at the end thereof new sections nos. 5 and 6; and

S. 406. An act to amend an act approved May 1, 1906, entitled "An act to create a Board for the Condemnation of Insanitary Buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Monday, April 1, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORT OF THE BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the chief scout executive of the Boy Scouts of America, submitting, pursuant to law, the Twenty-fifth Annual Report of the Boy Scouts of America, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Oklahoma, which was ordered to lie on the table:

A resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to appropriate a sufficient fund to enable the public schools of the Nation to maintain a normal term in the present general emergency

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Fifteenth Legislature of the State of Oklahoma:

Whereas the public schools in many of the States are in a serious plight due to lack of funds whereby they may be kept open and in operation for the remainder of the current school year; and

Whereas local and State revenues are in many cases completely exhausted and schools are being closed, thereby seriously disturbing the educational program and endangering the welfare of the Nation; and

Whereas many sources of revenue hitherto reserved for use by the several States or their subdivisions are now being used by the Government of the United States, thereby decreasing the abilities of said States and subdivisions to finance education adequately; and

Whereas education should be recognized as an exceedingly important function of government, and one that can be neglected only at the Nation's peril; and

Whereas there is now up for consideration by the Congress of the United States an amendment to the general relief measure providing that the sum of $40,000,000 be allocated to the several States for the purpose of maintaining a normal length of school term throughout the Nation: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the fifteenth session of the Oklahoma Legislature, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is memorialized to allocate said sum of $40,000,000 to maintain a full and normal term of school in the several States of the Nation that are unable to finance their educational programs for the remainder of the current school year.

Resolved further, That engrossed copy of this resolution be immediately forwarded to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress, and a copy to each of our United States Senators and Representatives in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Assembly Joint Resolution 39. relating to memorializing Congress to incorporate in a national old-age-pension plan the principles and objectives of the Townsend plan

Whereas various proposals for the establishment of old-age pensions are now under consideration by the Congress of the United States; and

Whereas the revolving old-age-pension plan originated by Dr. F. E. Townsend, of California, has been presented to the United States Senate and the National House of Representatives; and

Whereas the program contemplates both relief for the aged and wide-spread adjustments in our economic system certain to result in improved working conditions and in extensive reduction of unemployment among thousands of men and women under the age of 60 years; and

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Congress of the United States is respectfully urged to enact H. R. 3977, introduced in the House of Representatives January 16, 1935, and cited as the "Townsend Old-Age Revolving Pension Act", which is as follows:

"SEC. 2. That every citizen of the United States 60 years of age and over, or who shall attain the age of 60 years after the passage of this act, while actually residing in the United States, shall be entitled to receive, upon application and qualification, a pension in the sum of $200 per month during the life of the pensioner: Provided, That (a) the pensioner shall discontinue and refrain from all gainful competitive pursuits or salaried positions of any kind; (b) the pensioner shall covenant and agree that he or she will within 30 days of receipt of said pension expend all of the same for goods, commodities, or services within the jurisdiction of the United States; (c) proof of age and citizenship shall be according to the law and procedure of the State of residence of the pensioner; and (d) this pension shall be wholly exempt from attachment, garnishment, or execution.

"SEC. 3. There is hereby levied a tax of 2 percent on the gross dollar value of each business, commercial, and/or financial transaction done within the United States. The President of the United States is hereby empowered by Executive order to increase or decrease the 2 percent tax by not more than 50 percent, when in his discretion he deems it advisable, in order to adequately finance the said pension roll. This tax shall be levied in addition to any other Federal tax on goods or commodities. This tax so levied shall be paid by the seller once each calendar month, calculated on the seller's aggregate gross sales, in accordance with rules and regulations to be promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

"(a) It is hereby provided, in order to facilitate the collection of this tax, that all sellers of goods, commodities, and commercial things of value shall obtain a license upon payment of a fee, the amount thereof to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, who is empowered with full authority to use his discretion as to methods and means of collecting this tax.

"SEC. 4. Any qualified pensioner who, for any justifiable reason, has failed to legally receive and disburse said pension, may, upon proper proof, be reinstated and thereafter receive the pension.

"(a) All pensioners under this act shall be permitted to expend not more than 15 percent of each monthly pension for charity, church, and fraternal organizations.

"(b) Pensioners under this act shall receive no other pension from the United States nor from any State nor any political subdivision thereof, except all disabled war veterans now receiving or who may receive disability allowance, compensation, or pension from the United States Government.

"(c) The benefits of this act shall not accrue to any person while an inmate of an insane asylum, eleemosynary institution, or while under penal sentence in any jail or penitentiary.

"SEC. 5. Immediately after the passage of this act, the Secretary of the Treasury shall authorize all National and State banks, members of the Federal Insurance Deposit Corporation, to credit each properly identified pensioner the first day of each calendar month in the sum of $200, and said banks shall be reimbursed by the United States Treasury for the amounts so credited to pensioner or pensioners.

"SEC. 6. All salaries for individual services are hereby exempted from the tax provisions of this act.

"SEC. 7. Pensions under this act shall be forfeited or discontinued for the following reasons:

"(a) Any person who has been duly convicted of a felony shall be ineligible for this pension for a period of 10 years following the completion of his sentence.

"(b) Any pensioner under this act who is convicted of a felony shall immediately forfeit his said pension.

"(c) Any pensioner who violates the conditions imposed by (a) and (b) of section 2 of this act may be deprived of the said pension.

"SEC. 8. The Secretary of the Treasury shall appoint pension boards of three members, who shall constitute a district pension board. No two members of this board may belong to the same political party. Such boards may appoint deputies within their districts. All members of the board shall serve without compensation other than their pensions. Such boards shall have supervision of the administration of this act in their respective districts and shall be governed by rules and regulations promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury. A pension board shall be so set up for each county in the United States other than the areas of metropolitan cities, wherein boards shall be created in each ward or similar political subdivision.

"SEC. 9. Any and all oaths or affirmations required under the provisions of this act may be administered by any officer authorized by the law of any State to take acknowledgments for the conveyance of real property or by any member of a duly constituted pension board as herein provided.

"SEC. 10. It shall be a felony and punishable as such for any pensioner or seller as herein described to misrepresent or make a false statement with regard to any provisions of this act with intent to defraud the Government of the United States, under penalty of a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both."

Resolved, That the Governor of the State of California is hereby requested to forward a copy of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A joint resolution memorializing Congress to enact a universal service act which will take profits out of war

Whereas disclosures made by the Senate Munitions Investigating Committee and information secured by independent agencies indicate that munition and armament firms not only made excessive profits during the World War but are engaged in times of peace in disseminating propaganda tending to insite fear among nations, to increase their armaments, thereby encouraging and eventually leading to declaration of war; and

Whereas there is now pending before Congress measures which provide for the adoption of a universal service act which provides for the conscription of capital and industry, as well as man power, in time of war and the use of each in the service of the Nation, without special preference or profit; and

Whereas by taking profits out of war it would automatically destroy one of the greatest incentives for war: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota (the senate concurring), That we earnestly urge the Congress of the United States to adopt a universal service act which will take profits out of war and provide for the conscription of capital and industry as well as man power in time of war; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of Minnesota be instructed to send copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, to both Houses of Congress, and to each Member in Congress from the State of Minnesota.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Local Union No. 23, International Jewelry Workers, of Los Angeles, Calif., favoring the passage of the so-called "Wagner-Connery bill" and the Black 30-hour work-week bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of sundry citizens of the United States, praying for the passage of old-age-pension legislation, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by Townsend Club, No. 14, and the Executive Council of Townsend Clubs, both of San Diego, Calif., favoring the adoption of the so-called "Townsend old-age-pension plan", which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the ninth annual council of the National Society United States Daughters of 1812 in the State of Pennsylvania, favoring the enactment of House bill 2897, to make communism and the dissemination of Communist literature a crime punishable by imprisonment or fine, or both, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate a petition of members of Western Illinois State Teachers College and sundry citizens of Macomb, Ill., praying for the prompt enactment of legislation to eradicate all subversive movements aimed at the destruction of the Government by force or violence, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the New York City I. C. O. R. Committee, Unemployment Councils, of New York; the New Theatre League; the American Union Against Reaction; Carpenters Local Union No. 2090; the Tremont Workers Center; the A. F. L. Trade Union Committee for Unemployment Insurance and Relief, all of New York City; and the New Group of Brooklyn, all in the State of New York, protesting against the enactment of alien and sedition legislation, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of sundry citizens of the United States praying for an investigation of charges filed by the Women's Committee of Louisiana relative to the qualifications of the Senators from Louisiana (Mr. LONG and Mr. OVERTON), which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. GUFFEY presented a resolution adopted by the Council of the Borough of Derry, Pa., favoring the prompt passage of legislation providing for the cash payment of adjusted-service certificates of World War veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MALONEY presented resolutions of the Common Council of the City of Middletown and the Polish Central Council, of New Haven, both in the State of Connecticut, favoring the enactment of pending legislation proclaiming October 11 in each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of the Service Men's Civil League of Kansas City, Kans., praying for the passage of the so-called "Patman bill", providing for immediate cash payment of adjusted-service certificates of World War veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the Shawnee Chapter, International Society of Master Painters and Decorators, of Topeka, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation extending the National Industrial Recovery Act, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McCARRAN presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Assembly joint resolution memorializing Congress to create a department of education and providing a secretary of education therefor, to sit in the President's Cabinet and to preside over said department

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of Nevada, That Congress be memorialized to create a bureau of education at Washington, D. C., and provide for the selection of a secretary of education to sit in the President's Cabinet and to preside over said department; be it further

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution a certified copy thereof be dispatched by the Secretary of State to the President of the United States, and to each of our Senators in the United States Senate, and to our Representatives in Congress.

Mr. GERRY presented the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Rhode Island, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Senate resolution urging the Congress of the United States to secure the repeal at once of the cotton processing tax (passed Mar. 29, 1935)

Whereas the increased cost of manufactured products due to this tax falls most heavily on those who can least afford to pay it, the laboring people of this country; and

Whereas it affords little relief to cotton growers as with mills unable to continue operating under this tax, and closing all over the country, less cotton is consumed; and

Whereas it adds an enormous burden amounting to at least 40 percent of mill pay rolls on the mills who cannot pass the tax along to the consumer; it adds 8 to 15 percent to the cost of inventories in times of great financial stress; it is unjust and indefensible in that it is in fact a sales tax without the virtue of universal application: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the State of Rhode Island, in regular session, urges the Congress of the United States to secure the repeal at once of the cotton processing tax for these reasons; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted by the secretary of state to the President of the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture, and to the Rhode Island Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Mr. TYDINGS presented the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Maryland, which was referred to the Committee on Patents:

Senate resolution requesting that the Congress of the United States cause an investigation into the activities of the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers of New York and its Subsidiaries

Whereas unless certain abuses now being pursued by the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers of New York and its Subsidiaries upon hundreds of corporations, firms, and persons conducting establishments wherein music is played within the State of Maryland is abated, grave consequences therefrom may follow to the injury, through loss of employment, by many now employed within these business organizations; by reason of unreasonable demands by the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers of New York and its Subsidiaries that are bias and unjust; and

Whereas there is no adequate relief at law until this matter is brought before the Congress of the United States for adjudication and adjustment; and

Whereas, under certain rulings of the Supreme Court of the United States, the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers of New York and its Subsidiaries are exercising dictatorial powers, developing "a racket" that could never have been intended, or the purpose, to endow upon any organization by any court: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of Maryland, That the Congress of the United States shall cause an investigation into the activities of the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers of New York and its Subsidiaries as speedily as possible; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, duly authenticated, be sent to Senator MILLARD E. TYDINGS, Senator GEORGE L. RADCLIFFE, and each of the six Representatives in Congress, and they are hereby directed to introduce such resolution as may be necessary, into the Congress of the United States, to bring about an investigation of the activities of the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers of New York and its Subsidiaries for the purpose of remedial action that will afford relief to the oppressed.

Mr. GEORGE presented the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Georgia, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration:

Whereas it appears from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that more than 3,000,000 undesirable aliens are in our country; and

Whereas they are receiving aid and employment from our country, when their principles breed communism, which are debauching the very life of our democracy, and thus are depriving real American citizens from employment; and

Whereas in order to protect the social order of our great country and perpetuate our democracy rigid enforcement of existing immigration laws must be maintained and deportation of these alien enemies must be enforced: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the General Assembly of Georgia go on record as condemning communism and urge that immediate deportation of the alien enemies for the welfare and best interests of the country be effected; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent the two Georgia Senators and each Congressman from Georgia; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be given the press for publication.

Mr. GEORGE also presented the following resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Georgia, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Whereas McIntosh County, Ga., is the center of the coastal fisheries district of Georgia; and

Whereas the fisheries resources of the coastal section of Georgia are in serious need of development, both sports and commercial fishing being available here in all seasons, to meet the growing demand for the products of the Georgia coastal waters; and

Whereas the residents of said coastal region of Georgia are anxious to improve conditions in said fisheries: Therefore be it hereby

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the State of Georgia respectfully requests the Seventy-fourth Congress of the United States to look with favor upon this request for the establishment of a fish hatchery in McIntosh County, Ga., and to transmit with recommendation for favorable action this request to the United States Bureau of Fisheries; be it further

Resolved, That copy of this resolution be forwarded to each member of the Georgia delegation in the Seventy-fourth Congress.

Mr. GEORGE also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Georgia, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Whereas the Chattahoochee River flows through a large number of the counties of this State; and

Whereas the development of this river as a navigable stream, will result in untold benefits to the citizens of the Chattahoochee Valley, and to all of the people of Georgia and Alabama; and

Whereas said developments will also result in—

1. The prevention of soil erosion over a vast area of both Georgia and Alabama;
2. Reforestation;
3. Flood control;
4. The providing of large fresh-water lakes and hydroelectric power sites, a feature which squares with the President's idea about publicly owned hydroelectric water powers;
5. The employment of a large number of people now on relief rolls or unemployed;
6. A downward revision of transportation rates through competition between water and rail transportation;
7. The making of Fort Benning, the largest infantry school in the world, a port military camp with untold advantage in a military way in case of war;

Whereas the Chattahoochee Gulf Association, in cooperation with the chamber of commerce and other civic organizations of Atlanta and Columbus, and other towns in the section, have been actively working in behalf of this development for a number of years; and

Whereas this general assembly is informed through the press that the development of this project has now been approved by the United States Army engineers: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of your memorialists, the members of the Georgia Legislative Assembly (the Senate and the House concurring), that this proposed development be now approved under the President's relief program, and that work be commenced at once in order that the many untold benefits as enumerated in this resolution be no longer withheld from the people of Georgia and Alabama, and that the sense of this body is that the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Georgia and Alabama lend their immediate cooperation and their assistance in urging the immediate completion of this project; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of Georgia and the State of Alabama, and to the Committee of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress.

Mr. AUSTIN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 993) directing the Comptroller General to adjust the account between the United States and the State of Connecticut, reported it without amendment.

MUNITIONS INVESTIGATION

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I submit a preliminary report of the Select Committee on Investigation of the Munitions Industry, which I desire to have printed. The report is brief, and I ask that it be read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota that the report be read? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read the report (No. 400), as follows:

APRIL 1, 1935.

The United States Senate Special Committee Investigating the Munitions Industry, pursuant to Senate Resolution No. 8 (74th Cong., 1st sess.), wishes to make the following preliminary report:

I. The committee has examined 116 witnesses, taken 3,502 pages of testimony and exhibits, and has spent 62 days in the discussion of that testimony. It has consulted with a considerable number of Government departments in executive session.

II. The committee is in substantial agreement on a very thorough plan to take the profits out of war and to equalize the economic burden of war, and expects to report on this subject to the Senate legislation on the matter in the immediate future and for action in the present session of Congress. This relates to the actual period of war only. The presentation of this report and the legislation covers one of the three major obligations imposed upon the committee.

III. The committee is emphatically convinced that no bill which contains only general authorizations to the President to fix prices or to commandeer industry or to arrange for priorities and licensing is at all adequate "to equalize the burdens and take the profits out of war."

IV. The committee is in substantial agreement on a principle to govern the export of munitions and contraband in case of a major war and expects to make certain recommendations to the Senate on this subject in the immediate future and for action in the present session of Congress. This is the only phase of the neutrality problem which the committee considers to be within its jurisdiction.

V. The committee has investigated in detail the foreign sales activities of certain munitions companies and the significance of the methods used in the industry. This study is not yet completed. When it is completed, the committee will have definite recommendations to make for the control of the industry in peace time.

VI. At the moment the committee looks with interest and sympathy on the efforts of the American Government to secure agreement on more rigorous international control of the arms traffic and believes that the United States Senate should be glad to consider cordially an international convention based on the general broad outlines of control now known as the "American draft convention."

VII. The committee also expresses its interest in and support of a constitutional amendment to eliminate tax-exempt bonds, because it finds this exemption to be an inevitable and unjustified loophole in respect to the conclusive control of war profits.

VIII. The committee has taken considerable testimony on the increased costs and profits of the industry engaged in naval shipbuilding for the Government. The committee expects to close its hearings on this subject in April and to report as promptly as possible thereafter. Hundreds of millions of dollars are involved in the present system of naval building, and evidence of collusion is under consideration.

IX. The committee has heard a great amount of testimony covering Government aid in support of the private munitions makers in their domestic and foreign business. It requests ample time to continue this investigation and to make its findings constructive and conclusive.

X. The committee has heard sufficient evidence concerning the interchange of military information to begin its report on this subject.

XI. The committee has heard a considerable amount of evidence on the part taken by munition makers in embargoes and international conferences and international policy. It requests ample time to complete its studies of this subject.

XII. In addition to subjects already listed as in preparation, the committee has yet to finish its study of the profits and interest of the banking group in the munitions business during and since the war. The committee earnestly desires to progress with this study.

XIII. The committee has not yet finished its study of the influence of certain other large groups on the Nation's munitions policy and foreign policy, including the chemical warfare companies, the steel companies, and the airplane and machine-gun companies. No munitions investigation can be considered reasonably adequate and complete unless this field is conclusively studied with a view to adequate protection of the public interest.

XIV. The committee has also heard and analyzed a great mass of evidence on the industrial conduct and control during the World War and has had referred to it certain Army bills intended to mobilize industry and man power effectively in any future war. The committee believes it should continue hearings on the subject matter of these bills before reporting on them.

XV. The committee has been unable so far to engage in a thorough study of one obligation laid upon it by the Senate, that of the practicability of the Government's purchasing and owning munitions plants. A study of the number and cost of plants necessary for peace-time production is a feasible study, although involving a very considerable engineering personnel which the committee is now in no position to obtain.

XVI. The matter of these further studies will be discussed in the Senate later at a time when the committee will have presented the first of its legislative recommendations, and the Senate must then determine whether an additional and final appropriation shall be made available to implement these final investigations.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, in explanation I wish to say that this particular report is presented pursuant to Senate Resolution 206, Seventy-third Congress, second session, and in response to the language of Senate Resolution No. 8, of the present session, adopted by the Senate on the 17th of January this year asking for a preliminary report at this time.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mr. LONERGAN (for Mrs. CARAWAY), from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on March 29, 1935, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 403. An act to amend the act of Congress approved March 1, 1899, entitled "An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to remove dangerous and unsafe buildings and parts thereof, and for other purposes", and to further amend said act by adding at the end thereof new sections numbered 5 and 6;

S. 406. An act to amend an act approved May 1, 1906, entitled "An act to create a Board for the Condemnation of Insanitary Buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes"; and

By Mr. BLACK:

A bill (S. 2469) for the relief of E. L. Hice and Lucy Hice; to the Committee on Claims.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 373. An act for the relief of the American Surety Co., of New York;

H. R. 419. An act for the relief of Ruth Relyea;

H. R. 607. An act for the relief of Florence Overly;

H. R. 760. An act for the relief of John L. Hoffman;

H. R. 805. An act for the relief of Luther M. Turpin and Amanda Turpin; and

H. R. 923. An act for the relief of Theresa M. Shea; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 231. An act for the relief of Thomas M. Bardin;

H. R. 617. An act to correct the military record of Lake B. Morrison;

H. R. 972. An act for the relief of John Costigan;

H. R. 1442. An act for the relief of Clifford N. Raymond;

H. R. 1637. An act for the relief of Harrison Brainard, alias Harry White;

H. R. 1846. An act for the relief of Daniel W. Seal;

H. R. 2431. An act for the relief of James R. Davis, Jr.;

H. R. 3533. An act for the relief of Joseph J. McMahon;

H. R. 3547. An act for the relief of Thomas Lee Mitchum;

H. R. 3787. An act for the relief of Robert D. Hutchinson; and

H. R. 5133. An act for the relief of Nellie Oliver; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOOD, DRUGS, AND COSMETICS—AMENDMENTS

Mr. McNARY (for Mr. JOHNSON) submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by Mr. JOHNSON to Senate bill 5, known as the "pure food and drugs bill", which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. HAYDEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 6223, the Interior Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 84, after line 22, to insert the following:

"Big Dry Wash Battlefield: For erection by the National Park Service, in cooperation with the United States Forest Service, of a marker to commemorate the battle at Big Dry Wash, Ariz., during the Indian wars on ground owned by the United States, $500, to be immediately available."

GOVERNMENT OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, there is on the calendar Order of Business No. 400, Senate Resolution 98, which provides for an investigation of the administration of the government of the Virgin Islands. The resolution was reported unanimously from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs and then sent to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, which has likewise reported it unanimously with an amendment.

It will be necessary, if the investigation is to be held, for certain machinery to be set up, and I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be considered and acted upon. If it brings on any debate I shall not, of course, press my motion, but, inasmuch as it is necessary to have the machinery established in order to conduct the investigation, and all the committees which have dealt with it have passed on it unanimously, I should be very much obliged to the Senate if it would allow the resolution to be adopted, so that work may be started on the investigation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 98) providing for an investigation of the administration of the government of the Virgin Islands, which had been reported from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs on March 8 without amendment, and from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate on March 29 with an amendment, on page 2, line 8, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$25,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$12,000", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That a special committee of five Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation of the administration of the government of the Virgin Islands. The committee shall report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-fourth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee which shall not exceed $12,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

INCREASE OF BATTLESHIP STRENGTH—ARTICLE BY SENATOR GERRY

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article written by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], which appeared in yesterday's Washington Herald. The article discusses in a most interesting and illuminating way the important part played by battleships in naval warfare, a subject with which the Senator from Rhode Island is especially well qualified to deal.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Herald, Mar. 31, 1935]

SENATOR GERRY MAKES PLEA FOR MORE BATTLESHIPS AS BACKBONE OF OUR NAVY—AIRPLANES AND SUBMARINES SUPPLEMENT BUT CANNOT SUPPLANT CAPITAL SHIPS, HE SAYS

(By Peter G. Gerry, United States Senator from Rhode Island and for 12 years a member of the United States Senate Naval Affairs Committee)

The denouncing of the Washington Treaty by Japan and the demand that she be given naval parity with Great Britain and the United States have again brought to the attention of the people the question of the importance of our fleet.

The discussion that is now in progress will make anyone realize who has made a study of naval strategy that the general public has not a good conception of what constitutes a well-rounded fleet and why the Navy is so insistent on certain types of vessels.

The development of the submarine by Germany, with its large size and great efficiency, its success in commerce destroying, the sinking of the Lusitania, and the near starving of England emphasized especially the value of that vessel in naval warfare.

ENGLISH AND ALLIES LOSING HEAVILY

The Zeppelin raids and the development of the airplanes, with their gallant engagements, naturally impressed the imagination, so to this day a not properly balanced importance has been given to the work done by other factors.

The essential part the capital ships played in the winning of the war has been lost sight of.

The Germans learned as time went on that by increasing the surface speed of submarines and putting guns on them in addition to torpedoes, they were able to catch and sink more and more merchantmen.

Where there was concentration of shipping, the submarines were able to do greatly increased damage. The English and the Allies were losing heavily.

By 1916 ships were being sunk faster than England could replace them. The German campaign was nearly successful because England was unable to feed or supply herself with many necessities. If it had gone on, it would have starved her into submission.

CONVOY SYSTEM MET THE PROBLEM

But there began to be methods of meeting the menace. The most important was the convoy system, which collected merchantmen into groups and protected them by armed vessels. From then on the submarine campaign began to diminish in effectiveness.

The success of the convoy system is a good example of the submarine's limitations.

A submarine cannot make better than 8 knots when submerged, and she cannot continue this speed for more than a few hours, because to do so uses up her batteries.

On the surface the big German submarines were fast, and therefore had little difficulty in catching up with anything except very fast liners. When used as surface fighting ships they were effective and had the advantage of being able to submerge and escape.

With destroyers looking for them on the surface, attempting to ram them when they came up, the submarine was anything but comfortable. If they submerged below 250 feet the hydrostatic pressure caused them to leak, and if they went down much farther it would crush them like an eggshell.

Not only did the destroyer attack the submarine by ramming and by gunfire but it also dropped depth bombs, which if they exploded near the submarine meant certain destruction.

NAVY CONVOYS GREAT SUCCESS

The submarine's best chance of getting her prey in numbers was by lying in wait in a lane where ships were approaching port. In this manner the Lusitania was sunk after she had slowed down off the Irish coast.

Of the 2,000,000 soldiers the United States sent to Europe not one was lost under convoy by the American Navy.

The final blow to the German submarine campaign was a mine barrage placed in the North Sea. When submarines tried to pass north they hit the mines and were destroyed. This broke the morale of their crews and forced the mutiny at Wilhelmshaven.

In a fleet engagement, with screens of cruisers and destroyers and airplanes covering miles and protecting the battleships, there is little chance for the submarine. She dare not come to the surface, because to do so means to be sunk.

The Battle of Jutland was fought at about 20 knots. What chance had a submarine to reach, let alone attack, battleships in a fleet like that?

You never find any nation basing its fleet supremacy on anything but the capital ship. And today, when Japan is demanding equality with Great Britain and the United States, it is based primarily on parity in capital ships.

The theory of the battleship is a preponderance of heavy guns and armament, which produces a broadside of enormous weight that can outrange any smaller vessel and destroy it before the latter is able to fight back with broadsides of lesser range and weight.

GERMAN FLEET BOTTLED UP

Besides, the big ships have heavy armor that can withstand terrific blows, both from big guns and torpedoes.

The capital ships at Scapa Flow bottled up the German fleet and took away the command of the sea from Germany.

There were a few cruisers like the Emden and the fleet under Von Spee at sea, but they did not last long. Von Spee's cruisers obtained a victory over Craddock's because their guns carried farther and their ships were faster.

On the other hand, when Von Spee's fleet met Sturdee's, with its battle cruisers, of greater range and speed, Von Spee was easily defeated.

JUTLAND SOLVED SEA SUPREMACY

The supremacy of the Allied fleet meant that trans-Atlantic steamers, tramps, etc., were able to carry on allied commerce, bringing in war material and food at will.

If Germany had been able to destroy the British Fleet at the Battle of Jutland, she would have had command of the sea. Her fleet would have pursued and sunk the lighter ships of the Allies, just as Sturdee's cruisers sank Von Spee's cruisers, and Von Spee's cruisers had sunk Craddock's. In such event there would not have been any need for her submarine campaign.

Another question much discussed is the control of the air, and whether or not airplane protection alone makes battleships obsolete.

There is not a high naval officer today who does not attach great importance to the command of the air and believes in the absolute necessity of the airplane as part of the naval force.

We have special airplane carriers which take airplanes with the fleet. We also carry airplanes aboard other warships. They are needed not only for scouting and fighting but also to enable the ships to get the range of the enemy.

With the 14- and 16-inch guns naval battles are fought at such great range that often the enemy cannot be seen. If your airplane is able to get over the enemy it enables your ship to obtain the range. But in order to do this it will be obliged to fight off enemy planes.

Added to its use in range finding, airplanes are of first importance in scouting, most valuable in attacking and harassing the enemy fleet by bombs and gunfire, and are effective against submarines. But to say it has made the capital ships obsolete is not borne out by the facts.

BATTLESHIPS NOT EASY TARGET

To sink a battleship by a bomb dropped from an airplane is very difficult. Battleships, having only a 100-foot beam, when moving fast and zigzagging, are not an easy target to hit by a plane going at a much greater speed and contending with anti-aircraft gunfire.

A hit by a bomb might do considerable damage, but modern battleships have horizontal armor protecting their decks. A bomb has little chance of penetrating into vital parts of the ship sufficiently to sink her. Cruisers and destroyers are much more vulnerable.

During the World War the German warships Bresleau and Goeben came out of the Dardanelles on a raid and went aground. They were bombed by allied planes for 4 or 5 days. After that bombing they finally got themselves off and went back to Constantinople.

So, with these experiences and experiments that have been conducted, you will find that naval strategists, while strongly for the use of airplanes as a valuable adjunct to the fleet, are insistent that they have not replaced the capital ship but have simply added another weapon that must be used with her, for unless the capital ships are defeated there can be no victory.

THERE IS NO DEFENSIVE NAVY

For America, with the ocean on both sides, our Navy means a protection that nothing else can give. It affords us an opportunity to keep the horrors of war as far away from our coasts as possible.

There is no such thing as a defensive navy. If we were to have only a so-called "defensive navy", it would mean that our fleet would be bottled up in port, as the German Navy was bottled up, and the loss of our commerce on the seas.

The enemy could attack our shores and interfere with our commerce at will.

Superiority in naval force means the direct opposite. It means protection to our shores and confidence to our people. In all great wars it has been generally found to be the determining factor, as it was in the World War, between victory and defeat.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE ADMINISTRATION—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BYRNES

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an address delivered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] at Charleston, S. C., on March 22, on the achievements of the Democratic administration.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On March 4 of this year the Democratic Party had been in control of the Government of the United States for 2 years. The occasion inspired a recital of the achievements of the administration by its friends. It aroused the severe criticism of those who are opposed to the administration and who have in mind the fact that in November 1936 the Democratic Party must seek an endorsement at the hands of the people.

Criticism has come not only from Republicans but from some Democrats. I believe in free speech. Constructive criticism is helpful. Destructive criticism should be exposed. There can be no intelligent appraisal of the actions of this administration unless there is an appreciation of the condition of the Government and of the people when the Democratic Party came into power. Only by recalling this condition can you pass judgment upon the necessity for the legislation that has been enacted.

During the war we speeded up production in factories and upon the farms. The Government loaned billions of dollars to foreign governments, which enabled them to purchase our surplus products. After the war there was a decrease in our foreign trade. Then the New York bankers and importers embarked upon the policy of encouraging individuals in this country to lend money in other countries. They began purchasing the bonds of foreign governments and foreign corporations and unloaded those bonds upon the so-called "country banks" and upon private individuals. The money thus transferred to foreigners enabled them to purchase our surplus products and maintained the volume of our foreign trade. Of course, there had to be an end to this artificial stimulant, and also an end to the speculative era which brought suffering to the people of this Nation. The figures tell the story better than I can.

For the 5 years preceding 1929 the total agricultural income of the Nation ranged between ten and twelve billion dollars. It is a coincidence that during the same period the total pay rolls of the factories of the Nation likewise ranged from ten to twelve billion dollars. In 1932 our agricultural income dropped to $5,000,000,000. The total amount of the pay rolls of our factories dropped to approximately $5,000,000,000. To bring the problem home to you: In 1929 the value of all South Carolina crops, livestock and livestock products, was $157,935,000. In 1932 the value dropped to $68,513,000.

Cotton was then selling for 5 cents per pound and wheat for 30 cents per bushel. Estimates as to the number of unemployed ranged from twelve to fifteen million persons.

All the banks of the Nation were closed. The railroads faced bankruptcy, and serious consideration was given to the question of the Government having to operate the railroads. The securities of the railroads were held in great part by the life-insurance companies. As these securities decreased in value, the assets of the insurance companies dwindled, and men doubted the value of their policies; mortgages upon the farms of the Nation and mortgages upon the homes of the cities were being foreclosed. In the West, as judges signed foreclosure decrees, they were threatened with death. The people had lost confidence in the courts and in government, and finally lost confidence in themselves.

As these conditions developed the Government did nothing. Those in control believed that because government under such circumstances had never done anything, it should never do anything. They talked of rugged individualism, and declared that nature would have to take its course. Well, it developed that the individuals were not very rugged, and the course that many of them took was the road to bankruptcy, to insane asylums, and to the grave.

When the Democratic Party came into power, the President of the United States and his party took a different view. They determined they would not sit idly by while the people of this Nation, fighting as individuals, were overcome by economic forces beyond their control. The banks of the Nation were opened, but only after an examination that justified the belief that they could remain open. The money deposited in the banks was insured so that the people could go to sleep at night without the fear that the next morning they would read that their savings had been swept away.

Government then undertook to adjust production to consumption and stated as its goal the raising of commodity prices to such an extent that those who borrowed money would be able to repay it in the same kind of dollars they had borrowed. As a result of the various legislative acts, cotton increased from 5 cents per pound to more than 12 cents per pound, and even today, after the inexplicable break of the last week, is still selling for twice as much as it sold for in the closing days of the previous administration. Wheat, instead of selling for 30 cents per bushel, has sold for more than $1 per bushel. Tobacco has been selling at the highest prices it has brought in years. The number of the unemployed has been reduced and is being reduced month by month. The owners of homes in the cities and upon farms have had their mortgages refinanced for long periods and at low rates of interest.

The railroads remain under private control. The people no longer doubt the value of their insurance policies. The merchants of the Nation admit that their sales have vastly increased. Labor is receiving more money for a shorter day's work. I care not what your business may be, I know that, unless yours is a most unusual case, you are in better financial condition today than you were on March 1, 1933.

Notwithstanding that this is true, the administration is the target of criticism. Ultraconservatives assert that the President and his associates are entirely too liberal in their view. They charge that while the President has good intentions he is influenced by men who are socialistic in their views. They seldom name them. Sometimes they name Harry Hopkins as one of them. I am glad that you have today had the opportunity to meet him. I think you will conclude there is no justification for calling him a Socialist.

The conservative critic says that there is too much interference with business. There has never been a time when big business has not made that charge against Government. They have absolutely no objection to Government interfering to help big business. What they object to is Government interfering to protect the man who cannot help himself. In the enactment of the Esch-Cummins Act the railroads of this country succeeded in inducing the Government to interfere; and under that act, no matter how much money you have, you cannot build a railroad unless you first receive a certificate showing that it is in the interest of the public, is a necessity, and will not seriously injure an existing railroad.

The captains of industry have never hesitated to ask Government to interfere and levy tariff duties in order to require the consumers of the Nation to pay more for their commodities. They have never hesitated to ask the Government to interfere and pay subsidies to develop a merchant marine upon the sea or to develop the construction and operation of aircraft. Most reforms have been inaugurated over the objection of conservative business men. As a rule they are opposed to change.

In 1913 the bankers of this country were opposed to the Federal Reserve Act. Today not one of them would repeal this act.

As a rule, the bankers were likewise opposed to the insurance of deposits. It was declared to be paternalistic and unsound. Today they are almost unanimously in favor of its continuance.

A year ago the brokers and members of the stock exchange were opposed to the bill regulating many practices of the exchange. Today the majority of them believe that the regulation was essential and that the results are beneficial.

Severe criticism is directed toward the activities authorized by the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Our critics denounce the control of the production of crops. They have never questioned the wisdom of the United States Steel Corporation in reducing production when there is a decreased demand for the products of that corporation. They expect curtailment of every other industry, but when it comes to agriculture their argument is that the farmer should be encouraged to continue to grow all the cotton he can, even though there is no market for it and the only result must be to reduce the price to 4 or 5 cents per pound.

The manufacturers of the East complain that the benefits paid to farmers for withdrawal of lands from production are a subsidy. Well, they may as well realize that the Government intends to stand by the cotton farmer in the effort to adjust production to consumption and thereby secure for him a reasonable price for his product. Critics complain that it encroaches upon the right of a farmer to cultivate his lands. Well, as far as cotton is concerned, when the question was submitted to the cotton farmers of the South more than 80 percent of them voted for the continuance of compulsory control.

Those interested in cotton can rely upon the Government continuing to make loans upon the next crop. This can be done only if control continues. The probabilities are that the allotment will be reduced to the same figure as last year—10,000,000. In addition, there are outstanding certificates for 700,000 bales, which certificates were issued for the last crop and are good for the next crop. While the total allotment is not definitely settled, it is settled that loans will be made to a farmer only upon cotton within his allotment. This is essential to prevent farmers in some sections where cotton is produced cheaply from making more than their allotments with the expectation of borrowing from the Government.

But our critics—Democratic and Republican—say whatever justification there is for other activities, there is no excuse for the expenditures for relief. Well, in considering this controversial matter we should be fair. Not one dollar was appropriated by the United States Government for relief until the State of South Carolina, and every other State, through its Governor, certified in writing that the State, counties, municipalities, and charitable organizations of the State were unable to care for their needy and destitute. Then, and then only, was the credit of the Government used to prevent suffering among human beings.

But, they say, some persons who are not in need have received assistance. Undoubtedly this is true in every community of the United States. No church organization ever attempted to spend money for the relief of the needy that a certain percentage of the money did not go to the undeserving. That is inevitable in the disbursement of relief funds by the Federal Government because this money must be handled by human beings who never have been and never will be perfect. In every community there are a few plausible persons who will borrow money they never expect to repay and will get you to cash a check when they have no funds in banks. These persons will deceive the relief administrators. But we cannot permit deserving and needy persons to starve because some plausible but undeserving person deceives the relief administrators. The State administrators are appointed upon the recommendation of the Governors of the respective States who, in turn, appoint the county administrators. If mistakes are made, they are made by our own people, not the people of other States. We should realize, too, that while of the total amount spent for relief in Connecticut 85 percent comes from that State, its counties, and cities; in South Carolina 99 percent comes from the Federal Government and 1 percent from the State. In expenditures for relief by States Connecticut stands at the top of the list and South Carolina at the bottom.

I take occasion here to make a personal statement. During the administration of relief in South Carolina, while the office was under the control of Malcolm Miller and Mr. Baker, I have no recollection of ever filing a letter of recommendation for the employment of any employee at the administration headquarters. No county administrator was ever appointed upon my recommendation. When Miller Foster was appointed State administrator upon the recommendation of Governor Johnston, I told him that I would make only one recommendation to him and that was that he kept politics out of the F. E. R. A. and that he kept the F. E. R. A. out of politics. Thereafter I refused to communicate with him as to any appointments. A few days ago I made the same statement to Colonel Fulp, the new administrator. I would like to help persons seeking appointments, but this is an organization established for the purpose of relieving human suffering. It is one organization that should be kept free of politics, and the man in charge of it should have the knowledge that his power to appoint or to dismiss is not to be influenced by a Senator, Congressman, or any other man holding a political office.

When the civilian conservation camps were first proposed, I was one of those who doubted the wisdom of the proposal. They have been in operation for almost 2 years. I have changed my mind. I believe they have accomplished great good. Think for a moment of the young men who during the last few years graduated from school. They were induced to remain in school because of the assurance that thereby they would be able to achieve success in life. When they graduated they walked the streets of the cities, but were unable to secure employment of any kind. They were disappointed and disillusioned. They were at the crossroads of life. I dislike to think what would have become of these splendid young Americans had it not been for the establishment of these camps. They have received physical training; they have received military training, and gradually they are finding employment in private industries. If the camps had done nothing other than to save these young men, they would have justified every dollar spent for their maintenance.

It is said, however, that while some good has been accomplished by the administration, the public debt has gradually increased. Attention should be called to the fact that a considerable portion of the money which has been appropriated has been loaned and will be repaid. The Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation advises the Congress that he is now collecting more money than he is lending. He states that he will not lose 5 percent of the amount which has been loaned since Mr. Roosevelt became President. Money loaned by the Public Works Administration will likewise be repaid.

Large sums have been loaned through the Federal Land Bank upon the farms of the Nation, and through the Home Owners' Loan Corporation upon city homes. These sums will be repaid unless the homes of the cities and the farms of the Nation become worthless. If that ever occurs, there will be no hope for any of us.

But it is said that, so far as South Carolina is concerned, while we have paid taxes to the Government, we have not received anything except "crumbs from the table." Well, let us see. We have received in loans:

Through the Public Works Administration	$7,182,712
Farm Credit Administration	25,260,920
Reconstruction Finance Corporation	22,260,920
Total loans in State	54,704,552

I do not have the figure showing the amount loaned through the Home Owners' Loan Corporation but know it is a substantial amount. In addition to this money which has been loaned and which must be repaid, we have received in grants and gifts the following amounts:

Public works grants	$2,305,880
General projects on Federal property	17,496,730
Civil Works Administration	9,127,881
Relief Administration	27,401,684
Department of Commerce	356,000
Department of Agriculture	21,147,888
Total gifts and grants	77,836,063

Pretty good crumbs!

Three years ago neither the State of South Carolina nor any county in the State could sell its securities. No city in South Carolina could sell its securities. The city of Charleston was using scrip to pay its employees. Today the situation is entirely changed. Taxes, not only for the current year but for past years, have been paid. The credit of the State, counties, and cities is restored. This is due to the fact that when loans have been made by the Federal land bank or the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, sufficient money has been loaned to make possible the payment of all taxes due. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation has paid taxes amounting to $701,388 to the State, county, and city governments. I have not the figures from the Federal land bank and the farm-loan commissioner, but know that in refinancing the farmers throughout the State, a large amount of money has been paid in taxes due upon farms.

Our critics, however, are not confined entirely to the ultraconservatives who view with alarm the activities of the administration on the ground that things are being done that were never done before. There is another group of critics who charge that the administration is dominated by Wall Street. These critics cannot be ignored. We must remember that there are approximately 5,000,000 people on the relief rolls. One and one-half million are, because of their age or infirmity, unemployable; three and one-half million are capable of working. The man who has never been out of a job cannot understand the mental attitude of these people. Many of them think that there is something wrong in an economic system that makes it impossible for them to secure employment. There are other millions who are not out of employment, but who have lost the savings of a lifetime.

They are sore and disgruntled. Men in this mental condition are easily misled by plausible talkers, who place personal ambition above the public welfare. These critics charge that the social-security program of the administration is entirely inadequate. Of course, nothing that was proposed would please them. The Congress must consider the interests of all the people. A sane plan will be worked out that will in any ordinary period of depression save us from having to resort to the dole, which is so objectionable to our people.

That is true of old-age pensions. Many States have such laws. The pending proposal is to aid the States. It must be done in a sane way. We must bear in mind that the money must come out of the pockets of the people. Consideration must be given to those who pay the bills, as well as to those who are the beneficiaries of such legislation. I will not attempt to discuss at this time the proposal of the extremists. I have an abiding confidence in the common sense of the people. They may be misled for a short while, but they realize that in the history of the Government no President has shown as much interest in relieving the suffering of unfortunate people; and no man who has ever occupied the White House has done more to promote the cause of the wage earners of this Nation than has Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The wreckage wrought during 12 years of Republican misrule could not be repaired in 2 years. We have made progress, but we are still confronted with many serious problems. For the first year and a half the President had the cooperation not only of his own party but of a considerable portion of the Republican Party. If this condition existed today, we would entertain greater hope for the recovery program. Unfortunately we approach an election. Because of the attitude of some Democrats the Republicans for the first time have some hope of success. Their strategy is to encourage disgruntled Democrats to lead the fight against the administration. As a result of these tactics the recovery program is being retarded.

I do not believe that everything done by the Democratic administration is necessarily right. Mistakes have been made and will be made. The President has said that he would be happy if in blazing a new trail to lead us out of our difficulties he could be right 75 percent of the time.

There isn't a Democrat in Congress who doesn't know that if he desires publicity, he need only to desert his party and declare that his conscience will not permit him to vote with his party associates. He will receive the applause of every enemy of his party and receive the headlines in the newspapers. I am not that kind of a Democrat.

When in the House, during the administration of Woodrow Wilson, I supported that administration. In 1932 the people of this country elected Franklin D. Roosevelt as President. We cannot all be generals. Every army must have its colonels, captains, and privates. An army that spends its time and strength fighting among themselves can never win a war. If I do not agree with the proposals of the President, I do not hesitate to tell him that I disagree with him. He has shown a willingness, not only to discuss every proposal, but to compromise in order to have the Democratic Party present a united front.

All legislation is enacted as the result of compromises. When I have presented my views, if the President and my Democratic associates disagree with me, I am not going to sulk. Unless the question involves a sacrifice of a principle affecting the people of this State, I am going to stand by the President of the United States and the leader of my party. My hope is that he will continue to diseregard the advice of the whining tories on the one hand and of the crackpots on the other hand, and stay in the middle of the road, continuing his fight for the return of prosperity to the people of this Nation.

DELAYING SUPREME COURT ACTION—EDITORIAL FROM ST. LOUIS GLOBE-DEMOCRAT

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the St. Louis Globe-Democrat entitled "Delaying Supreme Court Action."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat]

DELAYING SUPREME COURT ACTION

Consideration of the constitutionality of the National Industrial Recovery Act by the Supreme Court has been indefinitely deferred by the action of the Department of Justice in dismissing without hearing its appeal in the Belcher case. This is the case affecting the provisions of the lumber code which it was expected would bring before the Court for its decision the main constitutional questions involved in the application of the act through the N. R. A. While the Department of Justice explains its action in a statement to the effect that the lumber code contains provisions peculiar to itself that are in process of revision, it is obvious that it has withdrawn the appeal because of the fear of an adverse ruling.

The plain inference is that the administration does not want to take the risks incurred in a Supreme Court hearing at a time when it is endeavoring to obtain legislation to extend the N. R. A. in a modified form for 2 years more. And yet it seems to us that a Supreme Court decision on the constitutionality of the N. R. A. is urgently needed right now. It is either unconstitutional in its main features or it is not. If it is unconstitutional, then the entire experiment must be terminated, and any effort to extend the act would be useless. The recent decisions of the lower courts present conclusions showing that it is fundamentally in conflict with the basic law in its control of industrial operations and management not construable as functions of interstate commerce, and it is difficult to see how the Supreme Court, when confronted with these questions, could fail to concur in the primary opinions of the lower courts. These decisions at least throw a very grave doubt upon the constitutionality of the N. R. A. system. Yet in the face of that doubt Congress is proceeding with the consideration of legislation, such as the Wagner labor bill and the 30-hour-week bill, in addition to the extension of the N. I. R. A., that if the Supreme Court should decide in harmony with the Neilds decision at Wilmington, for example, would be automatically invalidated.

It seems to us of the utmost importance that these questions of constitutionality should be definitely decided as soon as possible. Nothing can be gained by delay. Decision by the Supreme Court would clear the air of much that works to the suffocation and blindness of industry. If the Court should sustain the Government's position the country at any rate would be assured that the administration is acting within constitutional limitations, whatever the view of the wisdom of its undertakings. On the other hand, adverse decision would show what are the limitations of Federal legislative or executive action within the field of industry, and Congress would be enabled to deal intelligently with the problems before it in conformity with the Supreme Court's rulings. What is the use of proceeding with experiments of such revolutionary nature as those in operation or now proposed when their constitutionality has been made so doubtful by court decisions and when opportunity to obtain definite rulings by the Supreme Court are immediately at hand? It was suggested sometime ago that the Department of Justice might unite the N. R. A. cases that it has appealed and endeavor to obtain an immediate settlement of the constitutional questions involved in them. That program seems to have been set aside, if, indeed, it were ever seriously contemplated, and the policy of deferring such settlement as long as possible adopted.

Meanwhile Congress is being urged to go ahead with legislation that is clearly unconstitutional unless lower Federal courts are gravely at fault in their reasonings and their citations. To what end? If these courts are correct, such legislation will be declared invalid, and the difficulties of readjustment necessitated by such decisions will be greatly increased by the operation of the new laws now proposed. All of which adds to the uncertainties which confront industry and further confuse the economic situation. We have said time and time again that what the country needs above all else is a reasonable measure of certainty as to the future that will enable business to plan ahead, that will permit and encourage capital investment, and that will stimulate initiative and enterprise. That, it seems, is something that is persistently denied us, and uncertainties are increasing rather than diminishing. Some Supreme Court decisions on fundamental questions of the moment would, we believe, be a great help to confidence and security.

THE BURDEN OF TAXATION

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in full in the RECORD an article which appeared in the March 15 edition of Forbes Magazine, by Mr. J. W. Oliver.

I have ascertained from the Joint Committee on Printing that it is within the rule as far as the space it will consume in the RECORD is concerned.

I am not unmindful that the author, Mr. J. W. Oliver, Treasurer of the American Management Association, is also secretary of the Linen Thread Co., of which company I was at one time the president, but my request to insert this article in the RECORD is solely because of the value and importance, particularly in these times, of the message conveyed therein.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MR. UNITED STATES CITIZEN, WORLD'S CHAMPION TAXPAYER

(B. J. W. Oliver, secretary the Linen Thread Co., treasurer American Management Association)

When the average American looks at the tax problem he receives a distorted picture like the reflection of a trick mirror in a sideshow.

The harassed property owner examines his books and concludes rightfully that his taxes are excessive. The poor man compares his cost of living with his income and declares he is unable to pay anything toward governmental upkeep. The rich man claims that he is already taxed within an inch of his life. Briefly, everyone believes that he is overburdened and this gives rise to a national theory of revenue raising which, summed up, merely amounts to: "Soak the other fellow."

In a land bristling with political expediency, this is an invitation which cannot be ignored. Therefore, taxes are sugar-coated to please the voter's palate. This unfortunate practice has resulted in certain definite misconceptions which must be dispelled before Americans will realize that we are all adrift in the same boat; that taxes are mounting without relieving anybody; that the cost of doing business is increasing daily; and that the Nation at present is taxed at a higher rate than any other world power.

DON'T BE AN OSTRICH

There is only one real question involved in the problem, and that is: "How much does our Government cost us?" At the mere mention of this hobgoblin most people stick their heads in the sand, shrug their shoulders in sublime disregard, and reply: "Well, we don't know exactly, but, thank Heaven, it is not as high as that of Great Britain, when you consider the income ratio." No? Let us consider the facts.

The latest authentic figures available in connection with British tax collections apply to the fiscal period 1931–32, in which the national income was £3,842,000,000. The ratio of all costs is set forth in the following table:

Item	Taxes	Percent of taxes to income
Imperial Government	£733,000,000	19.08
Local authorities	167,984,000	4.37
Employers' contributions to unemployment, health, and social insurance	42,500,000	1.11
Total	943,484,000	24.56

Complete figures for later periods are not at hand, but the indications are that the cost of government has decreased, whereas the national income has increased. We may safely assume that the cost of British government is less than 25 percent of the national income.

LET'S LOOK AT THE FIGURES

Now, let us look at the figures for our own country in the past year. The national income for 1934 is estimated at approximately $45,000,000,000. It is also estimated that governmental expenditures for the fiscal year will be as follows:

Federal	$7,000,000,000
State	2,000,000,000
Local	8,000,000,000
Total	17,000,000,000

Since approximately half of the Federal expenditure item represents loans which will eventually be recovered, it would be unfair to say that the actual cost of our Government is 38 percent of the national income; but if we make allowance for that and record the Federal item as $3,500,000,000, we still find ourselves with a tax load of $13,500,000,000, which is 30 percent of the national income. Therefore, the common notion that our British cousins pay proportionately more for their government than we do for ours is exploded beyond peradventure of doubt.

This misconception is due in large part to the fact that American business men make no attempt to ascertain their total revenue expenses. Although corporation heads maintain a close check upon the costs of labor, operations, and materials, few of them could give an accurate answer to the question: "What is the total tax in your cost of operations?" And it is my belief that if every corporation's annual report contained an isolated item showing all governmental charges, the public would soon learn where its money goes and would soon demand that some order be brought out of chaos.

UNBELIEVABLE—BUT A FACT!

In my own organization we have computed our total tax bill for last year and have found that it comes to approximately 12 percent of our total gross sales. This figure sounds unbelievable until it is considered that most of our taxes are concealed in the prices of materials, and so forth. It is only when you grapple with the hydra of taxation that its many heads—processing taxes, excise taxes, sales taxes, income taxes, license taxes, and what not—come into view.

Before plunging further into this morass of governmental costs let us consider briefly the various imposts to which a company operating in New York City is subject today. First, there is a property tax; then there is a gross-receipts tax; then there is a Federal income tax, import duties, processing and compensatory taxes, and special excise taxes; then there is a State income and franchise tax; then there is a city levy of 15 percent of the Federal income tax; and last but not least there is a 2-percent sales tax.

This brings into the spotlight another huge item in the actual cost of our revenue scheme, an item which we shall call the "invisible tax." This is the cost of determining liability, of complying with thousands of statutory requirements, of preparing documents, and so on. It is merely the cost of paying taxes. And it is this item, amounting to 10 percent of all governmental expenditures, which is sheer economic waste and which is obstructing the business road. Manufacturing corporations which operate on a national scale are required to file literally hundreds of reports and to comply with literally thousands of overlapping tax statutes throughout the country. In most cases the tax itself does not equal one-half the cost of preparing the return and of meeting the requirements of the law.

For example, in 1932 the State of Massachusetts received an average of $55 for each corporate report. The cost of preparing the average report was estimated at $200, a ratio of almost 4 to 1. In the same year New York State received an average of $175 per industrial corporate report. There were about 90,000 of such reports and, of these, 60,000 paid only the minimum tax of $25. We may wager that very few cost merely $25 to prepare and file.

As an example of the wildly unrelated system of revenue collecting prevailing in this country, consider the fact that in 1933 alone more than a thousand different revenue statutes were passed. Today there are pending some 1,400 or 1,500 different items of tax legislation in the legislatures now in session. This may give some inkling as to why it costs so infinitely much more to comply with complex State and local tax schemes than with the Federal.

What is the total cost of all this to the Nation? Practically, it is inestimable. In my own company over half of the accounting expenses (to say nothing of the cost of professional services) are due to tax ramifications, and the sum of these indirect expenses may not even be guessed at. But we can estimate the direct costs, and this total is amazing enough.

In 1930 a high authority placed the costs to taxpayers of complying with Federal taxation—legal fees, accountants' fees, traveling expenses, etc.—at $400,000,000. At that time we were operating under the Revenue Act of 1928, the simplest of all Federal revenue measures since the war. We may assume that in today's increased confusion the total has risen to at least $600,000,000. Although State and local costs would probably run higher, let us be safe and place it at $400,000,000. We have now a total of a billion dollars a year as the cost of paying taxes.

But we have not yet considered governmental administration. The cost of this whole item may not be quite as high, so let us fix it at $500,000,000. That brings our total up to one and one-half billions of dollars. Thus, even a distinctly conservative estimate shows that we are burdened with a charge for preparing to pay taxes which is 10 percent of the cost of running the Government.

SUGAR-COATING COSTS MONEY

Unfortunately, there has never been an actual survey of all taxation expenses, but the American Management Association is now making such a study, which will reveal to the Nation what is taking place.

There is no question that political expediency is the chief cause of this revenue situation. The simple truth is that there are too many taxing bodies. In one important sense, we are living under an archaic form of government. There is no earthly reason why this country should maintain 183,000 individual political units, except that most of these divisions have their staff of officials who are unwilling to relinquish their sinecures and who are politically potent enough to prevent common-sense consolidation.

Furthermore the sugar-coating on tax measures is expensive. For instance, the present administration has said, in effect: "We must not have a sales tax. We must not tax the poor man's necessities of life." So the legislators have adopted a plan of processing and compensatory taxes as well as selective excises which is the most complicated system obtainable. And it is important to note that discriminations and complications are what make taxes costly. The more you rule, the narrower you define, the more involved the whole plan becomes.

The consumer must be made to understand that he bears the brunt of all taxation, anyway. For example, my company is satisfied with a profit of 1 cent on a pound of twine. But the processing tax on that pound of twine is 5 cents. Obviously, there is no way in which the company can absorb that 5 cents if it is to stay in business. Therefore, the consumer pays it, and if he prefers to be kept unaware of that fact, he must expect to pay more for a ball of twine than he would if the taxing method had a more equitable application. The consumer, be he rich or poor, can well assume that he is paying a high tax on everything, including basic commodities. Nothing illustrates this quite so well as the fact that processing taxes and other commodity imposts yield about two dollars to the Government for every one yielded by income taxes.

While over half the population of the United States is under some form of sales tax today, there are, unquestionably, a number of things wrong with such a method of revenue collection in addition to the demagogue's claim that it is a tax on an inability to pay. In the first place, the sales tax as we have it is confined within local boundaries, whereas business itself is not so confined. Moreover, it is very complex and very difficult to collect. And since the small man knows full well that his business cannot be audited, it places a burden upon honesty and upon those companies which must pay the evader's share.

The chief fault, however, is that any tax based upon the ultimate sale is subject to all sorts of rulings, and the further it is defined, the more complicated it becomes. For example, the question of interstate commerce always causes trouble. One railroad recently had to apply for a ruling upon meals eaten in dining cars while crossing a State line. At what point in the meal did the tax apply? Upon ordering, after the soup, the entree, or the dessert?

FALSE TEETH VERSUS GLASS EYES

There is also the problem of resale. Twine bought by a department store for binding packages is not taxable because it is bought for resale. Twine bought for use by a wholesaler is taxable.

Under the present New York City sales tax the seller must pass the tax on to the buyer; if he absorbs it, he is liable to heavy penalties. Now, let us assume that the seller is a branch of an establishment selling goods at nationally advertised prices and meeting competitive prices, and that a substantial number of his customers live outside New York City. Since these customers have no credit rating, it is their habit to sell produce or other goods in the city, then to go to this store to buy the things they need to carry on their business. What is the result of the sales-tax law? Simply, that these buyers no longer are going to patronize New York City establishments.

There is the further question of whether or not a dentist who makes false teeth is subject to tax. A recent ruling was that he is a repair man and that his charge, being a service fee, is not taxable. But a manufacturer of glass eyes sought a similar ruling, which was denied on the ground that his goods are not true repairs, since you cannot see with a glass eye but you can chew with false teeth.

All these complications would be humorous if they were not, at the same time, so tragic. The spectacle of American business and American courts enmeshed in such nonsense is not an edifying one to the discerning taxpayer.

Clearly there is a crying need for public education in this whole matter. As long as people do not know they are paying outrageous taxes under the present set-up, there will be no change. But as soon as they learn that the various measures adopted under the guise of social reforms are not actually redistributing wealth but are merely multiplying the industrial overhead, there will be some chance, at least, for remedying this expensive situation.

But is there any simple, inexpensive method of raising revenue? A few figures provide us with the answer. In 1929 there were 211,000 companies in the country which were accountable for 99 percent of the total manufactured output. At the same time there were 1,500,000 retailers. Therefore, it is obvious that the ideal business tax would not be a levy upon sales or processing, but would be a manufacturers' excise tax, leviable at the source of all finished goods, to take the place of the existing Federal processing taxes, selective Federal sales and nuisance taxes, as well as all forms of sales and business taxes imposed by State and local governments. It would not be discriminatory in any way and it would make no fine distinctions. It would be collected by the Federal Government and allocated to the various States on a basis involving population, individual consumption, and assessed valuations of property.

It would be one broad business tax, easily collectible, which would reduce the costs of complying with Federal statutes by at least 50 percent, and which would eliminate the costs of State and local compliance altogether. The Federal Government would also be the only agency empowered to levy taxes upon motor fuel, tobacco, and liquor, and would be the only collecting agency for all taxes, excepting those levied upon property.

Even then the taxpayer would not be freed from unnecessary costs until the expense of maintaining the Nation's 183,000 political units was reduced by the consolidation of local divisions. However, we should be on our way toward some semblance of a coordinated revenue system.

That our present course of confusion and complication is a sure way to bankruptcy and ruin is inescapable. If we continue along the same path, our governmental expenses are certain to rise and this promises nothing but danger. It can mean one of only two things: First, that the Federal Government will start the printing press and State and local governments will be forced to repudiate; or, second, that we will attempt to carry an even more staggering burden of taxation which might reach or exceed 50 percent of the national income. One needs only to look at Europe to realize what either outcome will do to our standards of living.

ARMY DAY—ARTICLE FROM NATIONAL BULLETIN

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I present for publication in the RECORD an excerpt from the Military Order of the World War National Bulletin for February 1935 giving the history of Army Day, together with letters from President Roosevelt, Secretary of War Dern, and Chief of Staff Gen. Douglas MacArthur in reference to Army Day.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Military Order of the World War National Bulletin, February 1935]

ARMY DAY—APRIL 6, 1935

HISTORICAL

April 6, 1935, marks the eighth annual celebration of Army Day, which commemorates America's entrance into the Great War 18 years ago. The day was established with a very modest beginning by the Military Order of the World War in 1928, and has ever since been sponsored by our order.

At a meeting of our general staff, held in New York City in January 1928 the Army Day idea was launched. At that meeting "the commander in chief was directed to call upon all chapters to organize patriotic celebrations on May 1, to bring to the attention of the public our Army—what it stands for and what it needs, all to aid in the great problem of national defense." He was further "authorized to obtain endorsements from other veteran and patriotic organizations, as well as from State and city officials." The date of May 1 was selected at that time to offset the then prevailing communistic activities and youth-movement parades that had been scheduled throughout the United States for May Day. Modest celebrations were held by various chapters throughout the country.

FIRST ENDORSEMENT

It is believed that the first endorsement that was received at our national headquarters came from the Reserve Officers' Association in March 1928. The first official proclamation that we have record of was issued by the mayor of Philadelphia. He was followed closely by the mayor of New York. The Military Order of Foreign Wars, American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and others quickly followed with their endorsements.

One of the most interesting ceremonies, held on the first Army Day in 1928, was under the auspices of the District of Columbia Chapter, of which Admiral T. J. Cowie was the commander. The ceremonies were held before the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington National Cemetery.

The photograph appearing in the Military Order of the World War National Bulletin, published shortly after this ceremony in 1928 depicts this historical beginning with Past Commander in Chief Admiral T. J. Cowie delivering the principal address to a distinguished group, in the front row of which stood Gen. Charles P. Summerall, the Chief of Staff, United States Army; Admiral Charles F. Hughes, the Chief of Naval Operations; and Maj. Gen. John A. Lejeune, Commandant United States Marine Corps.

APRIL 6 SELECTED

During 1928 it became evident that it would be advisable to hold Army Day celebrations on some day other than the 1st of May. The concensus of opinion seemed to favor April 6, the anniversary of America's entrance into the World War as the most appropriate day.

Accordingly, at the 1928 national convention of the Military Order of the World War, a resolution was adopted naming April 6 as Army Day. By virtue of such action, our then commander in chief, Col. Thatcher T. P. Luquer, made public proclamation announcing the establishment of Army Day and its sponsorship by the Military Order of the World War.

Since that modest beginning, Presidents of the United States, Governors of States, mayors of cities and towns, cabinet officers, military authorities, public officials, and patriotic, veteran, and civic groups have annually added their official proclamations and endorsements.

THIS YEAR

The celebrations this year throughout the country and insular possessions are expected to surpass all previous occasions.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 16, 1935.

Lt. Col. GEORGE E. IJAMS,
Commander in Chief, Military Order of the World War,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLONEL IJAMS: The general observance of Army Day on April 6 should bring back to our mind the efforts and sacrifices of our soldiers which have been so decisive in the creation, preservation, and development of this great Nation. It should be an occasion for the Army to rededicate itself to its glorious heritage of service to our country, both in times of peace and in times of war.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington.

Commemorating, as it does, our entry into the World War, Army Day serves to keep fresh in the public mind the value of preparedness for national defense. To the Military Order of the World War, whose leadership is largely responsible for this annual observance, I extend hearty greetings and assurance of appreciation of its patriotic endeavors.

GEO. H. DERN,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
Washington, D. C.

Maj. EDWIN S. BETTELHEIM, Jr.,
Adjutant General, Military Order of the World War,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MAJOR BETTELHEIM: Army Day brings to me once again the opportunity of testifying to the high regard that the Army holds for the Military Order of the World War.

The members of your organization displayed, in the greatest war of history, qualities of leadership that brought them into positions of responsibility and distinction. During succeeding years they have continued to exhibit an unflagging interest in our country's welfare, which has earned for the order an enviable reputation and made of it a distinct national asset.

It is a privilege to extend, through the national bulletin of the order, Army Day greetings and best wishes to each of your members.

Sincerely,

DOUGLAS MACARTHUR,
General, Chief of Staff.

NEW RECORD FOR PEACE-TIME SPENDING—ARTICLE FROM UNITED STATES NEWS

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article from the United States News of April 1, 1935, entitled "New Record for Peace-Time Spending", together with the detailed spending record of the Federal Government from 1789 to 1936 be inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article and table were ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the United States News, Apr. 1, 1935]

NEW RECORD FOR PEACE-TIME SPENDING—THE 3-YEAR BUDGET OF THE NEW DEAL IS EQUAL TO THAT OF ALL ADMINISTRATIONS FROM GEORGE WASHINGTON TO WOODROW WILSON

Congress is giving the President $4,880,000,000 in one lump sum to spend on jobs.

No such vast grant is recorded in the previous peace-time history of the Nation. Added to other appropriations, and plans for appropriations, this action calls attention to the following fact:

TWENTY-FOUR BILLION IN 124 YEARS

From the first term of George Washington to the first term of Woodrow Wilson—124 years—the United States Government spent $24,521,845,000.

From the first Budget of President Roosevelt to his latest Budget—covering 3 years—the United States Government outlines spending of $24,206,533,000.

That raises the question: Just how much is $24,000,000,000?

It is $12 each for every man, woman, and child on the face of the earth. It represents nearly $1,000 for each family in the United States.

It was enough to finance the National Government through 31 Presidential terms of 4 years each.

During that time were fought four wars. The Nation grew from 13 sparsely populated Atlantic Seaboard States to a vast expanse of 48 highly developed, immensely rich States, comprising the wealthiest area in all the world.

Four years of the War between the States were fought by President Lincoln with less than three and one-half billions of dollars.

The War of 1812, the War with Mexico, and the War with Spain could have been thrown in for good measure and still the expenditure would have been less than the $4,880,000,000 being appropriated by Congress for 1 year of present-day unemployment relief.

THE COST PER CAPITA

Only during the World War was there a comparable rate of spending. Then, in 2 years, the United States poured out $32,000,000.

But during the first 124 years of the Nation's existence the average annual cost of the central Government was just $195,085,000, or about $5.26 for each person.

During the next 20 years, from 1914 to 1933, including the World War years, this average annual cost rose to $4,767,160,000, or $42.16 per capita.

Now, through the fiscal years 1934, 1935, and 1936, the average annual cost of the Federal Government has risen to $8,068,800,000, or $64.55 for each person in the country.

SPENDING $13,000 A MINUTE

Broken down into more understandable terms, as done by Senator BYRD (Democrat), of Virginia, these figures show that the Federal Government is spending nearly $13,000 every minute of the day and night. Of that $13,000, he estimates that about $7,000 is being added to the public debt to be paid by future generations.

In those figures, officials see the story of the shift in importance of the Federal Government from a mere central agent for the sovereign States to a centralized government dominating economic as well as political affairs of the country.

UNCLE SAM'S SPENDING RECORD: 1789 TO 1936

From the time George Washington took his first oath of office on Wall Street until the last dollar of President Taft's last budget was spent on June 30, 1913, the total cost of running Uncle Sam's Government was $24,521,845,000.

Compared with this figure for 124 years are the estimated expenses of the first 3 years of President Roosevelt's administration, $24,206,533,000. Figures used were obtained from the latest annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOOD, DRUGS, AND COSMETICS

Mr. ROBINSON obtained the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 5) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated, or misbranded foods, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein; to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and for other purposes.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Did the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from New York for the purpose of making the motion?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; I yielded to the Senator for that purpose, but I will now suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Barbour	Borah	Byrd
Ashurst	Barkley	Brown	Byrnes
Austin	Bilbo	Bulkley	Capper
Bachman	Black	Bulow	Clark

Mr. McNARY. I wish to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. DUFFY. I have been requested to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent today, due to illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are absent because of illness, and that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] is absent on account of illness; that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] is absent on account of a death in his family; that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] is absent on official business; and that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] are necessarily absent. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] to proceed with the consideration of Senate bill 5.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I desire to address myself to that motion, but, pending that, will the Senator from New York yield to me for the purpose of presenting a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

SUPREME COURT TEST OF CONSTITUTIONALITY OF N. I. R. A.

Mr. CLARK. I send to the desk a resolution and ask that it be read, and I also ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. I offer this resolution on behalf of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] and myself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri, for himself and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], submit a resolution, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 113), as follows:

Whereas there is pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, October term, 1934, no. 628, entitled "United States of America, appellant, v. William Elbert Belcher, alias W. E. Belcher, being an appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Alabama"; and

Whereas the following information appears from an examination of the papers in said case, to wit:

Belcher was indicated for violation of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the indictment being filed on August 24, 1934. In the said indictment he was charged with the violation of the said act and the violation of the terms and provisions of the Code of Fair Competition for the Lumber and Timber Products Industries.

Among other things, Belcher was charged with violating the code in transactions affecting interstate and foreign commerce by permitting certain persons employed by him to work more hours than the code prescribed and for less wages than the code prescribed. Belcher is alleged to have been engaged in interstate commerce in that he was shipping lumber out of Alabama and into other States.

On October 13, 1934, a demurrer was filed on behalf of Belcher. The substance of said demurrer is hereinafter set forth in the Solicitor General's assignments of error.

On October 31, 1934, the demurrer was sustained, and the indictment dismissed.

On November 26, 1934, the district attorney for the northern district of Alabama filed his assignment of errors, and on November 28, 1934, served notice of appeal.

On January 4, 1935, the Solicitor General and the United States attorney for the northern district of Alabama filed a statement, showing the basis of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to entertain the appeal.

On January 9, 1935, the Solicitor General, pursuant to rule 13 of the Supreme Court, stated that he intended to rely on all of the points set out in the assignment of errors. These points, he states, may be summarized and grouped as follows:

"1. The district court erred in holding that the National Industrial Recovery Act is invalid and unconstitutional—

"(a) Because it is not within the powers conferred upon Congress to regulate interstate and foreign commerce;

"(b) Because it delegates legislative power in violation of section 1 of article I of the Constitution;

"(c) Because it encroaches upon powers reserved to the States, in violation of the tenth amendment;

"(d) Because the provisions of the act authorizing the President to regulate minimum wages paid to and maximum hours worked by persons employed in the production of lumber are invalid under the fifth amendment;

"(e) Because section 3 (f) of the act is invalid under the sixth and eighth amendments;

"(f) Because it delegates judicial power to the President, contrary to the Constitution;

"(g) Because the act, as applied to the defendant under the facts charged in each count of the indictment, is not within the powers conferred upon Congress to regulate interstate and foreign commerce.

"2. The district court erred in holding that the Code of Fair Competition for the Lumber and Timber Products Industry is invalid and unconstitutional—

"(a) Because the code provisions which the defendant is charged with having violated are not within the powers conferred upon Congress to regulate interstate and foreign commerce.

"(b) Because the code contains an invalid delegation of legislative power, in violation of section 1 of article I of the Constitution.

"(c) Because the code provisions which the defendant is charged with having violated encroach upon powers reserved to the States, in violation of the tenth amendment.

"(d) Because the code provisions which the defendant is charged with having violated are in conflict with the fifth amendment.

"(e) Because the code, as applied to the defendant under the facts charged in each count of the indictment, is not within the powers conferred upon Congress to regulate interstate and foreign commerce.

"(f) Because the code, as applied to the defendant under the facts charged in each count of the indictment, deprives the defendant of his property without due process of law, in violation of the fifth amendment.

"3. The district court erred in holding that the indictment, and each count thereof, does not charge an offense under the laws of the United States.

"The appellant deems the entire record, as filed in the above-entitled cause, necessary for the consideration of the above points."

The time fixed for the argument of the said case in the Supreme Court is Monday, the 8th day of April 1935; and

Whereas it has been announced through the public press during the past few days that the Government will not prosecute the said appeal, but will ask that the case be dismissed; and

Whereas the questions involved in said case are the constitutionality of the National Industrial Recovery Act and the codes made in accordance with the provisions of said act; and

Whereas the Congress has been urged by the President to extend the said act for another period of 2 years; and

Whereas the Finance Committee of the Senate is now conducting hearings for the purpose of ascertaining whether the said act should be extended and, if so, what changes should be made in it; and

Whereas a decision by the Supreme Court on the questions involved in the case above referred to would be of great assistance to the Senate in determining what changes are necessary, or whether a constitutional act could be passed to accomplish the purposes desired: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Attorney General of the United States be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested and urged to prosecute the said appeal and to oppose any delay in the argument, with the hope that the Supreme Court will render a decision in time to be of service to the Senate in its consideration of the extension of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I shall not object to the resolution being submitted, but I do object to its present consideration. I suggest that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, does it not involve a judicial question? I suggest to the Senator that it would be better to refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I think the Finance Committee has jurisdiction of the matter. The resolution raises no judicial question. It is a proposal to instruct the Attorney General or to request the Attorney General. It does not raise any question of law, as the Senator must well know. It merely seeks to advise the Attorney General. If the Senator from Missouri is willing that it shall go to the Committee on Finance of which he is a member, I suggest that reference.

Mr. CLARK. It was my purpose to request that the resolution go over under the rule. I am primarily interested in getting action on the resolution. Since undoubtedly a motion to refer would be made tomorrow if it did go over under the rule, I am entirely willing to accede to the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LONG. Did I understand the Senator from Missouri to be willing that the resolution be referred to that committee?

Mr. CLARK. Yes; I think it will expedite action.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOOD, DRUGS, AND COSMETICS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill no. 5.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, before the motion is voted on, if the Senator from New York does not desire to address himself to it, I should like to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York desire the floor?

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator from New York does not desire to discuss the motion I should like to take the floor in my own right.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I hope very much the Senator from New York will not press his motion at this time. The bill involves a matter of very great importance; a matter regarding which the President of the United States has lately sent to Congress a message. There has been no meeting of the Commerce Committee since the message of the President was received.

The subject matter of the bill is an extremely complex one, upon which meetings have been held for many days in the last Congress and in the present one. There have been many differences of opinion in the committee and in the Senate, which have to some extent been ironed out by conferences and by amendments.

I particularly urge that the motion be not pressed at this time by reason of the fact that the leading member of the Committee on Commerce opposed to the bill, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], has been unavoidably detained from the Senate by a personal injury, a sprained ankle, for the past 10 days. I am advised that he will return to the Senate tomorrow morning.

In addition to that, when the bill, after many redrafts and many changes, was ready to be reported from the Commerce Committee the statement was distinctly made in the committee that there would be no haste and no lack of notice in relation to taking up the bill for consideration. There has been no notice to the Senate that the bill would be taken up today. As I said, the leading member of the committee opposed to the bill is unavoidably detained, but will be here tomorrow, I am informed; and I think, as a matter of fair play, the bill should go over at least until tomorrow.

So far as I am concerned I have never, since I have been a Member of this body, opposed due consideration of a bill or its expeditious consideration. I have no desire to oppose the expeditious consideration of this bill. I think none of the members of the committee who agree with my views have any such desire. As a matter of fact, the changes which have been made in the bill are such that I am very much inclined to favor its provisions. While there are some to which I still object, yet there will be no disposition on the part of myself or other members of the committee who share my views to unduly delay consideration. However, as a matter of common fairness to the Senator from North Carolina and other Senators who may desire to be heard, I believe the bill should go over until tomorrow at least.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, is there a minority report on the bill, or was the committee unanimous?

Mr. CLARK. I will state to the Senator from Tennessee that at the time the bill was reported, about 10 days ago, I reserved the right to file a minority report. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the ranking member of the committee, opposed to the bill, desired to participate in the preparation of that minority report. Owing to the unavoidable absence of the Senator from North Carolina it has been impossible to present the minority report. I may say that I stated to the Senator from North Carolina last week, through his secretary, on what I believed to be the authority of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]—I am informed this morning that I misunderstood his remarks—that he might have time in North Carolina to recover from his injury and return here in time to prepare the minority report. I make that statement in fairness to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I merely desire to say that this bill in one form or another has been before the Senate since a year ago last June. The bill which we now have before us is the ninth reprint of the bill. Extensive hearings have been held upon it. Everybody who had an interest should have been heard, and I hold in my hand three large volumes indicating that everybody has been heard. More than that, I have had private conferences, I think, with every industry concerned almost every day since a year ago last June.

In reply to what the Senator from Missouri has said, I will state that he came to me at the end of week before last and said that our colleague, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], had been injured, for which I am extremely sorry. I am sorry he is not present. He asked me not to bring up the bill last week. I readily agreed to that suggestion, although, of course, it could not have been brought up, anyhow, as it happened; but I did not make any promise beyond that.

I can see no reason why we should not proceed at once with the consideration of the bill, and, with all respects to my friend from Missouri, I should like to have action taken by the Senate to consider the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to testify to the loyal attention the Senator from New York has given to this proposed legislation for 2 years.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. On that point I should like to join very heartily in the testimony borne by the Senator from Michigan. I have been a member of the subcommittee with the Senator from New York, and I may say that no Senator or Representative in my observation and experience has ever worked harder to perfect a very complicated measure and bring it to consideration than has the Senator from New York.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think all the Senator from Missouri says is true. When the Senator from New York pressed the bill for final consideration at the last meeting of the Commerce Committee I voted with him in favor of reporting the measure. I am in general sympathy with the bill. I am particularly in sympathy with the attitude of the Senator from New York toward the proposed legislation, because from the beginning it has been an attitude that has been utterly fair, and he has demonstrated a complete anxiety to meet opposition views wherever feasible and possible.

But, Mr. President, I share the opinion of the Senator from Missouri that we shall not make any progress by attempting to proceed with the bill at the present time. The first notice I had that there was any remote contemplation of bringing the measure to immediate consideration was when I entered the Senate at noon today. I understood from the Senator from New York, when I addressed a query to him upon the subject last week, that it would be some time before the Senate would be asked to take up the problem textually.

I repeat that I am in favor of the general proposition, but there are numerous technical problems embedded in the bill. They are problems which seriously concern legitimate business. I am not interested in attempting to protect the illegitimate business which the Senator from New York wishes to attack, and which I join him in wishing to attack, but surely we are not going to burn down the barn in order to kill the rats. Surely reasonable notice should be given to those of us who wish to present amendments in behalf of legitimate business in order that we may have that opportunity.

I am not prepared to proceed today. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is not here, and he is the chief opponent of the bill. Under the circumstances, it seems to me the bill should at least go over until tomorrow, so that those of us who have followed the proposed legislation with some intimacy during the past 2 years may at least have our files in order, and may proceed with some degree of pertinency in the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there is little legislative business that is ready for consideration. The Calendar was sounded a day or two ago for unobjected bills, and such bills were disposed of.

Senate bill 5 has been pending on the Senate Calendar for some 2 weeks. It was not expected that the measure should be disposed of today, but I do not see why we should not proceed with its consideration at this time. I myself am not so familiar with the bill as I should like to be, but unless we shall proceed with it we will have little other legislative business that is ready. I think the Senate should take up the bill and hear an analysis of it from the Senator from New York. I assume he is ready to make such a statement. Then, if Senators are not ready to proceed with the measure, we may make other arrangements; but, in view of all the circumstances, I believe it should be taken up.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I must frankly confess that I have been disturbed by the slow manner in which we have been proceeding during the present session of Congress. If the program which has been detailed to us and given by the press is to come before the Senate, we shall not adjourn until midsummer. I hope there will be a great curtailment of that program; but we have done scarcely anything since we have been here.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I agree with the Senator that the progress of legislation during this session has been slow. That has been due to the fact that the committees which have the bills under consideration for the most part have been unable to reach conclusions and to make reports. This bill, as was stated by some Senators, has been before the Senate in one form or another for a very long time.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not care to go into the reasons why progress has been almost negligible. I desire to speak for only a moment on the pending motion.

I was appointed about a year ago as a member of the subcommittee on the so-called "pure food and drug bill." That subcommittee made a report to the Committee on Commerce, to which the bill was referred. The committee considered the measure again at the present session, and I am anxious to proceed to enact some legislation on the subject if we are to have any brought before us this year; but a peculiar situation confronts us this morning.

Our colleague the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] has stated—and, as a member of the committee, I know his statement to be correct—that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is very much opposed to this measure. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] is much opposed to some parts of it. I favor the proposed legislation. I favor action on some measure of this kind; but, in view of the absence of the Senator from North Carolina, caused by the injury which he has sustained, and in view of the want of notice generally to the members of the committee and the Senate, I appeal to the Senator from New York to postpone for 1 day consideration of this measure. I think it will help its progress in the Senate to be considerate of those who are absent and of those who have not had time to read the report and study the bill.

I speak as one who is anxious to go forward; but under the existing peculiar situation I think it would be tactful, it would be the right thing to do, to let the bill go over today and take it up tomorrow, when the Senator from North Carolina can be here, and the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Missouri and others may have an opportunity to consider the very complicated provisions of the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, when we shall proceed with this bill depends wholly upon the attitude of the majority leader. As I understand, the way is now clear, and we ought to be working; we ought to proceed with legislation.

If my motion shall prevail, and the bill shall be placed before us, if it shall be the desire of the Senate to have me explain it and then let it go over until tomorrow for action, I shall have no objection at all to that course. I do think, however, we ought to be making progress. The Congress has been in session for a long time, and the country is demanding that we proceed with our work. This is one of the several bills which have been before us for an extended period. It ought to be, if I may say so in all good spirit, well understood by this time by every Member of the Senate; but if, after we shall have made some progress with the bill today in the way of explanation, and so forth, it shall be desired to have it go over until tomorrow, I shall have no personal objection to taking that course.

I am anxious to have the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] express his views. I always find his views to be sane and sensible and well founded. I have no desire in the world to deprive him of an opportunity to participate in the debate; but I think we might well make some progress with the bill today, because the particular matters in which the Senator from North Carolina is interested are fundamental matters which really come at the end of the bill. The question which presents itself most strongly to his mind is as to where the supervision of advertising shall be administered—whether in the Food and Drug Administration, as the bill provides, or in the Federal Trade Commission.

In other words, if we were to proceed well along with the bill today, the fundamental matter to which the Senator from North Carolina most vigorously objects would still be before us. I think we ought to go forward at least reasonably today; and then, as I say, so far as I am concerned, I should not resist any effort to put the further consideration of the bill over until tomorrow.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon permit me to ask a question of the Senator from New York?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator recognizes the fact that my position is one of entire friendliness to the proposed legislation?

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, yes; entirely so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I simply wish to say to the Senator that if the bill may go over until tomorrow, and the Senator from New York and I may have a chance to confer this afternoon upon a series of technical amendments which cannot possibly be fought out on the floor of the Senate in advance, I am sure it will substantially promote the ultimate passage of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Or, rather, may I repeat the suggestion which I made a few moments ago? Many Senators are not familiar with the general provisions of this bill. There is not any reason why the chairman of the committee, the Senator from New York, should not have the opportunity now to make a statement concerning it and explain it. There is no disposition to crowd amendments or the bill itself to a vote today. Ample opportunity will be afforded the Senator from New York and the Senator from Michigan to have the conference which has been suggested.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not think I should complain of an arrangement whereby the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Chairman of the Committee on Commerce, and the author of the bill, would make a statement today, at the conclusion of which, and after the consideration of such questions as might be propounded, we should take a recess until tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. There are some matters to be taken up in executive session.

Mr. McNARY. I mean so far as the unfinished business is concerned.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not wish to enter into any agreement at this time with reference to the business to be transacted today.

Mr. McNARY. In making the suggestion I am speaking only of the unfinished business. I am assuming the Senator from New York desires to make a statement, and then let us defer the matter until tomorrow. I think that would be a very happy solution of the problem.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas whether he proposes that the bill be not proceeded with other than have a statement regarding it by the Senator from New York?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have stated twice that it is not my thought that controversial matters should be taken up during the consideration of the bill today, in view of the statements which have been made by the Senator from Missouri, the Senator from Michigan, and the Senator from Oregon; but it does seem to me, having in mind the situation, which has been made clear, that there is no occasion to postpone discussion of the bill by the Senator from New York. That much time at least could be utilized. I have no disposition to suggest that a vote be taken on any controversial matter during the day.

Mr. CLARK. The purpose of my inquiry was to find out whether the consideration of the bill was to be limited to a statement by the Senator from New York. Many changes have been made in the draft of the bill, and I think some changes have been made since the committee reported the bill. I do not think those matters ought to be considered today, even if the Senator from New York is to address the Senate upon the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. We do not wish to take up controversial matters.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator says "controversial matters." The point I make is that if the Senator from New York is content to make his statement, and confine the consideration of the bill to his statement, I shall not oppose the motion for consideration. If, on the other hand, it is the purpose to move the bill along by the consideration of amendments, then I propose to oppose the motion for consideration.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, as I understand, the idea is simply to allow the Senator from New York to explain the bill and not have a vote today. Is not that the suggestion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 5. [Putting the question.] The ayes seems to have it.

Mr. CLARK. I ask for the yeas and nays, unless we can reach an agreement that the consideration be limited to the statement of the Senator from New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri demands the yeas and nays. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ADAMS voted "yea" when his name was called.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think it is unnecessary to have a yea-and-nay vote. I think there is agreement on all sides that we should proceed no further with the bill today than to have the statement of the Senator from New York.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if some other Senator should desire to make a statement concerning the bill, why should he be precluded from doing so? I cannot understand the attitude of the Senator from Missouri. I have stated that, so far as I am concerned—and I think the Senator from New York concurs—there is no disposition to have a vote today. If that is not satisfactory, I am unable to say anything that would be satisfactory.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, he has finally made himself clear.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon has the floor, and when he ceases to claim the floor the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] will be recognized, since he has given notice that he desires the floor in his own right.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think the whole situation is understood, and that the matter is composed; that there will be no vote on the bill. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the order for the yeas and nays be rescinded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none, and the order for the yeas and nays is rescinded.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, when the Senator from Oregon says there is to be no vote on the bill, does he mean no vote on the bill or any amendments?

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein; to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics; and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. COPELAND obtained the floor.

WORK-RELIEF PROGRAM

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to make a brief statement which seems to me of some importance.

A situation has arisen respecting the work-relief joint resolution under which I believe it may be necessary that the bill be further considered by the conferees. There was inserted in the tentative conference report a provision which limits the application of the $900,000,000 portion of the work-relief fund to projects upon which at least one-third of the expenditures shall be made for direct relief. There is perhaps another amendment which may require further action. It is the amendment relating to the confirmation of administrators.

The work-relief provision appears to be new legislation. It was not in the joint resolution either as it was passed by the House bill or by the Senate. It was inserted in conference apparently in violation of the rule of the Senate. The effect of the provision is to make impossible or impracticable the loaning of any part of the $900,000,000 portion of the fund for housing, rural electrification, and perhaps some other projects. Experience has shown that customarily slightly less than 33⅓ percent of the expenditure is made for direct work on these classes of projects.

When the bill was sent to conference, pursuing the custom which had prevailed in the Senate of naming the senior members of the committee, it happened that four of the five Senate conferees were opposed to the legislation. It is not intended as any reflection on the conferees to make this statement; they had a perfect right to oppose the legislation; but, under those circumstances, the bill having passed the Senate by a vote of 68 to 16, it does not seem to me that the representatives of the Senate should stand in the way of prompt enactment of the legislation under a conference agreement which will fairly reflect the views of the Senate.

The bill involved many controversies, as we all know. Numerous amendments were inserted in the Senate. The matter would not be of pressing importance if it were not for the fact that the relief fund has been practically exhausted, and there is need for immediate action. If the bill is recommitted to conference by the body at the other end of the Capitol, I express the hope that it may be found practicable on the part of the Senate conferees to reach an agreement which will eliminate the provisions to which I have referred, and enable the Congress speedily to pass the legislation. If that cannot be done, it will be necessary for the Senate to take such action as it may and can to speed up the legislation.

I make no complaint at the delay which has occurred with regard to the enactment of the legislation, and I think the conference committee acted promptly and diligently in its efforts to reach a conclusion. I think it is regrettable that the custom prevails in the Senate, or has prevailed, of too frequently committing a measure to its enemies in conference. It is recalled that just a few days ago two Senators rose on this floor and refused to serve on a conference committee because they were opposed to legislation carried in the bill which had been passed over their objection.

I think we all realize that in a measure of so great importance, a measure that carries so many amendments, it is not possible for anyone to secure exact provisions he desires; but I do feel that it is practicable that the legislation should be confined to the differences actually in conference and that it is practicable to work out a quick conclusion of this matter.

I thank the Senator from New York for yielding.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from Arkansas, with his accustomed civility, has mildly rebuked the senior Senators of the Appropriations Committee for accepting service on the conference committee in the effort to reconcile the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. It is true that some of the conferees, including myself, voted against a major provision of the joint resolution appropriating approximately $5,000,000,000 for use for relief and work relief. The Senate, I am sure, will recall that the chairman of the committee, being instructed by the committee to report the joint resolution, justified every amendment which the Appropriations Committee put upon the measure. He voted against the large amount, and has no apology to make to anyone because he did vote against it; and the Senate having refused to reduce the amount, he voted against the joint resolution on that account. In the conference committee that question did not arise at all, however, and could not arise, because the stated amount appeared in both the House and the Senate measures.

We discussed very earnestly for more than a day other proposed amendments to the joint resolution. I now send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent that it be read, a letter addressed by me last night to the Secretary of the Interior, upon which I shall comment after it shall have been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

SUNDAY, MARCH 31, 1935.

Hon. HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Last night I received by messenger your letter having reference to a certain provision of the conference report on House Joint Resolution 117, and have managed, after much delay, to reach one of my office stenographers today in order that I may promptly respond to your communication.

The provision of the conference report to which you object is classification of projects (g), Senate amendment (3) as amended in conference, as follows:

"(g) Loans or grants, or both, for projects of States, Territories, possessions, including subdivisions and agencies thereof, and self-liquidating projects of public bodies thereof, municipalities, and the District of Columbia, where not less than one-third of the loan or the grant or the aggregate thereof is for expenditures for direct work, $900,000,000."

Your objection seems founded (1) upon the theory that by restricting loans and grants to projects where not less than one-third of the loan or grant, or the aggregate thereof, is for expenditure for "direct work", only work "at the site of the project" may be credited as "direct work" within the meaning of the provision; and (2) because "the more desirable the project from a social and economic point of view, the less chance will there be of its qualifying under the language" of the amendment as agreed to in conference.

The President, in his message to Congress, assured us that there are many millions of unfortunate persons out of employment, some of whom are in serious circumstances; and, accordingly, the clear legislative purpose of the conference report on House Joint Resolution 117 is to make available nearly $5,000,000,000 of public money to "provide relief, work relief, and to increase employment by providing for useful projects."

Apparently you do not agree with this clear legislative purpose, but feel that the public moneys involved should be made available, first, for any social revision or upheaval determined upon by those selected to administer the legislation, and, second, for such employment as their "social and economic" program may permit.

In my view, shared by my colleagues, any plan for accomplishing a marked change in our social structure, especially through Federal direction and uses of public moneys, should be considered by the Congress as such and not under the guise of merely providing work for millions of persons out of employment.

As to your objection (1), you mistakenly read into the amendment language not appearing therein by adding the words "at the site of the project." These words, specifically rejected in conference, nowhere appear in the report. Hence, "direct work" as used in the amendment means actual work on the loan project, and not necessarily "at the site of the project."

Such was the understanding of every member of the conference. For instance, in a loan project for construction of a municipal water system or electric-lighting plant or gas plant or other public utility there would be for crediting as "direct work" not only the work of constructing the plant, installing the machinery, laying the mains, etc. (all of which would be, of course, at the site of the project), but the work involved in the construction of pumps, motors, other machinery, etc., if actually constructed for the particular plant, even if constructed far from the site of the project; also the work actually involved in the transporting, trucking, and unloading thereof, etc. There is nothing in the amendment limiting "direct work" to "labor directly employed at the site of the project." To be sure of this, the conferees called in the Comptroller General and by him were assured he would so hold in any matter submitted to him for decision.

The public moneys, as we understand, are being provided in the joint resolution to "increase employment" and a project that does not involve direct work to the extent of at least one-third of the expenditures involved, may not fairly be considered one designed to materially increase employment. It is not difficult to think of projects for which money might be loaned, if there be no reasonable restriction, which would not involve the employment of a single one of the 3,500,000 employable persons now on relief.

As to objection (2), that under the amendment "the more desirable the project from a social and economic point of view the less chance will there be of its qualifying", I respectfully submit that there is a distinctive conflict between this and the expressed legislative purpose of the joint resolution. Apparently you think the purpose of the joint resolution is to accomplish revision of the social structure, whereas the legislative purpose, it seems clear to me, is to increase employment in the interest of the millions of persons out of work.

The amendment is designed to prevent loans for purchase of existing plants with no appreciable amount of new and direct work involved and merely or largely to effect a change in ownership or management.

As to the possibility of courts holding that the required amount of direct work is not shown to be involved in a loan project and, if such be the fact, enjoining prosecution of the project, it would seem that the courts might feel it their duty to so give effect to the law; and why not, if there should be attempted an evasion of the law?

In this connection I venture to suggest that should the Congress state no minimum requirement for direct work in connection with loans-and-grants projects the courts might feel it their duty to enjoin in all cases where the direct work shown to be involved fails to bring the project, in the judgment of the court, within the basic purposes of the enactment—to "provide relief, work relief, and to increase employment by providing for useful projects."

Stating in the joint resolution a minimum requirement of one-third for direct work discloses the legislative purpose to raise no question for the courts in cases fully meeting such statutory requirement.

With respect to any administrative duty to "certify" that a loan project will provide "direct work" to the extent of one-third of the expenditures, it may be pointed out that under the amendment any such project may not be the subject of a loan until the amount of direct work involved is established as a fact.

But aside from these matters, Mr. Secretary, the measure has reached such legislative stage that it would be impracticable, if not quite impossible, to make major changes therein and secure action thereon in the near future. Apparently there are now open but two courses: to send the measure back to conference, which might mean further protracted consideration of all the disagreeing provisions of the joint resolution by both the Senate and the House, and long delay, or to approve the conference report and then, by means of further legislation, make any amendments or changes determined by the Congress to be appropriate or necessary. Frankly, the Senate conferees are all opposed to sending the measure back to conference.

Of course, I completely understand that you have no personal interest in the matter and can readily comprehend that you have not greatly enjoyed the disagreeable duty of making P. W. A. allotments. I certainly could not suppose that you would covet the task of further doing this critical work. But I would not have you imagine that any action taken in conference involved any criticism of your official activities or of you. Personally, I have omitted no proper occasion to commend you and, frankly, I should regret to see your functions turned over to any other person attached to the Washington administration. I am always glad to oblige you; but in this particular instance, I think you are clearly wrong and the conference report clearly right.

With very genuine respect, sincerely yours,

CARTER GLASS.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, section 3 of the joint resolution, as it went to conference, was wholly an insertion by the Senate itself; no word of it was in the joint resolution as passed by the House; but the House conferees undertook to alter that provision of the joint resolution in various respects, and, with the assent of the Senate conferees, succeeded in doing so.

At the last, having their attention drawn to the fact that under the section as it stood the entire amount of $900,000,000, with such addition as the President might please to make to the amount, in his discretion, under the 20-percent permission, might be expended without employing a single human being in addition to those already now employed, the Senate conferees undertook to write into the provision a requirement that this money should not be loaned to States, municipalities, and subdivisions of States or the District of Columbia unless the project for which the money was loaned involved the expenditure of one-third of the amount for labor.

As I stated in my letter to the Secretary, he has fallen into the error, which has been spread broadcast in the Washington newspapers, of asserting that the measure requires that one-third of the labor shall be done on the site of the project. There is not a word or sentence in the report of the conferees which justifies any such assumption. On the contrary, the conferees took the view that any work entering into a given project for which any part of the $900,000,000 should be loaned should be counted in estimating the one-third required to be expended on direct labor.

In order to make sure that that was a correct interpretation of the provision, the conferees asked the Comptroller General to come before them, to examine the provision, and to give his interpretation of it. He told us that the interpretation of the Senate conferees was his interpretation and that he should feel obliged so to rule in any matter that might come before him for decision.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. GLASS. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from Virginia might state also that, while it was proposed by someone in the conference that the language should be further restricted to require one-third of the work to be done at the site, the proposal was overwhelmingly "thrown out of the window."

Mr. GLASS. Yes. To show that the Senate conferees had not in mind in the text of their report or in the spirit of it to require that the one-third of the direct work should apply to the site of the project, that proposal was made and almost unanimously rejected by the conferees. The purpose of the conferees was to require that when any part of the $900,000,000, plus whatever might be added to it, should be loaned to a State or community or subdivision of a State for a project, the project must involve enough work to consume one-third of the loan.

As I stated in my letter to the Secretary, for example, if a waterworks plant should be erected out of money loaned from the $900,000,000, not only must the work on the site make up a part of the one-third expenditure, but all the work on a motor be manufactured a thousand miles away or on other machinery manufactured far away, and all work involved in the transportation and the handling of the machinery that related itself to the particular project for which the amount should be loaned, would be counted.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I should like to ask the Senator how the conferees arrived at one-third? It seems to me that is the minimum amount which should be used for labor.

Mr. GLASS. The first proposal was "a major part", which might mean 50 or 51 percent. In the very earnest discussion which ensued there were various proposals reducing the amount, one proposal to make it 45 percent, another 40 percent, another 35 percent, until finally we reached, as we thought, the exceedingly reasonable amount of 33⅓ percent.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. GLASS. If the joint resolution is a measure for work relief and for the employment of persons so as to take them off of the relief roll, the conferees came to the conclusion that this was a very reasonable provision.

I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Do I understand the Senator to say that the limitation respecting the one-third for direct work applies to the entire $900,000,000?

Mr. GLASS. Yes, and only to the $900,000,000.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Only to the $900,000,000?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Has the Senator's attention been directed to the thought that, as the provision has been changed and now reads, it seems to include two different kinds of projects, and that it is susceptible of the interpretation that the new limitation applies only to self-liquidating projects of public bodies, and not to loans or grants, or both, for projects of States, Territories, or possessions? There is that possibility of interpretation which the conferees might well desire to take into consideration.

Mr. GLASS. Any interpretation or any contention is possible to a lawyer. [Laughter.] The provision "self-liquidating public bodies" was put into the measure by the House conferees.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Virginia a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. GLASS. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The interpretation which the Senator places on the words "direct work" seems to me of doubtful correctness. What does the word "direct" mean if it is not intended to eliminate work done at the factories in the manufacturing of material, and work of similar character? What application can it have unless it is intended to restrict the expenditure to work on the particular project?

I cannot give to the language the meaning which the Senator states the Senate conferees gave to it. If they had used simply the word "work", or the words "work direct and indirect", it would seem to me their interpretation would be correct; but having restricted it to direct work, it certainly means something different from "work" or "indirect work." If it does mean something different, what does it mean? It cannot mean anything else in law or in reason, according to my interpretation, than that the term will restrict the expenditure to those projects where the actual work done by employees on the project must cost 33⅓ percent of the amount expended.

In the same connection let me say that the limitation has added significance when we refer to the report pertaining to emergency relief appropriations, where it is shown, with respect to slum clearance, non-Federal projects of a character financed by the P. W. A., rural housing and rural electrification, that every class just mentioned the direct work as reported by the Emergency Relief Administration falls below the limitation provided in the amendment.

I have reached a conclusion directly in conflict with that which the able Senator from Virginia has stated, namely, that the effect of the limitation is to exclude loans from the $900,000,000 for any of the four purposes to which I have referred. If that limitation be retained, the President could then make grants for the purpose of rural electrification, housing, and slum clearance, and certain P. W. A. projects, but he could not make loans. He would be denied the opportunity and privilege of making the expenditure under such conditions that the Government could get the money back.

Laying aside any question of law connected with the insertion by the conference committee of a provision which was not in either measure, I say that the effect of the limitation is to undo what the Senate plainly intended should be done.

I know it may be said that it is desirable to spend as much money out of this fund as may be spent for work, for employment; but it happens that, with respect to the particular classes of projects to which I have referred—slum clearance, rural housing, rural electrification, and non-Federal projects of a character financed by P. W. A.—we already have a report showing that in every instance the direct work falls below the limitation found in this conference amendment.

There is another thought which is well worthy of consideration. Perhaps I should not take the time of the Senator from Virginia; but I will finish my statement now, with his permission. That is, it gives the Comptroller General virtually the power to veto projects which do not meet his approval.

If the administrator, the President, should certify that the expenditure was 33⅓ percent or above for direct work, the Comptroller General even then could go into the question as to whether actually that amount had been expended for direct work. If "direct work" does not mean work on the project itself, I wish to know what it means, and where the term originated; why it was necessary to insert in this amendment the unusual, the peculiar expression "direct work" unless it was intended to mean that the expenditure on every project for which loans may be made from the $900,000,000 fund must be 33⅓ percent for the purpose of employing persons on the project. I cannot conceive of any other interpretation which could be given it.

I apologize to my friend the Senator from Virginia for taking so much of his time.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. Cannot the Senator from Arkansas conceive of a project which would need a great deal of machinery and motors and equipment on which this money could be spent and still be spent directly for the project?

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator makes an issue which I am glad to meet. Does the Senator maintain that the expenditure of funds for machinery would be for direct work?

Mr. COUZENS. Absolutely.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not agree with that.

Mr. COUZENS. It is direct work upon the project.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not believe anyone would employ the term "direct work" if he meant to use the fund for the purchase of machinery. "Direct work" does not mean purchasing machinery. It does not mean it in law, and it does not mean it in reason. "Direct work", whatever it may mean, certainly cannot mean the purchase of equipment, for that is not work. "Direct work" means labor, if you please, not equipment, and it does not mean machinery.

I apologize to the Senator from Virginia for taking so much of his time.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield to me?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. The expenditure of this money to put men to work to build a turbine engine or a power plant is obviously direct work for the project. Of course the Senator from Arkansas has had much more experience than some others in manufacturing production. He dogmatically states that the expenditure of money for labor on machinery and equipment is not direct expenditure for the completion of a project.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. GLASS. I do.

Mr. BARKLEY. According to that interpretation, there might be so much machinery on the site of any project that one man operating the machinery could do all the work; and I suppose, according to that theory, all that was spent on the machinery would be regarded as money spent for direct work.

Mr. ROBINSON. There need not be any expenditure at all for labor. The money could all be spent for machinery, which everybody knows, notwithstanding the statement of the Senator from Michigan, is not a sound construction.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator from Arkansas may have his opinion about that, but I submit that it is not correct.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from Arkansas suggests that this language gives the Comptroller General veto power.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator there?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I think this very discussion illustrates what I tried to point out when the joint resolution was before the Senate—the unwisdom of the attempt to limit by legislation the discretion of those who are going to be compelled to spend the money. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that, regardless of what one person may think or what another one may think, we have already seen distinguished scholars right here in the Senate differ on the meaning of this language. There are several hundred Federal judges in this country, and on this question of "work" and "direct work" they might have as many different opinions as we find in the Senate. If we should have any limitation at all there, I fear those who might carry out or try to carry out the intent of Congress, however honestly and fairly they might undertake to do it, would be met with injunction after injunction all over the land.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia permit me to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator believe that the purchase of machinery is an expenditure for direct work?

Mr. NORRIS. The expression "direct work" in this proposed legislation is rather new to me. If the question were put up to me, and that language were put in, I should say, offhand, that it meant work on the site. I do not think striking out the word "site" affected the real intent; but I concede that others may have a different opinion. They may be right; but does not that illustrate the difficulty of carrying out the purpose of a measure of this kind when too many limitations are imposed?

Suppose the President should undertake to provide for some rural electrification, or those carrying out his orders should undertake to do so, I think that when there is any possibility of doubt, especially since we are really governed by courts more than we are governed by legislatures, the work would be held up all over the United States. So long as we put in anything we will leave a doubt. As the Senator from Virginia well said, lawyers can disagree on everything, and all judges are lawyers.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I do not know how good a lawyer the Comptroller General is. We have had him there for nearly 15 years upon the assumption that he is a good lawyer and knows his business. I think he has saved the Government many, many millions of dollars by his attention to his business.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I agree fully with that statement. I have great faith and confidence in the Comptroller General.

Mr. GLASS. The other conferees all agreed with that statement, and we had the Comptroller General come before us to scrutinize this language; and, as I stated in my letter to the Secretary of the Interior, the Comptroller General held that any work involving labor done on any given project for which any part of the $900,000,000 should be loaned would be accounted by him, should the matter be brought to his attention, as direct work on that project, and within the meaning of the proposed enactment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. I should like to get his idea of this matter, and I am asking for information. What function has the word "direct" in the proposed legislation? What is the use of it if we are to construe it as the Senator does?

Mr. GLASS. The use of it is that the work shall be direct; and the interpretation of the Comptroller General is that it is direct if the laborer manufactures anything or assists in any way on a given project for which money may be loaned.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. Will not Senators please let me get somewhere?

Mr. BARKLEY. Certainly.

Mr. GLASS. Go ahead, however, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not interpret the expression in that way, but I should like to have the Senator finish his sentence.

Mr. GLASS. Go ahead.

Mr. BARKLEY. What I desired to ask was whether labor performed in the manufacture of a piece of machinery in Detroit or Philadelphia which is bought in Arizona for the purpose of being used in the construction of a project in Arizona would be regarded as direct labor.

Mr. GLASS. If the machinery were manufactured for any given project in Arizona, it would be regarded as direct labor on that project.

Mr. BARKLEY. Suppose it were machinery manufactured and kept in stock.

Mr. GLASS. Then it would not be regarded as direct labor; and that is the reason for using the word "direct." In other words, this is a work-relief measure.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would the profit by the factory in the manufacture of a piece of machinery made specifically for use in some one project figure in any way?

Mr. GLASS. The profit would not figure.

Mr. BARKLEY. While I am on my feet, I should like to ask the Senator another question.

Regardless of the merits of this new provision, it seems to me it clearly violates the rules of both Senate and House, which provide that new matter shall not be inserted by conferees in a bill, and that matter in a bill, upon which both Houses have agreed prior to its being sent to the conference, shall not be eliminated by the conferees. The Senator, of course, may not agree with my interpretation of the rules, but did the Senator or any of the conferees in the insertion of this language consider whether it violated that injunction of the rules of both Houses of Congress?

Mr. GLASS. Of course, we discussed it, and I have stated here on the floor that there was not a word in amendment no. 3 in the joint resolution as it originally passed the House, and, therefore, we were advised by competent parliamentarians that that provision of the measure was subject to any alteration to which the conferees might agree. Not only that but I pointed out here, when the Senator was not in the Chamber, that the conferees made half a dozen alterations in that provision of the joint resolution before we reached this particular alteration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, each one of those alterations would have to stand on its own bottom as to whether or not it complied with the rules of both Houses. But it seems to me that it must be admitted that the $4,000,000,000 appropriated in the joint resolution as passed by the House was without limitation.

Mr. GLASS. For what was it appropriated?

Mr. BARKLEY. For work and work relief, to be administered by the President.

Mr. GLASS. For work and work relief, and an increase of employment.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand, but there was no language in the joint resolution which limited the President to any proportion which should be expended for labor or material. The Senate amendment changed that only in the particular that it allocated a certain number of millions of dollars to certain types of work, still without any limitation as to the proportion which might be expended for labor and the proportion which might be expended for materials or other purposes. So that neither House inserted in the measure as it passed the respective Houses any language attempting to set up any standard by which the President or anybody else should be governed in deciding the proportion.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator is discussing a point of order. I respectfully represent to him that the conference report is not as yet before the Senate. The Senator will be at liberty to make his point of order for decision by the Chair when the conference report shall come before the Senate, if it shall come before the Senate. We discussed that matter in the committee, and the conferees came to the conclusion that the amendment was not subject to a point of order, and were so advised by what we regarded as very competent parliamentary authority.

Something has been said about not making loans for housing and slum clearance. The joint resolution appropriates $450,000,000 for housing, which does not involve the lending of money, and it appropriates other amounts for slum clearance, which does not involve the lending of money. This restriction relates only to the $900,000,000 to be loaned to States and subdivisions thereof, and under the joint resolution as it went to conference, the administrators of the measure could lend every dollar of the $900,000,000 without employing a single, solitary man of the 3,500,000 on relief rolls. Does anyone want that done? Is this a work-relief measure?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURPHY in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. And is it not true that the argument in favor of the House proposal to incorporate this provision in the joint resolution, was that under the terms of the joint resolution as it stood every dollar of the money could be used by the States or the subdivisions borrowing it without having any work done at all with it? That argument was advanced, and that was the argument which had its weight with me, that the whole $900,000,000 could be used for such loans without having a dollar's worth of work done, or any relief granted.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia permit me to ask the Senator from Tennessee a question?

Mr. GLASS. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Was the question discussed in the conference that the effect of this amendment might be to prevent loans for slum clearance, rural housing, rural electrification, and non-Federal projects of the character financed by the P. W. A.?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; those questions were before us. We had the figures, it is true; but there was a separate provision for housing, which would seem to take care of both the slum clearance and the housing.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the very point—the separate provision for housing and the separate provision for rural electrification and for other purposes all contemplate grants, or the use of the funds, by the Federal Government; they do not contemplate loans. The $900,000,000 item constitutes a fund which could be loaned for these very purposes. So that with the insertion of the limitation, it is left in such form that the President could make grants for the various purposes which I have just named, but he could not make loans for them. In other words, he would not have the opportunity of making loans so that the Government could get the money back.

Mr. GLASS. Let me ask the Senator from Arkansas how slums are cleared—by magic, or by labor? How are houses built—by magic, or by labor?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to answer, I have just pointed out, and do so again, that for slum clearance the cost of the direct labor on a given project is 28 percent.

Mr. GLASS. That is under the interpretation of the Secretary of the Interior as to what we mean by "direct labor." He undertakes to put words into the joint resolution which are not there.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no; the Senator uses the same language in the joint resolution, and the interpretation which has been given throughout the relief administration is to the effect that direct labor does not mean the purchase of materials, it does not mean the purchase of machinery, but means what it says; it means work on the project.

Mr. GLASS. It means work on the project, but not necessarily on the site. It was so held by the conferees, and confirmed by the Comptroller General.

Mr. ROBINSON. Conceivably it might not be on the site if something is made for use on the project, of course, but direct work does not mean the purchase of materials.

Mr. GLASS. It means the purchase of any material that is to go into a given project, whether it is slum clearing, or housing, or something else.

Mr. ROBINSON. The word "direct" has no particular application to work, but it has a very well-defined meaning. It means "straight", "without deviation", "without going in a circuit." Then, when you go in a circuit to make it mean the purchase of material, you are giving it an interpretation which I do not think any court would apply to it.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield to me?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. The words "direct workers" have become generally known as meaning those working directly on a particular project being constructed.

Mr. ROBINSON. They are laborers, are they not?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes, and the words "indirect workers" mean those who are employed upon the material which is manufactured or produced somewhere else, and usually the direct employment is only one-third of the indirect employment upon any project.

Mr. GLASS. Well, we require that it be only one-third. Does the Senator want to give away this $900,000,000 without employing a single, solitary one of the 3,500,000 people who are on relief?

Mr. WAGNER. Of course not.

Mr. GLASS. Does the Senator think the Senate wants to do that? That is what would have been the effect before we amended the joint resolution, and that is what some people want to do.

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, no——

Mr. GLASS. Yes; that is what they want to do. They want to go around this country and buy established power plants—electric-light plants, gas plants, and other utilities—and lend money to communities to take them over; and there is not one lick of labor involved in that sort of expenditure of money.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is no more work relief than the purchase of machinery and equipment is direct work.

Mr. GLASS. It is not work relief at all. It may involve the discharge of many people, rather than the employment of people.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for an observation, the Comptroller General told the committee that without this limitation the administrator could buy such plants as have been mentioned and not use one dollar of the money for work or work relief.

Mr. GLASS. The fact is that there are some executive officials in Washington who not only want to perform the duties committed to them but they want to legislate for the Congress of the United States. This whole tempest was raised by one of these officials, who threatens not to administer the law unless we write it as he wants it written. If Congress is willing to take that humiliating position, it is up to Congress to do it.

After all, however, the conferees, after long and earnest discussion and consideration, agreed upon the conference report. It has been reported to the other branch of Congress and is there for action. If there is anything in the joint resolution, as reported from the conferees, which needs correction, the orderly procedure is to introduce another joint resolution and make the correction, and let Congress act upon the proposed correction, if there need be any correction; but that is not the way we are proposing to do.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why should that be done before this proposed legislation is passed? Of course, what the Senator from Virginia suggests is one remedy; but here we have a situation where the conference report has never been submitted to the Senate, and it may never be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. GLASS. I think it will never be submitted to the Senate; and the reason why it is held up is that a public official desires to legislate for us.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no; I do not think that is true.

Mr. GLASS. I think it is. That is my very definite conclusion.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not think the Senator can stand on that statement.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not think I made quite clear to the Senator what I had in mind as to the danger of the use of the words "direct labor." I think what the Senator ought to include is "direct or indirect labor", so long as it is labor. That would include labor upon materials which are supplied for the particular work-relief project, and I think that is what the Senator intends.

Mr. GLASS. This particular provision relates only to one feature of the joint resolution—that providing for loans to States and communities. There is not such an all-fired haste to make loans of the taxpayers' money to people, particularly if the projects which are in mind involve no additional labor. So why can we not amend the joint resolution in an orderly way, or correct it in the orderly way, if there need to be any correction, which I deny? Why hold up the conference report? I venture to say it never before happened in the history of the Congress of the United States that an executive official came up to the Capitol and held up a conference report which had already been agreed upon and submitted to one House for conference.

Mr. WAGNER. I may say to the Senator that I had no intention of holding up a report. I tried to explain to the Senator what the words "direct labor" represent in the construction of a particular project.

Mr. GLASS. I have given the Senate the Comptroller General's considered opinion as to what it means. It not only means the project on the site but it means every ounce of labor used in the machinery, whatever it be or wherever made, for that particular project.

Mr. WAGNER. Generally, however, when we speak of "direct labor" we speak of labor upon the site of the project, and when we speak of "indirect labor" we refer to the labor upon the material which is supplied for the project. I did not wish to have those words confused in our consideration of the subject matter.

Mr. GLASS. But the Comptroller General told the conferees that in any matter submitted for his decision he would hold that any work done, wherever done, for a given project would come within this language.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The interpretation of any language must be within the limitations of the language itself. The words "direct work" never have, in any court or in any tribunal, meant machinery. Expenditure for direct work never has meant expenditure for the purchase of material; and "relief and work relief", the primary purposes of all the appropriations proposed to be provided by the joint resolution, do not embrace expenditures for the mere purchase of going plants.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. I will yield in a moment, as soon as I say one more word. I merely wish to say that the Senator from Virginia is at a complete disadvantage when he engages with learned lawyers here in the interpretation of language, being nothing in the world but a practical printer and newspaperman.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, the Senator is a great deal more than that. Do not tell us that.

Mr. GLASS. I have tried to learn something about the English language and its meaning; but when it comes to discussing it with the learned attorneys here, I confess myself at a total disadvantage.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator from Virginia will permit me, I am not one of the learned attorneys, but I agree thoroughly with him.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from Georgia is one of the "learnedest" attorneys. [Laughter.]

Mr. GEORGE. Money advanced on any grant or loan for direct labor means money for any labor performed in consequence of the loan; and I do not see how that conclusion can be escaped, whether the labor is performed at the plant or elsewhere.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is entirely true; but the term does not mean expenditures for the purchase of material. That is an entirely different matter, which has no relationship to direct work.

Mr. GEORGE. It does mean expenditures for any material which has not been already constructed into a completed project.

Mr. GLASS. Exactly.

Mr. GEORGE. And it must necessarily mean any labor performed in consequence of that loan in order to carry out that project.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I am quite content to have the RECORD show that that is our intent in using the words "direct labor"; but I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that in the collection of statistics on the subject of unemployment or any related subject a distinction is always made between the words "direct labor" and "indirect labor." it has been variously estimated that direct labor represents only about one-third of the actual labor used upon a particular project; that for every one employed upon the project, two or more are employed off the project in the manufacture of material.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that; but I still contend that it is a sound construction in every case of a loan of money or advance of money which restricts that money, or a portion of it, to direct labor. It means that if labor is done in consequence of the loan, the language is fully satisfied.

Mr. GLASS. In confirmation of what the Senator from Georgia says, the Comptroller General was so explicit on the subject that I embodied his statements as mine in my letter to the Secretary of the Interior. Here is what he said:

> There would be for crediting as "direct work" not only the work of constructing the plant, installing the machinery, laying the mains, etc. (all of which would be, of course, at the site of the project), but the work involved in the construction of pumps, motors, other machinery, etc., if actually constructed for the particular plant—

Upon which the loan is made.

Mr. GEORGE. I think that is clear.

Mr. GLASS. He continues:

> Even if constructed far from the site of the project.

And listen—

> Also, the work actually involved in the transporting, trucking, and unloading thereof.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. That answers my question. If the words "direct labor" are to be interpreted as including what we both say is ordinarily considered to be direct and indirect labor, that answers the question I raised.

Mr. GLASS. That was the construction of the Comptroller General, and that was the construction of the conference committee.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; I always have yielded.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. On every occasion. The interpretation which the Senator has read, and which he himself has asserted here, excludes all manner of commissions and profits; does it not?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; it does, and it ought to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It ought to, of course. So any profit which a manufacturer of machinery may make in the manufacture or sale of machinery must be excluded. Any profit which the transporting agency makes must be excluded.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; but any work done in connection therewith must be included.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is perfectly true. All sorts of commissions and extra charges must be excluded.

Mr. ROBINSON. Transportation would not be direct labor.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Not at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly not.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It must be excluded. Therefore, Mr. President, I am leading to the conclusion, which must be perfectly apparent, that in determining what the one-third is it will be necessary for the Comptroller General to analyze and make an audit of every penny which is expended; and it seems to me the inescapable result would be to make it almost impossible for the Government to make any loan or any grant to the agencies which it is desired to serve.

Mr. GLASS. I would rather the Government should not make any loan than to spend $900,000,000 of the taxpayers' money without employing a single human being.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think there is no possibility of that.

Mr. GLASS. There was such authorization in the form in which the joint resolution went to conference.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It seems to me that as the conferees bring back their report there is positively no authorization for it, because the very first amendment limits the appropriation to "relief, work relief and to increase employment by providing for useful projects." So the appropriation is tied down absolutely to work; and it seems to me there is no possibility of making any such loan for the purchase of plants as the Senator fears.

Mr. GLASS. It is not tied down at all. The $900,000,000, plus $800,000,000 more, if the President sees fit, may be applied to the purchase of plants and not be used to employ anybody.

Mr. President, I am not in the habit of uselessly taking up the time of the Senate. I understand that the other branch of Congress has yielded to the dictation of the executive department and sent the report back to conference and that is where the matter stands.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—WORK-RELIEF PROGRAM

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, informed the Senate that the House had recommitted to the committee of conference the report of that committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 117) making appropriations for relief purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 404. An act to provide for the acquisition of land in the District of Columbia in excess of that required for public projects and improvements, and for other purposes;

S. 488. An act for the relief of Michael Ilitz;

S. 747. An act for the relief of Joe G. Baker;

S. 1856. An act for the relief of Arthur Smith;

H. R. 83. An act to provide for the conservation and settlement of estates of absentees and absconders in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

H. R. 340. An act for the relief of Louis Zagata;

H. R. 816. An act for the relief of Logan Mulvaney;

H. R. 829. An act granting 6 months' pay to Hester Hamilton;

H. R. 2117. An act for the relief of Cora A. Snyder;

H. R. 2569. An act for the relief of the estate of R. A. Wallace Treat;

H. R. 2678. An act for the relief of Carl L. Bernau;

H. R. 3477. An act relating to the incorporation of Trinity College of Washington, D. C., organized under and by virtue of a certificate of incorporation pursuant to the incorporation laws of the District of Columbia, as provided in subchapter 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws of the District of Columbia;

H. R. 4538. An act to change the designation of Leffler Place to Second Place;

H. R. 5032. An act for the relief of the dependents of Carl Lindow, known also as Carl Lindo; and

H. R. 5913. An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes.

WORK-RELIEF PROGRAM

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, before I proceed with my discussion of the food and drug bill, I wish to make reference to a statement made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. In the statement which he made he said:

> When the bill was sent to conference, pursuing the custom which had prevailed in the Senate of naming the senior members of the committee, it happened that 4 of the 5 Senate conferees were opposed to the legislation. It is not intended as any reflection on the conferees to make this statement; they had a perfect right to oppose the legislation; but, under those circumstances, the bill having passed the Senate by a vote of 68 to 16, it does not seem to me that the representatives of the Senate should stand in the way of the prompt enactment of the legislation under a conference agreement which will fairly reflect the views of the Senate.

The Senator from Arkansas said further:

> I think it is regrettable that the custom prevails in the Senate, or has prevailed, of too frequently committing a measure to its enemies in conference.

Mr. President, I wish to say that I never have known a conference committee which was freer and fairer in its discussion of matters presented to it than the conference committee on the work-relief joint resolution. So far as I am personally concerned, I voted for the Byrd amendment, and I voted for the Adams amendment, but I voted finally for the joint resolution. I did this because I come from a community that needs relief, that needs employment more than any other community in America. So certainly I am not an "enemy" to the legislation, and I did not see evidence on the part of any conferee that he was an enemy to the legislation.

I do not think the Senator from Arkansas intended to reflect upon the members of the conference committee, but certainly the language he used, if I may say so, in all good feeling, was unfortunate, because the members of the conference committee on the part of the Senate, regardless of how they voted on the matter that was before us in the Senate, were honest and liberal in their interpretation of the spirit of the Senate. I do not think there were any more on our side at the conference table who originally opposed the legislation than on the other side; but, be that as it may, I want to say for the conferees that it was a full and free and honest conference. Whether the Senators who served as conferees might be termed "enemies" of the legislation or not, they, at least, were not enemies to the desire to have the conference report properly and honestly prepared and presented.

Mr. President, I have taken pains to read the section of our manual about conferences. I read there that—

> Conferees may not strike out in conference anything in a bill agreed to and passed by both Houses.

We did not do that.

> Conferees may include in their report matters which are germane modifications of subjects in disagreement between the Houses and committed to the conference.

That is exactly what we did do. The amendment which was adopted in the conference was certainly germane to the matter under consideration. Further, so far as I am concerned, I favor the particular provision we have been discussing this morning, because this is a relief measure; it is intended to provide work. If, in the case of a given project, one-third of the amount allocated to it cannot be used directly to pay the workmen engaged on it, the project is not worthy of our consideration. That is what the joint resolution is for.

As the Senator from Virginia has pointed out, there was an effort made in the conference on our side to have that direct work apply to the "site of the project." That effort was defeated almost unanimously.

The Comptroller General explained to us that "direct" work means not alone work on the site, but also work on any materials which are to be used on the site, provided that work is actually done after the project is adopted. If $900,000,000 were used to buy materials now manufactured and now in existence, we would not be giving a dollar for work relief. The intention of the conferees was not to destroy the joint resolution, but to make certain that it would be administered in such a way as to serve the purposes for which it was designed, which were to afford work and to relieve unemployment.

I wanted to say that much in justice to myself and in justice to my colleagues on the conference committee. Certainly there was no man on that conference, so far as I could see, on either side of the table, who could be counted an enemy to the legislation which has to do with the relief of unemployment.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. Did the Senator ever before, in his legislative experience, hear the contention advanced that a bill would be expedited in passage or that funds designed for emergency relief in a great national crisis, when existing funds had been exhausted, or for any other purpose, could be made more quickly available by sending the bill back to conference in a servile yielding to the man who was the administrative official?

Mr. COPELAND. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ROBINSON. I thought the Senator from New York had concluded his remarks.

Mr. COPELAND. I had concluded my statement. I was going to proceed to discuss the bill which is before the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will take the floor for just a moment to discuss further the question which has been under consideration.

It is true that the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] voted for the joint resolution, and that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] voted for it and heartily supported it; but all the other conferees, according to my recollection, voted against it. Senators will recall that the Senator from New York spent most of his time while discussing the joint resolution in opposing its provisions. I said a while ago that he had a perfect right to do so; every Senator has the right to vote against any measure; but the theory of a conference, according to general parliamentary law, is that when a measure has been fought through the legislative assembly the friends of the legislation shall go on the conference.

I repeat, we have not always seen that done in the Senate, but it is rather remarkable that legislation so seriously and gravely contested as was this should pass into conference with four of the five representatives of the Senate really against the proposed legislation.

As I said at first, I think the Senators who were on the conference committee did conscientious work; they acted promptly and diligently; but that does not obviate the fact that they were unfriendly to the legislation; if any Senator here who heard my friend the Senator from New York speak on the joint resolution, eloquently and forcefully, can conclude that he was within the class of those who could be called "cordial supporters" of the legislation, such Senator is able to reach a conclusion at variance.

The Senator from New York had a perfect right to oppose the joint resolution, but I say that it is not good parliamentary practice after a measure has been fought out and passed to intrust it to conferees who were against it. I stand on that proposition; I think it is sound.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, if I may interrupt for a moment, so far as I am concerned, the Senate is at liberty to select other conferees.

Mr. ROBINSON. We understand that. We hope the issue may be disposed of without resort to such action; but the Senate is entitled to have its conferees reflect its views. The conferees inserted a provision that was not in the joint resolution as it passed either body, a provision which eliminates the possibility of carrying on projects which the majority of the Senate wish to see carried on.

Mr. HALE. What are they?

Mr. ROBINSON. I will name them again: Slum clearance, rural electrification, rural housing, non-Federal P. W. A. projects. All four of those classes are eliminated by the provision inserted in conference.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, that was not my impression.

Mr. ROBINSON. We have been arguing that question all morning, and I concede that we probably would never reach an agreement as to the meaning of "direct work", but we have had definitions given to it here this morning which, in my judgment, will not stand the test of either logic or of law. However, I submit the matter, and the Senator from New York may proceed with his bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I wish to say further in regard to this matter that, so far as I am concerned, I did not want to be a conferee, and I told the chairman of the committee so. But the conferees were appointed in accordance with the practice in the Senate. If it is not a good one, let us abolish it; but I wish to say again that if the most ardent friends of this legislation had been the conferees there could not have been a more honest or straightforward or more well-intentioned report than the one which was adopted.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I have a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, in response to the letter written by me to him, which I had read from the desk, and I am perfectly willing—in fact, I am anxious—that it shall go into the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, would the Senator mind having the letter read at the desk?

Mr. GLASS. I shall be glad to have that done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL EMERGENCY ADMINISTRATOR OF PUBLIC WORKS,
Washington, April 1, 1935.

Hon. CARTER GLASS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I thank you for going to the pains to reply in your letter of March 31 in such detail to my letter to you of March 30. If I may do so, I would like to correct one impression that my letter gave you and then comment briefly on one or two points you raise.

My use of the language "The more desirable the project from a social and economic point of view, the less chance will there be of its qualifying under the language" of the amendment was unfortunate since it led to a conclusion on your part that was not intended. I have not had any thought that this new appropriation would be used "for any social revision or upheaval determined upon by those selected to administer the legislation." All I was referring to were projects of the same nature as those for which we have been making allocations under the original Public Works Act. I have no thought that in administering the pending act one should go outside of the categories already established by P. W. A., nor have I in mind a single project outside of that classification for which I would desire to see an allocation made. Naturally, some of the projects for which we have been making appropriations are more desirable socially than others, as for instance school buildings, water works, bridges, subways, hospitals, public buildings, etc. I had these types of projects in mind as being more desirable "from a social point of view" than some others, and I am apprehensive that under the amendatory language it would be impossible to lend money for many, if not all, of such projects.

I believe that the greater the degree to which this money may be spent, to quote the language of the President, "to increase employment by providing for useful projects" rather than to "provide relief" or "work relief", the better it will be for the country economically, and the better it will be for the morale of the unemployed. I seriously doubt whether any real program of public works on a loan and grant basis can go forward under this qualifying amendment.

Carelessly, in my haste in writing to you, I spoke of the "direct work", referred to in the amendment, as labor employed directly at the site of the project. This, of course, was an error on my part, but, nevertheless, I do not believe that the effect of the broader language on any possible public-works program would be much different than if the limitation were as strict as I inadvertently stated it to be.

I note that the Comptroller General has given assurance that he would rule that direct work means not only the actual work at the site but, in addition, "work involved in the construction of pumps, motors, other machinery, etc., if actually constructed for the particular plant, even if constructed far from the site of the project; also, the work actually involved in transporting, trucking, and unloading thereof, etc." This undoubtedly would mean some enlargement of the restrictive language, but it is to be doubted whether in the general run of non-Federal projects, any specially made machinery, etc., would be required to be fabricated and transported. Except in such few special instances, the effect of the amendment would be to require the expenditure of not less than 33⅓ percent of the allocation for the project for direct labor at the site.

Moreover, not the Comptroller General but the courts in the final analysis would determine whether labor on special machinery a thousand miles away from the site was direct labor on the project. True, in arriving at a decision the courts ought to, and doubtless would, seek to determine what the congressional intent was in employing this terminology, but a judicial determination cannot be guaranteed in advance, and there is no assurance that a careful study of the whole record would not still leave a court of the opinion that direct labor on a project meant direct labor at the site.

But even supposing that the courts would interpret the language as it was intended, I still am of the opinion that no one could administer a public-works program with this limiting language in the act. How would the Comptroller General know, as a matter of fact, that direct labor, both at the site and in making special parts and transporting them to the site, would take more or less than 33⅓ percent of the money expended on the project?

In your letter you say: "It may be pointed out that under the amendment any such project may not be the subject of a loan until the amount of direct work involved is established as a fact." I fully agree with you, and that means to me that even if we should go ahead in all good faith with a loan to a municipality for a schoolhouse, or some other equally desirable project, it could not be determined until the project was finished whether or not it came under the act. So I say that even with the best of intentions on the part of the Administrator and of the Comptroller General, the act could not be administered to include loans for non-Federal projects. Of course, as I said in my former letter to you, there is no restriction on giving the money away; it can be scattered to the four corners of the country as dust before a high wind. Every leaf can be carefully raked and every blade of grass assiduously trimmed, but the money cannot be loaned on useful self-liquidating public works as I see it.

There seems to be a misconception in some quarters, although I do not think you share it, that if 33⅓ percent of direct labor is required in connection with a project, that is all the labor there will be in connection with that project; that the balance of the allocation will go for the purchase of property, profits, etc. Of course, this is not an accurate statement of the facts. I can hardly think of any construction project where upward of 70 percent will not go either for direct or for indirect labor. The direct labor in the main will be at the site. The indirect labor will be in mill and factory, in stone quarries, and on transportation lines. And it seems to me well and proper that this should be so. In no other way can it be hoped to spread the benefits of employment so equally throughout the country.

Take such a State as New York, or Pennsylvania, or Illinois, where unemployment is the heaviest. It is absolutely beyond hope that enough actual projects could be put into these States to absorb the unemployed. But if a great number of projects are scattered throughout the country in the nonindustrial States, those projects will absorb the unemployed in their localities and still give employment to thousands of workmen in the industrial States. After all, employment in producing a steel beam in Pittsburgh for a public building in Kentucky is just as valid and just as beneficial as if that employment were directly on the site. Under our complicated industrial system there could be no hope of successfully combatting unemployment under a law requiring an undue percentage of employment at the site unless there were some possibility, as there is not, that projects can be located in communities in proportion to their unemployment. It is obvious that this cannot be done. As a matter of fact, the city of Chicago, where the unemployment situation is very bad, indeed, can use very few more public buildings and no more public utilities than a city of 100,000.

It requires greater capacity, but duplication of plants would be wasteful even if they could be financed.

There seems to be a misapprehension in some quarters that unless some such restriction as the one under discussion is put into the act the money may be used to purchase properties instead of to give employment. There was no such limitation as is now proposed in the act under which P. W. A. is now operating, but we early established it as our policy that only a small proportion of any allocation could go for the purchase of property. After all, a public building cannot be erected unless land is bought upon which to build it unless the municipality already owns the site upon which it is proposed to build, and that is rarely the case. If the purchase of property is what the amendment was intended to cover, the matter could easily be reached directly by a limitation on the proportionate amount of any allocation that could be spent either for a site or for existing facilities.

In conclusion may I say, with all due respect, that I am still of the opinion that the limiting language not only puts a premium upon waste and extravagance and reckless dissipation of public money, it practically requires that this money be so distributed.

With keenest appreciation of your very friendly and cordial reference to me and with kindest personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES,
Administrator.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I want the record to be made permanent that our party leaders disagree to this system of appointing conferees. When we had amendments here raising the income taxes and inheritance taxes we would present them to the Finance Committee. The Finance Committee would vote them down. Then we would come into the Senate and overturn the Finance Committee. Then the leaders on the Finance Committee would be appointed as conferees and go into conference with the House conferees and knock out those amendments. That has been going on for 3 straight years to my certain knowledge. Every time we would overturn the committee and raise the income taxes and inheritance taxes the Finance Committee conferees would go into conference with the House conferees, and very nicely concede that we had no right to do what had been done in the Senate, which was what they had tried to keep the Senate from doing.

It seems that in his last hours the atheist will invoke the Lord and the royalist will call on the republic. This is one of those peculiar instances in which there happens to be gored the ox of the administration leaders who have been profiting by this abortion on legislation ever since the Senate has been here. They will raise the holy flag of the will of the Senate having been perverted now; but the next time we come in here and overturn one of their charmed committees, they will go right in and start killing rats again, just as they have been doing here all the time. It will take another protracted week and another good Holy Ghost and hell-fire sermon to hold one of them converted until water gets hot the next time it comes. [Laughter.]

I am very sorry the Senator from Virginia has left here. I wanted to break bread with him for just a moment. I know how to sympathize with him. It is due to the leadership and personal influence of the Senator from Virginia that the labor amendment was finally defeated in the Senate. Had it not been for him, the McCarran amendment would have gone out of this Chamber as a part of the law; and, according to the Democratic leaders, it was this leadership which saved the joint resolution by keeping the McCarran amendment from being adopted. So great gratitude was naturally due to the Senator from Viriginia for having done what they said resulted in the salvation of the joint resolution. Now, however, the time has come when gratitude must be shown in its proper way and along the accustomed lines that this administration have followed. They have, therefore, taken up the man who saved their joint resolution and kicked labor out of it, and now they have decided to hang him along with the rest of us; so we shall all hang together on the great cross of "gratitude" which has been erected here.

Just one more little line: When they finally spend this $5,000,000,000 and make the public debt $35,000,000,000 instead of $30,000,000,000, labor will be worse off, the country will be worse off, the taxpayers will be worse off, and then we shall all begin to wonder what the whole thing was about, as we did 1 year ago.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. We have just listened to the lamentations of the modern Jeremiah. [Laughter.] Nothing that this administration can do, nothing that it can propose, meets with his approval or commendation.

It is not possible to have conferees who will reflect every view that is expressed in the Senate. It is not possible to intrust legislation to conferees who in their personal views represent the views of the Senate on every particular amendment; but it is possible to have reflected the general position of the Senate respecting the legislation.

As to what my friend the Senator from Louisiana, Jeremiah the Second, has just said about the results of this proposed legislation, I do not anticipate that all our troubles will disappear when this measure shall become law. I know many things will remain to vex us, among them the Senator from Louisiana. [Laughter.] Nevertheless, this measure is founded on a just, a reasonable, and a sound basis. Its purpose is to take care of those who are in need of sustenance during the period when they cannot obtain work, and to provide work for as many workers as practicable. Certainly there will continue to be difficulties after this legislation shall have been enacted. There will be difficulties of administration; and no doubt the Senator from Louisiana will come back and tell us, as he is in the habit of doing when any difficulty arises, "Oh, yes; I told you so." After all, however, we must do something. We cannot refrain from making provision for destitution relief. We feel that there is an obligation to provide as full a measure of employment to the idle, to the unemployed, as is practicable; and when we shall have done that we shall have done a great deal more than has been proposed by those who oppose this measure.

I thank the Senator from New York for yielding to me.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York permit me just one little reference, for a second?

Mr. COPELAND. If it is very brief.

Mr. LONG. It is not going to be very long.

I am very much pleased that the Senator from Arkansas has again placed me higher in his respect and imagination and labeled me "Jeremiah the Second." However, what I am undertaking to say is rather in the voice of Job's children.

Mr. President, what I wish to have understood is simply this: In 1932, in the month of April, I did say that what is going on now would be going on. I am sorry that later I had to say, "I told you so." We are right where we were in 1932 under Mr. Hoover, only a bit worse off; and I will say to Senators who are disagreeing with me now, particularly my friend from Arkansas, that when year after year they are told that they are leading on a steady course of financial bankruptcy and unemployment and distress, when someone comes back in 1933 and shows them that it happened in 1932, and comes back in 1934 and shows them that it happened in 1933, and comes back in 1935 and shows that it happened in 1934, I hope some day they will turn and have a constitutional form of government again.

This cabinet government, these bandbox schemes that have been handed out here by the bureaucrats and appointees and nonelective officials of the President, have now gone to the point where one appointive officer can go down and turn back both Houses of Congress. We have reached the point of what I consider almost legislative oblivion. We have finally undertaken to abandon Congress. We have tried every remedy that the administrations have brought in, both Hoover and Roosevelt, and it has been just like practicing up on an automobile; the only thing left for them to do is to take off the wheels to see if it will not expedite the progress of recovery.

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOOD, DRUGS, AND COSMETICS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein; to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics; and for other purposes.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, after the exciting debate over other matters, it may seem very prosaic to go to a matter so simple as the protection of the public health. To my mind, however, it is more important to protect the public health than it is to protect the public pocketbook; but I suppose there may be difference of opinion about that.

Mr. President, if there are any Senators here who are interested in this bill, or if they have any questions to ask about it, I wish they would come over this way and help me to get through as fast as I can. I shall confine my remarks to such comments on the bill as will, I hope, help to dissipate doubts which may be in any senatorial mind.

It has been 28 years since the Wiley Law was passed. That is a monument to a great man. But in these 28 years there has developed, of course, knowledge of the weakness of many features of the law. The Department has been thwarted in its efforts to enforce what has come to be an incomplete law. I desire to call attention to one or two or three things before I speak about the bill itself.

The public has been economically exploited. I hold in my hand a section of a package supposed to be filled with cheese. If Senators will look at it, they will notice that there is one layer of cheese on the top of this box and pasteboard at the bottom. When the housewife bought what she thought was a full box of cheese she did not receive even half a box. There has been great difficulty in protecting the housewife against slack filling.

Here is a package of macaroni. There has been cut in it a window, and some cellophane inserted, in order that one who looks at it may discover the truth—that this box, supposed to be a full box of macaroni, is only two-thirds full. The housewife has been robbed of one-third of the money she paid for that box.

I present here a bottle filled with a tincture made from horse-tail weed. If there is any Senator suffering from diabetes, he will be cured by taking proper doses of horse-tail weed, according to the labeling on this bottle. Unfortunately, under the law as it is at present, the housewife is robbed when she buys the brand of cheese to which I have referred, or the brand of macaroni I have mentioned; and the poor suffering citizen who has diabetes, and by modern treatment could be cured, continues to suffer when he takes horse-tail weed. He takes it until the time comes when it is too late to get relief. By proper treatment given in the first place, he might have been restored to health.

I have here a bottle of a "medicine", originally made for horse linament. Now it is advertised to cure tuberculosis, pneumonia, laryngitis, bronchitis, pleurisy, influenza, la grippe, asthma, everything, indeed, from asthma to zymosis. Yet there are citizens in the United States who are opposed to such legislation as that before us, no doubt entirely honest in thinking there is no need for legislation. As a matter of fact, most of these articles of commerce which I have presented here are now on the market, and it has been impossible, under existing law, to protect society against such frauds, indeed, what is worse than fraud. The taking of these "remedies" for diseases which could not thus be cured or alleviated has resulted frequently in the diseases becoming incurable by reason of the delay of proper medical treatment. This is a practice which is of course inimical to health, yet it is impossible to prohibit their sale under the existing law.

I hope Senators are sufficiently interested to look at the card I hold in my hand; here are X-ray pictures of children, actual pictures of children. Found in the throat or lung of each one of these children is a metal object, in one case a fish, I am not sure whether this is a "kingfish" or not [laughter]; in another case a rooster, somewhat bedraggled, like the Republican rooster [laughter]. Here are pictures of other articles which have gotten into the throats or lungs of children through their eating candy in each piece of which was a metallic object of some sort. The poor little kid chewing the candy finds in it something hard, and swallows it, or breathes it in, and suffers in consequence. Many a child in the United States has died because of the sale of such candies, which, under the present law, cannot be prevented.

Mr. President, I cannot quite keep up with the styles, but I understand it is quite a fad among the ladies to be slender. Many fraudulent products upon the market, products which are really harmful in their effect, are used by women in their proper desire to be slim and beautiful, but at the expense of their health.

In the old law no provision was made for protecting the public against harmful cosmetics. It has been 28 years since that law was enacted, and when it was put on the statute books very few cosmetics were used. Now the industry engaged in manufacturing cosmetics has grown until the sale of cosmetics is perhaps one of the greatest industries in the United States.

I regard it as the solemn duty of every woman to be as beautiful as she can be, and I do not blame any woman for using cosmetics if they tend in the direction of making her more attractive. But I want all women, in whom I have an interest, to be guarded and protected against the use of things which may be damaging.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McADOO in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator said it was a "solemn duty" of the women. Does he not think he would better use another adjective? It seems to be the more solemn they are, the less cosmetics they use.

Mr. COPELAND. Did I speak of it as their solemn duty? I mean, of course, it is my solemn duty to help them to be as beautiful as they can be.

I hold in my hand an article which is used to remove hair from under the arms. Unfortunately this contains a substance which will remove the local hair, but it is also absorbed by the system and when it gets into the system it does more than remove the offensive hair; its absorption into the system results in the destruction of all the hair on the head as well, because it poisons the system and destroys the hair roots.

I hold in my hand a picture which portrays a beautiful girl, not only a beautiful girl, but one who was so popular in her community in Ohio, where she had been a social worker, that the citizens tendered her a complimentary dinner. In preparing for the dinner, after having a marcel, she used a preparation upon her eyelashes to make them black. I show Senators a second photograph, which shows what happened. In 3 weeks the girl was blind, permanently blind, because of the effect of this substance upon her eyes.

Mr. President, I shall not go on with the exhibition of the articles in this "chamber of horrors." There are many articles in reserve similar to those to which I have referred. I call attention to these particular things to show Senators that there are evils against which we must protect our people.

It is not an easy thing to write a food and drugs bill. I do not blame any industry involved, I do not blame those interested in producing articles of food or medicine, if they come here protesting against certain provisions of the bill. But there is no honest manufacturer in the United States who can say that he has not had a chance to explain his position and to explain away what he thought were things which we criticized.

A year ago last June there was handed to me a bill which had been prepared in the Department. I introduced the bill. To be honest with the Senate, I did not read it until October. I realized that I should know what was in the bill, because we would have to have some hearings on it. Then I read it and studied it thoroughly.

We had hearings where all of the manufacturers and other interested persons had opportunity to come and present their criticisms of what appeared in that particular bill. I joined them in criticism of many of the features of the measure. A hearing was held on December 7 and 8 of 1933, where these men had an opportunity to find fault with the bill. The bill was modified. Three different prints of the bill were made, and finally it was acted upon by the Commerce Committee and reported on the floor of the Senate, but so late in the session that nothing could be done with it.

Through the summer and fall I had almost daily conferences with the consumer groups, the interested industries, and the Department, seeking to see about further revisions or amendments if they were necessary. The bill was finally presented to the committee and we had another hearing. So already we have had two hearings this session. Then we thought we had reached the point where we might refer the matter to the committee for action.

I may say now that all this time I had the most helpful assistance of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], whose long experience as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture had given him familiarity with the problems involved in the Bureau of Food and Drugs. I had also the assistance of Senator CARAWAY who took a very intelligent and active interest in the bill.

Then having presented that bill this year to the committee, ready for report, the committee said, "No, we must have another hearing." So for one steady week, from March 2 to March 9, inclusive, we had further hearings, and out of those hearings came the bill which is now presented for your consideration.

Mr. President, I submit that no interested person can complain that he has not had a full opportunity to make known his wishes and to present any objection which he might have to this legislation.

Out of these various private and public hearings comes this bill, S. 5. It was presented to the Commerce Committee 2 weeks ago, given consideration by that committee, and several amendments were made then. Now we have it before us, and I hope tomorrow to take up these amendments one by one and try to justify them.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, is the Senator prepared now, or would it be convenient for him now to state the general provisions of the legislation and the purposes thereof?

Mr. COPELAND. I am happy to do that.

Senators will find on their desks a full report on the bill. It gives in detail, section by section, and subsection by subsection, everything which the bill undertakes to do.

What does it undertake to do? In the first place there is a new provision in the bill which is not in existing law; it has to do with the control of false advertising. There is no provision of law at present to regulate advertising of food products except so far as that regulation is in the hands of the Federal Trade Commission.

For 22 years the Federal Trade Commission has had the power to do something about advertising of food and drug products, but they have little power. A matter is brought before them, hearings are held, injunction suits are brought, and so it goes year after year. I know one case brought by a friend of mine which has been kept in court for 5 years, and finally at the end of that time a "cease and desist" order was entered.

I regard the Federal Trade Commission as performing a very useful function having to do with economic needs, unfair trade practices, all those things which have to do with the business interests of these various industries. But what is dealt with in the pending measure is a matter which has to do with the health of the people. No one disputes that the Food and Drug Administration should determine the quality of the product; no one disputes that it should determine what is on the label. Who can raise any question that advertising is really an extension of the label? In the last analysis the Food and Drug Administration would have to pass upon those matters because there is no machinery in the Federal Trade Commission to deal with them.

For this and other reasons, then, we have provided as a new provision of the food and drug bill the control of false advertising.

Is there any question to be raised on that particular feature?

Mr. AUSTIN. I wonder if this would be a good time to ask the Senator from New York whether it is true that the distinction between the kind of work done by the Federal Trade Commission and that intended to be done by the Food and Drug Administration in the proposed legislation is that in the one case—that is, in the case of the Federal Trade Commission—the principal objective is the regulation of competition in interstate and foreign commerce, and therefore concentrates upon the interests of commerce, whereas the objective of the Food and Drug Administration is the consumer, the public, rather than the interest of commerce? Is that the distinction?

Mr. COPELAND. That is exactly the distinction.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator has stated it far better than I could think of doing it. The Federal Trade Commission has to do with the business, with the industry, with its competition with others; to guarantee fair-trade practices. But the proposed legislation has to do with the protection of the individual citizen, to guard him against the taking of food or drugs which are damaging and which may impair his health, or even endanger his life.

Mr. President, I do not want to hold the Senate longer. I will say a few words more and then, as far as I am concerned, I am through for the day. I revert to the matter of advertising.

In the original bill, the bill which was introduced in June of 1933, arbitrary power was given to the Secretary of Agriculture. Since that time there have been various modifications, until now we have worked out, I think, a good provision, particularly as to advertising. I may say for the advertising features of the bill that the advertising association, the group of men who are in advertising professionally, are heartily in favor of the bill. Two national organizations of publishers, representing about 90 percent of the newspaper and magazine industry, have given their endorsement to this bill. The National Editorial Association has for 50 years been the spokesman for the small daily and weekly newspapers of this country. It is an organization having an affiliated membership of 10,000 newspapers, the so-called "country press"—dailies and weeklies familiar to those who have lived in the small towns.

The bill furthermore has the approval of the National Publishers' Association, representing the magazine group. The membership has publicly endorsed this measure. The periodicals in this organization have a per issue circulation in excess of 50,000,000. They have periodicals of Nation-wide circulation, as well as business, fraternal, religious, and farm papers belonging to their association.

The only newspaper groups asking for transfer of the advertising section enforcement to the Federal Trade Commission is the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, which, according to the testimony before the Senate Commerce Committee, represents 400 daily newspapers. I have been informed that their membership is largely in the big cities. Undoubtedly they have many small city dailies on their rolls.

It seems to me, in view of this situation, that it would be unfair to say that the publishing industry wants the control over advertising transferred to the Federal Trade Commission. Briefly, a vast majority of newspapers and magazines are willing to have the control of advertising in the Department.

I may say about advertising, and that applies not alone to advertising in print, but also to radio advertising, that responsibility is placed upon the manufacturer who supplies the copy or the material. That is where the responsibility ought to lie. The man who disseminates the advertising only puts out what is given him by the manufacturer. So far as the magazine and the newspaper and the radio, the disseminators of the advertising, are concerned, they are guarded by placing the responsibility where it belongs. So long as they have on file statements from the manufacturers they have nothing to fear from the bill.

The fact is that all through this bill runs the thought that the honest manufacturer, the honest producer, the honest advertiser, the men and women who are engaged in industries covered by this bill, have nothing to fear so long as they tell the truth about their products. The purpose of the bill is to guarantee truthfulness in advertising, and to make certain that the products which are sold under such advertising and under the bill itself may be products which are safe for human consumption.

Mr. President, unless some Senator has a question to ask, I will not continue further.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to ask a question. In the Northwestern section we pack for consumption in other portions of the country various products, the chief product being fish, and we also pack fresh fruit and can them in various ways and send them to other sections of the country. During the past 15 years, representing a large number of small packers, I have had numerous personal experiences with the Food and Drug Administration. They would make an examination of fish, for example, in a warehouse in the city of Seattle. On numerous occasions I personally have attempted to get the Food and Drug Administration to give us a decision there in the State of Washington as to whether or not they believed that the products which we proposed to ship conformed to the Food and Drug Act, but it has been impossible to get a decision at the point of packing or at the point of shipping. For example, 2 years ago a client of mine had a large shipment of fish which he had sold in the city of New York. Three sets of samples were taken from that pack of fish, examination was made of the samples, and I attempted over a period of time to have the Department say whether or not they believed that shipment complied with the Pure Food and Drug Act. We have there two separate, independent agencies that make examinations for the same purposes; both those agencies indicated that they believed the shipment referred to complied with the act, and yet it was impossible to secure any decision at the point of shipment as to the opinion of the Department.

We were told then, as I have been repeatedly told over a period of 15 years, that my client could ship his goods to New York or St. Louis or Georgia or some other part of the United States and then, when the goods reached the point where they were sold, the Department would determine whether or not it wanted to seize the shipment; and if it seized the shipment there, the people living in the State of Washington would be compelled to go to New York or St. Louis or Georgia or some other section of the United States and start an action for the repossession of their goods.

Is there any provision in this proposed act which will place upon the Department the necessity of making its examination at the point of packing if it is within the United States or at the point of shipment from a place in the United States and not so unreasonably place upon those who ship the goods the necessity of going to the point of ultimate sale before they may know whether or not the Department considers that they have complied with the law?

Mr. COPELAND. Let me say in reply to the Senator from Washington that last year the then Senator from Mississippi, Mr. Stephens, who had identical conditions to deal with in his State, secured the adoption of an amendment to the Food and Drug Act providing for exactly what the Senator has in mind—the local inspection to determine at the scene of operations whether or not the product was a proper one to use and to ship. That bill, a copy of which I will hand to the Senator, provides:

> SEC. 10A. The Secretary of Agriculture, upon application of any packer of any sea food sold in interstate commerce, may at his discretion designate supervisory inspectors to examine and inspect all premises, equipment, methods, materials, containers, and labels used by such applicants in the production of such food. If the food is found to conform to the requirements of this act, the applicant shall be authorized, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, to mark the food so as to indicate such conformity.

Then the goods may be sent in interstate commerce without embarrassment.

I think probably the Senator will find that there is now such a provision of law. In order to protect the very interests he has in mind—and it is a proper protection to accord them—the Senator will find on page 56, the last page of the bill, beginning at line 2, the following proviso:

> And provided further, That amendment to the Food and Drugs Act, section 10 A, approved June 22, 1934, shall remain in force and effect and be applicable to the provisions of this act.

So the situation to which the Senator from Washington refers is fully protected.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I thank the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, there are, of course, some controversial features in this bill which I have not attempted to go into today. I have no doubt in the debate they will be discussed, but, with a considerable background of experience in the matter of protecting the public in this field, I am here to say that I am satisfied we have here a proposed statute which will make for the safety of the citizens, protect them against harmful drugs, foods, and cosmetics, and protect the honest manufacturer by helping him to make his unworthy competitors conform to decent standards. Furthermore, it will not interfere with the honest expressions of opinion in publications, will not interfere with harmless trade "puffing", and will, at the same time, give ample protection so far as can be done by the enactment of law, to persons who are now suffering because of harmful practices, but who can be protected in view of the advanced knowledge gained during the last quarter of a century. In my judgment the bill will serve to give a degree of safety to the citizens, to the women, the babies, the children, the housewives of the Nation, and go far toward overcoming the evils which have been perpetuated and from which our citizens have suffered baneful effects.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator is familiar with antiseptics?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; I am.

Mr. LONG. What would this bill, if enacted, do to antiseptics?

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] were here, we could have that question threshed out now. There is no other part of the bill which has been so much discussed and so carefully studied as has that one. The Senator from Missouri and I have been in conferences, and we think we have found language which will satisfy those who are interested, and, at the same time, afford the public full protection. We will discuss that, if the Senator does not mind, when the Senator from Missouri shall be present.

If there is no other question desired to be asked, I will yield the floor to the leader of the majority.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4442) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. ARNOLD, Mr. LUDLOW, Mr. BOYLAN, Mr. GRANFIELD, Mr. O'NEAL, Mr. TABER, and Mr. MCLEOD were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. COPELAND. It being understood that the bill which has been under consideration will be under consideration tomorrow?

Mr. ROBINSON. It is under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGILL in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BURKE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Joseph T. Votava, of Nebraska, to be United States attorney, district of Nebraska, vice Charles E. Sandall, term expired.

He also (for Mr. DIETERICH), from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Howard L. Doyle, of Illinois, to be United States attorney, southern district of Illinois, to succeed Frank K. Lemon, term expired.

Mr. MCKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be received and placed on the Executive Calendar. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first business in order on the calendar.

INTER-AMERICAN ARBITRATION TREATY

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the treaty, Executive F (73d Cong., 2d sess.), a general treaty of inter-American arbitration, signed at Washington on January 5, 1929, which was read the second time, as follows:

THE INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES ON CONCILIATION AND ARBITRATION, WASHINGTON, DECEMBER 10, 1928–JANUARY 5, 1929

GENERAL TREATY OF INTER-AMERICAN ARBITRATION

The Governments of Venezuela, Chile, Bolivia, Uruguay, Costa Rica, Perú, Honduras, Guatemala, Haiti, Ecuador, Colombia, Brazil, Panamá, Paraguay, Nicaragua, Mexico, El Salvador, the Dominican Republic, Cuba, and the United States of America, represented at the Conference on Conciliation and Arbitration, assembled at Washington, pursuant to the Resolution adopted on February 18, 1928, by the Sixth International Conference of American States held in the city of Habana;

In accordance with the solemn declarations made at said Conference to the effect that the American Republics condemn war as an instrument of national policy and adopt obligatory arbitration as the means for the settlement of their international differences of a juridical character;

Being convinced that the Republics of the New World, governed by the principles, institutions, and practices of democracy and bound, furthermore, by mutual interests, which are increasing each day, have not only the necessity but also the duty of avoiding the disturbance of continental harmony whenever differences which are susceptible of judicial decision arise among them;

Conscious of the great moral and material benefits which peace offers to humanity and that the sentiment and opinion of America demand, without delay, the organization of an arbitral system which shall strengthen the permanent reign of justice and law;

And animated by the purpose of giving conventional form to these postulates and aspirations with the minimum exceptions which they have considered indispensable to safeguard the independence and sovereignty of the States and in the most ample manner possible under present international conditions, have resolved to effect the present treaty, and for that purpose have designated the Plenipotentiaries hereinafter named:

Who, after having deposited their full powers, found in good and due form by the Conference, have agreed upon the following:

ARTICLE 1

The High Contracting Parties bind themselves to submit to arbitration all differences of an international character which have arisen or may arise between them by virtue of a claim of right made by one against the other under treaty or otherwise, which it has not been possible to adjust by diplomacy and which are juridical in their nature by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law.

There shall be considered as included among the questions of juridical character:

(a) The interpretation of a treaty;

(b) Any question of international law;

(c) The existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;

(d) The nature and extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.

The provisions of this treaty shall not preclude any of the Parties before resorting to arbitration, from having recourse to procedures of investigation and conciliation established in conventions then in force between them.

ARTICLE 2

There are excepted from the stipulations of this treaty the following controversies:

(a) Those which are within the domestic jurisdiction of any of the Parties to the dispute and are not controlled by international law; and

(b) Those which affect the interest or refer to the action of a State not a Party to this treaty.

ARTICLE 3

The arbitrator or tribunal who shall decide the controversy shall be designated by agreement of the Parties.

In the absence of an agreement the following procedure shall be adopted:

Each Party shall nominate two arbitrators, of whom only one may be a national of said Party or selected from the persons whom said Party has designated as members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague. The other member may be of any other American nationality. These arbitrators shall in turn select a fifth arbitrator who shall be the president of the court.

Should the arbitrators be unable to reach an agreement among themselves for the selection of a fifth American arbitrator, or in lieu thereof, of another who is not, each Party shall designate a non-American member of the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague, and the two persons so designated shall select the fifth arbitrator, who may be of any nationality other than that of a Party to the dispute.

ARTICLE 4

The Parties to the dispute shall formulate by common accord, in each case, a special agreement which shall clearly define the particular subject-matter of the controversy, the seat of the court, the rules which will be observed in the proceedings, and the other conditions to which the Parties may agree.

If an accord has not been reached with regard to the agreement within three months reckoned from the date of the installation of the court, the agreement shall be formulated by the court.

ARTICLE 5

In case of death, resignation or incapacity of one or more of the arbitrators the vacancy shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

ARTICLE 6

When there are more than two States directly interested in the same controversy, and the interests of two or more of them are similar, the State or States who are on the same side of the question may increase the number of arbitrators on the court, provided that in all cases the Parties on each side of the controversy shall appoint an equal number of arbitrators. There shall also be a presiding arbitrator selected in the same manner as that provided in the last paragraph of Article 3, the Parties on each side of the controversy being regarded as a single Party for the purpose of making the designation therein described.

ARTICLE 7

The award, duly pronounced and notified to the Parties, settles the dispute definitely and without appeal.

Differences which arise with regard to its interpretation or execution shall be submitted to the decision of the court which rendered the award.

ARTICLE 8

The reservations made by one of the High Contracting Parties shall have the effect that the other Contracting Parties are not bound with respect to the Party making the reservations except to the same extent as that expressed therein.

ARTICLE 9

The present treaty shall be ratified by the High Contracting Parties in conformity with their respective constitutional procedures.

The original treaty and the instruments of ratification shall be deposited in the Department of State of the United States of America which shall give notice of the ratifications through diplomatic channels to the other signatory Governments and the treaty shall enter into effect for the High Contracting Parties in the order that they deposit their ratifications.

This treaty shall remain in force indefinitely, but it may be denounced by means of 1 year's previous notice at the expiration of which it shall cease to be in force as regards the Party denouncing the same, but shall remain in force as regards the other signatories. Notice of the denunciation shall be addressed to the Department of State of the United States of America which will transmit it for appropriate action to the other signatory governments.

Any American State not a signatory of this treaty may adhere to the same by transmitting the official instrument setting forth such adherence to the Department of State of the United States of America which will notify the other High Contracting Parties thereof in the manner heretofore mentioned.

In witness whereof the above-mentioned plenipotentiaries have signed this treaty in English, Spanish, Portuguese, and French and hereunto affix their respective seals.

Done at the city of Washington, on this 5th day of January, 1929.

The Delegation of Venezuela signs the present Treaty of Arbitration with the following reservations:

First. There shall be excepted from this Treaty those matters which, according to the Constitution or the laws of Venezuela, are under the jurisdiction of its courts; and, especially, those matters relating to percuniary claims of foreigners. In such matters, arbitration shall not be resorted to except when, legal remedies having been exhausted by the claimant, it shall appear that there has been a denial of justice.

Second. There shall also be excepted those matters controlled by international agreements now in force.

The Delegation of Bolivia, in accordance with the doctrine and policy invariably maintained by Bolivia in the field of international jurisprudence, gives full adherence to and signs the General Treaty of Inter-American Arbitration which the Republics of America are to sanction, formulating the following express reservations:

First. There may be excepted from the provisions of the present agreement questions arising from acts occurring or conventions concluded before the said treaty goes into effect, as well as those which, in conformity with international law, are under the exclusive jurisdiction of the state.

Second. It is also understood that, for the submission to arbitration of a territorial controversy or dispute, the zone to which the said arbitration is to apply must be previously determined in the arbitral agreement.

Reservations of Costa Rica:

(a) The obligations contracted under this treaty do not annul, abrogate, or restrict the arbitration conventions which are now in force between Costa Rica and another or others of the high contracting parties and do not involve arbitration, disavowal, or renewed discussion of questions which may have already been settled by arbitral awards.

(b) The obligations contracted under this treaty do not involve the arbitration of judgments handed down by the courts of Costa Rica in civil cases which may be submitted to them with regard to which the interested parties have recognized the jurisdiction of said courts.

1. After the words of paragraph 1 of Article 1 reading: "under treaty or otherwise", the following words are to be added: "subsequent to the present convention". The article continues without any other modification.

2. Paragraph (a) of Article 2 is accepted by the Delegation without the final words which read: "and are not controlled by international law", which should be considered as eliminated.

3. This treaty does not include controversies or differences with regard to points or questions which, according to the Political Constitution of El Salvador, must not be submitted to arbitration, and

4. Pecuniary claims against the nation shall be decided by its judges and courts, since they have jurisdiction thereof, and recourse shall be had to international arbitration only in the cases provided in the Constitution and laws of El Salvador, that is in cases of denial of justice or unusual delay in the administration thereof.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this is a treaty of inter-American arbitration. It was recommended at Habana in February 1928; it was prepared in December 1928; it was signed at Washington on January 5, 1929. It provides for the selection of arbitrators in the event of disputes between American governments. It does not preclude, however, the submission of any question or dispute to other arbitral boards or to investigation and conciliation.

In 1932 this treaty was ratified by the Senate of the United States with two reservations. The first reservation reads as follows:

With the understanding, to be made a part of such ratification, that the special agreement in each case shall be made only by the President, and then only by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, notwithstanding any provisions of the treaty to the contrary.

The second reservation was as follows:

Also, with the understanding, to be made a part of such ratification, that the provisions of this treaty shall not be applicable to pending international questions or controversies or to those which may arise in the future relative to acts prior to the date on which said treaty goes into effect, or to controversies arising under treaties negotiated prior to the date on which said treaty goes into effect.

The second reservation was construed by the State Department substantially to nullify the arbitration treaty. It so limited its scope that the treaty would add nothing to the existing treaties with regard to investigation or conciliation, and therefore ratifications were not exchanged. The treaty was sent back to the Senate and referred to the Foreign Relations Committee. The committee heard representatives of the State Department with regard to the matter and came to the conclusion that the second reservation was entirely unnecessary by reason of the terms of the treaty itself and by reason of the fact that it must be ratified by two-thirds of the United States Senate.

It will be observed that in the body of the treaty itself it is provided:

There are excepted from the stipulations of this treaty the following controversies:

(a) Those which are within the domestic jurisdiction of any of the parties to the dispute and are not controlled by international law; and

(b) Those which affect the interest or refer to the action of a state not a party to this treaty.

There is in addition to that in the body of the treaty the following article:

ARTICLE 4

The parties to the dispute shall formulate by common accord in each case a special agreement which shall clearly define the particular subject matter of the controversy, the seat of the court, the rules which will be observed in the proceedings, and the other conditions to which the parties may agree.

If an accord has not been reached with regard to the agreement within 3 months reckoned from the date of the installation of the court, the agreement shall be formulated by the court.

In view of these exceptions and limitations in the treaty itself, the Foreign Relations Committee unanimously considered the second reservation entirely unnecessary. We did, however, strengthen the first reservation by adding the following:

With the understanding, to be made a part of such ratification, that the special agreement in each case shall be made only by the President, and then only by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur.

That last proviso is an addition to the reservation which we adopted in 1932.

The committee was unanimous in its report. The treaty of arbitration between the Americas expressly provides that the parties shall select their own tribunal or court; that there shall be a special agreement governing it all; that if they cannot agree on a special court, then each of the parties to the controversy shall select two representatives from their own country who shall select a fifth, who shall not be a national of either of the countries involved in the dispute; that in the event those four are unable to agree on the fifth, then they shall select from their representatives at The Hague a representative each, and such representatives shall select a fifth.

It is a very flexible treaty. It has been approved by nearly all the South American countries. It has been discussed for several years and is considered a very valuable addition to our arbitration treaties.

In view of the fact that it was ratified heretofore, in view of the fact that the committee has unanimously reported it favorably after investigating the whole subject, coming up to date on the correspondence and on the statistics, I feel that at this time the Senate should advise and consent to the treaty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification, with the reservation reported by the committee, will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive F, Seventy-third Congress, second session, a general treaty of inter-American arbitration, signed at Washington on January 5, 1929, with the understanding, to be made a part of such ratification, that the special agreement in each case shall be made only by the President, and then only by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the reservation to the resolution of ratification.

The reservation was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification as amended by the reservation. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification, as amended by the reservation, is agreed to, and the treaty is ratified.

TREATY RELATING TO BILLS OF LADING FOR CARRIAGE OF GOODS BY SEA

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive E (69th Cong., 2d sess.), relating to bills of lading for the carriage of goods by sea and the protocol of signature thereto, which was signed on behalf of the United States by the American Ambassador at Brussels on June 23, 1925, which was read the second time, as follows:

INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION FOR THE UNIFICATION OF CERTAIN RULES RELATING TO BILLS OF LADING

The President of the German Republic, the President of the Argentine Republic, His Majesty the King of the Belgians, the President of the Republic of Chile, the President of the Republic of Cuba, His Majesty the King of Denmark, His Majesty the King of Spain, the Chief of the Estonian State, the President of the United States of America, the President of the Republic of Finland, the President of the French Republic, His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Possessions beyond the seas, Emperor of India, the Regent of the Kingdom of Hungary, His Majesty the King of Italy, His Majesty the Emperor of Japan, the President of the Republic of Latvia, the President of the Republic of Mexico, His Majesty the King of Norway, Her Majesty the Queen of the Netherlands, the President of the Republic of Peru, the President of the Republic of Poland, the President of the Portuguese Republic, His Majesty the King of Rumania, His Majesty the King of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes, His Majesty the King of Sweden and the President of the Republic of Uruguay.

Having recognized the utility of laying down in common accord certain uniform rules relating to bills of lading have decided to conclude a Convention to that effect and have designated as their Plenipotentiaries, namely:

The President of the German Republic:
His Excellency Mr. von Keller, Minister of Germany at Brussels.
The President of the Argentine Republic:
His Majesty the King of the Belgians:
Mr. L. Franck, Minister of Colonies, President of the International Maritime Committee;

His Excellency the Marquis of Villalobar and Guimarey, Ambassador of Spain at Brussels.
Chief of the Estonian State:
His Excellency Mr. Pusta, Minister of Estonia at Brussels.
The President of the United States of America:
His Excellency Mr. William Phillips, Ambassador of the United States at Brussels.
The President of the Republic of Finland:
The President of the French Republic:
His Excellency Mr. M. Harbette, Ambassador of France at Brussels.
His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Possessions beyond the seas, Emperor of India:
His Excellency the Right Honorable Sir George Grahame, G. C. V. O., K. C. M. G., Ambassador of His Britannic Majesty at Brussels.
The Regent of the Kingdom of Hungary:
Count Olivier Woraczicky, Baron of Pabienitz Chargé d'Affaires of Hungary at Brussels.
His Majesty the King of Italy:
Mr. J. Daneo, Charge d'Affaires ad interim of Italy at Brussels
His Majesty the Emperor of Japan:
His Excellency Mr. M. Adatci, Ambassador of Japan at Brussels.
The President of the Republic of Latvia:
The President of the Republic of Mexico:
His Majesty the King of Norway:
Her Majesty the Queen of the Netherlands:
The President of the Republic of Peru:
The President of the Republic of Poland:
His Excellency Count Jean Szembek, Minister of Poland at Brussels.
The President of the Portuguese Republic:
His Majesty the King of Rumania:
His Excellency Mr. Henry Catargi, Minister of Rumania at Brussels.
His Majesty the King of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes:
Messrs. Straznicky and Verona
His Majesty the King of Sweden:
The President of the Republic of Uruguay:
Who, duly authorized therefor have agreed on the following:

ARTICLE 1

In this convention the following words are employed with the meaning set out below:

(a) "Carrier" includes the owner of the vessel or the charterer who enters into a contract of carriage with a shipper.

(b) "Contract of carriage" applies only to contracts of carriage covered by a bill of lading or any similar document of title, in so far as such document relates to the carriage of goods by sea; it also applies to any bill of lading or any similar document as aforesaid issued under or pursuant to a charter party from the moment at which such instrument regulates the relations between a carrier and a holder of the same.

(c) "Goods" includes goods, wares, merchandise, and articles of every kind whatsoever except live animals and cargo which by the contract of carriage is stated as being carried on deck and is so carried.

(d) "Ship" means any vessel used for the carriage of goods by sea.

(e) "Carriage of goods" covers the period from the time when the goods are loaded on to the time they are discharged from the ship.

ARTICLE 2

Subject to the provisions of Article 6 under every contract of carriage of goods by sea the carrier, in relation to the loading, handling, stowage, carriage, custody, care, and discharge of such goods shall be subject to the responsibilities and liabilities, and entitled to the rights and immunities hereinafter set forth.

ARTICLE 3

1. The carrier shall be bound before and at the beginning of the voyage to exercise due diligence to—

(a) Make the ship seaworthy:

(b) Properly man, equip, and supply the ship:

(c) Make the holds, refrigerating and cool chambers, and all other parts of the ship in which goods are carried, fit and safe for their reception, carriage, and preservation.

2. Subject to the provisions of Article 4 the carrier shall properly and carefully load, handle, stow, carry, keep, care for, and discharge the goods carried.

3. After receiving the goods into his charge the carrier or the master or agent of the carrier shall, on demand of the shipper, issue to the shipper a bill of lading showing among other things:

(a) The leading marks necessary for identification of the goods as the same are furnished in writing by the shipper before the loading of such goods starts, provided such marks are stamped or otherwise shown clearly upon the goods if uncovered, or on the cases or coverings in which such goods are contained, in such a manner as should ordinarily remain legible until the end of the voyage;

(b) Either the number of packages or pieces, or the quantity, or weight, as the case may be, as furnished in writing by the shipper;

(c) The apparent order and condition of the goods;

Provided that no carrier, master, or agent of the carrier shall be bound to state or show in the bill of lading any marks, number, quantity, or weight which he has reasonable grounds for suspecting not accurately to represent the goods actually received or which he has had no reasonable means of checking.

4. Such a bill of lading shall be prima facie evidence of the receipt by the carrier of the goods as therein described in accordance with paragraph 3 (a), (b), and (c).

5. The shipper shall be deemed to have guaranteed to the carrier the accuracy at the time of shipment of the marks, number, quantity, and weight, as furnished by him, and the shipper shall indemnify the carrier against all loss, damages, and expenses arising or resulting from inaccuracies in such particulars. The right of the carrier to such indemnity shall in no way limit his responsibility and liability under the contract of carriage to any person other than the shipper.

6. Unless notice of loss or damage and the general nature of such loss or damage be given in writing to the carrier or his agent at the port of discharge before or at the time of the removal of the goods into the custody of the person entitled to delivery thereof under the contract of carriage, such removal shall be prima facie evidence of the delivery by the carrier of the goods as described in the bill of lading.

If the loss or damage is not apparent, the notice must be given within three days of the delivery.

The notice in writing need not be given if the state of the goods has at the time of their receipt been the subject of joint survey or inspection.

In any event the carrier and the ship shall be discharged from all liability in respect of loss or damage unless suit is brought within 1 year after delivery of the goods or the date when the goods should have been delivered.

In the case of any actual or apprehended loss or damage the carrier and the receiver shall give all reasonable facilities to each other for inspecting and tallying the goods.

7. After the goods are loaded the bill of lading to be issued by the carrier, master, or agent of the carrier to the shipper shall, if the shipper so demands, be a "shipped" bill of lading, provided that if the shipper shall have previously taken up any document of title to such goods, he shall surrender the same as against the issue of the "shipped" bill of lading. At the option of the carrier such document of title may be noted at the port of shipment by the carrier, master, or agent with the name or names of the ship or ships upon which the goods have been shipped and the date or dates of shipment, and when so noted, if it shows the particulars mentioned in paragraph 3 of article 3, it shall for the purpose of this article be deemed to constitute a "shipped" bill of lading.

8. Any clause, covenant, or agreement in a contract of carriage relieving the carrier or the ship from liability for loss or damage to or in connection with goods arising from negligence, fault, or failure in the duties and obligations provided in this article, or lessening such liability otherwise than as provided in this convention, shall be null and void and of no effect. A benefit of insurance in favor of the carrier or similar clause shall be deemed to be a clause relieving the carrier from liability.

ARTICLE 4

1. Neither the carrier nor the ship shall be liable for loss or damage arising or resulting from unseaworthiness unless caused by want of due diligence on the part of the carrier to make the ship seaworthy and to secure that the ship is properly manned, equipped, and supplied and to make the holds, refrigerating and cool chambers, and all other parts of the ship in which goods are carried fit and safe for their reception, carriage, and preservation in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1 of article 3. Whenever loss or damage has resulted from unseaworthiness, the burden of proving the exercise of due diligence shall be on the carrier or other person claiming exemption under this article.

2. Neither the carrier nor the ship shall be responsible for loss or damage arising or resulting from:

(a) Act, neglect, or default of the master, mariner, pilot, or the servants of the carrier in the navigation or in the management of the ship.

(b) Fire, unless caused by the actual fault or privity of the carrier.

(c) Perils, dangers, and accidents of the sea or other navigable waters.

(d) Act of God.

(e) Act of war.

(f) Act of public enemies.

(g) Arrest of restraint of prices, rules, or people or seizure under legal process.

(h) Quarantine restrictions.

(i) Act or omission of the shipper or owner of the goods, his agent, or representative.

(j) Strikes or lockouts or stoppage or restraint of labor from whatever cause, whether partial or general.

(k) Riots and civil commotions.

(l) Saving or attempting to save life or property at sea.

(m) Wastage in bulk or weight or any other loss or damage arising, from inherent defect, quality, or vice of the goods.

(n) Insufficiency of packing.

(o) Insufficiency or inadequacy of marks.

(p) Latent defects not discoverable by due diligence.

(q) Any other cause arising without the actual fault or privity of the carrier, or without the fault or neglect of the agents or servants of the carrier, but the burden of proof shall be on the person claiming the benefit of this exception to show that neither the actual fault or privity of the carrier nor the fault or neglect of the agents or servants of the carrier contributed to the loss or damage.

3. The shipper shall not be responsible for loss or damage sustained by the carrier or the ship arising or resulting from any cause without the act, fault, or neglect of the shipper, his agents, or his servants.

4. Any deviation in saving or attempting to save life or property at sea or any reasonable deviation shall not be deemed to be an infringement or breach of this convention or of the contract of carriage, and the carrier shall not be liable for any loss or damage resulting therefrom.

5. Neither the carrier nor the ship shall in any event be or become liable for any loss or damage to or in connection with goods in an amount exceeding 100 pounds sterling per package or unit or the equivalent of that sum in other currency unless the nature and value of such goods have been declared by the shipper before shipment and inserted in the bill of lading.

This declaration, if embodied in the bill of lading, shall be prima facie evidence but shall not be binding or conclusive on the carrier.

By agreement between the carrier, master, or agent of the carrier and the shipper another maximum amount than that mentioned in this paragraph may be fixed, provided that such maximum shall not be less than the figure above named.

Neither the carrier nor the ship shall be responsible in any event for loss or damage to, or in connection with, goods if the nature or value thereof has been knowingly misstated by the shipper in the bill of lading.

6. Goods of an inflammable, explosive, or dangerous nature to the shipment whereof the carrier, master, or agent of the carrier has not consented with knowledge of their nature and character may at any time before discharge be landed at any place or destroyed or rendered innocuous by the carrier without compensation, and the shipper of such goods shall be liable for all damages and expenses directly or indirectly arising out of or resulting from such shipment. If any such goods shipped with such knowledge and consent shall become a danger to the ship or cargo, they may in like manner be landed at any place or destroyed or rendered innocuous by the carrier without liability on the part of the carrier except to general average, if any.

ARTICLE 5

A carrier shall be at liberty to surrender in whole or in part all or any of his rights and immunities, or to increase any of his responsibilities and liabilities under this convention provided such surrender or increase shall be embodied in the bill of lading issued to the shipper.

The provisions of this convention shall not be applicable to charter parties, but if bills of lading are issued in the case of a ship under a charter-party they shall comply with the terms of this convention. Nothing in these rules shall be held to prevent the insertion in a bill of lading of any lawful provision regarding general average.

ARTICLE 6

Notwithstanding the provisions of the preceding articles, a carrier, master, or agent of the carrier and a shipper shall in regard to any particular goods be at liberty to enter into any agreement in any terms as to the responsibility and liability of the carrier for such goods, and as to the rights and immunities of the carrier in respect of such goods, or concerning his obligation as to seaworthiness so far as this stipulation is not contrary to public policy, or concerning the care or diligence of his servants or agents in regard to the loading, handling, stowage, carriage, custody, care, and discharge of the goods carried by sea, provided that in this case no bill of lading has been or shall be issued and that the terms agreed shall be embodied in a receipt which shall be a nonnegotiable document and shall be marked as such.

Any agreement so entered into shall have full legal effect:

Provided that this article shall not apply to ordinary commercial shipments made in the ordinary course of trade, but only to other shipments where the character or condition of the property to be carried or the circumstances, terms, and conditions under which the carriage is to be performed are such as reasonably to justify a special agreement.

ARTICLE 7

Nothing herein contained shall prevent a carrier or a shipper from entering into any agreement, stipulation, condition, reservation, or exemption as to the responsibility and liability of the carrier or the ship for the loss or damage to, or in connection with, the custody and care and handling of goods prior to the loading on, and subsequent to the discharge from, the ship on which the goods are carried by sea.

ARTICLE 8

The provisions of this convention shall not affect the rights and obligations of the carrier under any statute for the time being in force relating to the limitation of the liability of owners of seagoing vessels.

ARTICLE 9

The monetary units mentioned in this convention are to be taken to be gold value.

Those contracting states in which the pound sterling is not a monetary unit reserve to themselves the right of translating the sums indicated in this convention in terms of pound sterling into terms of their own monetary system in round figures.

The national laws may reserve to the debtor the right of discharging his debt in national currency according to the rate of exchange prevailing on the day of the arrival of the ship at the port of discharge of the goods concerned.

ARTICLE 10

The provisions of this convention shall apply to all bills of lading issued in any of the contracting States.

ARTICLE 11

After an interval of not more than two years from the day on which the convention is signed, the Belgian Government shall place itself in communication with the governments of the high contracting parties which have declared themselves prepared to ratify the convention, with a view to deciding whether it shall be put into force. The ratifications shall be deposited at Brussels at a date to be fixed by agreement among the said governments. The first deposit of ratifications shall be recorded in a procès-verbal signed by the representatives of the powers which take part therein and by the Belgian Minister for Foreign Affairs.

The subsequent deposits of ratifications shall be made by means of a written notification, addressed to the Belgian Government and accompanied by the instrument of ratification.

A duly certified copy of the procès-verbal relating to the first deposit of ratifications, of the notifications referred to in the previous paragraph, and also of the instruments of ratification accompanying them, shall be immediately sent by the Belgian Government through the diplomatic channel to the powers who have signed this convention or who have acceded to it. In the cases contemplated in the preceding paragraph the said Government shall inform them at the same time of the date on which it received the notification.

ARTICLE 12

Nonsignatory States may accede to the present convention whether or not they have been represented at the International Conference at Brussels.

A State which desires to accede shall notify its intention in writing to the Belgian Government, forwarding to it the document of accession, which shall be deposited in the archives of the said Government.

The Belgian Government shall immediately forward to all the States which have signed or acceded to the convention a duly certified copy of the notification and of the act of accession, mentioning the date on which it received the notification.

ARTICLE 13

The high contracting parties may at the time of signature, ratification, or accession declare that their acceptance of the present convention does not include any or all of the self-governing dominions, or of the colonies, overseas possessions, protectorates, or territories under their sovereignty or authority, and they may subsequently accede separately on behalf of any self-governing dominion, colony, overseas possession, protectorate, or territory excluded in their declaration. They may also denounce the convention separately in accordance with its provisions in respect of any self-governing dominion, or any colony, overseas possession, protectorate, or territory under their sovereignty or authority.

ARTICLE 14

The present convention shall take effect, in the case of the States which have taken part in the first deposit of ratifications, one year after the date of the procès-verbal recording such deposit. As respects the States which ratify subsequently or which accede, and also in cases in which the convention is subsequently put into effect in accordance with Article 13, it shall take effect six months after the notifications specified in paragraph 2 of article 11, and paragraph 2 of Article 12, have been received by the Belgian Government.

ARTICLE 15

In the event of one of the contracting States wishing to denounce the present convention, the denunciation shall be notified in writing to the Belgian Government, which shall immediately communicate a duly certified copy of the notification to all the other States informing them of the date on which it was received.

The denunciation shall only operate in respect of the State which made the notification, and on the expiry of one year after the notification has reached the Belgian Government.

ARTICLE 16

Any one of the contracting States shall have the right to call for a fresh conference with a view to considering possible amendments.

A State which would exercise this right should notify its intention to the other States through the Belgian Government, which would make arrangements for convening the conference.

PROTOCOL OF SIGNATURE

The high contracting parties may give effect to this convention either by giving it the force of law or by including in their national legislation in a form appropriate to that legislation, the rules adopted under this convention.

They may reserve the right:

1. To prescribe that in the cases referred to in paragraph 2 (c) to (p) of Article 4, the holder of a bill of lading shall be entitled to establish responsibility for loss or damage arising from the personal fault of the carrier or the fault of his servants which are not covered by paragraph (a).

2. To apply article 6 in so far as the national coasting trade is concerned to all classes of goods without taking account of the restriction set out in the last paragraph of that article.

PROCES-VERBAL OF SIGNATURE

August 25, 1924, the international Convention for the unification of certain rules relating to bills-of-lading was opened at the Belgian Ministry of Foreign Affairs for signature by the Plenipotentiaries of the States represented at the International Conference on Maritime Law.

The signatures of the Plenipotentiaries whose names follow, have been successively received:

September 8, 1924, for Belgium,
Mr. L. FRANCK,
Mr. LE JEUNE,
Mr. SOHR.
November 15, 1924, for Great Britain,
H. E. the Right Honorable Sir GEORGE GRAHAME.

In proceeding to the signature of the present Convention, His Excellency made, in the name of his Government, the declaration of which the terms are reproduced in an annex to the present Proces-Verbal.

I, the Undersigned, His Britannic Majesty's Ambassador at Brussels, on affixing my signature to the Protocol of Signature of the International Convention for the unification of certain rules relating to Bills of Lading, on this 15th day of November 1924, hereby make the following declarations by direction of my Government.

I declare that His Britannic Majesty's Government adopt the last reservation in the additional Protocol of the Bills of Lading Convention.

I further declare that my signature applies only to Great Britain and Northern Ireland. I reserve the right of each of the British Dominions, Colonies, Overseas Possessions and Protectorates, and of each of the territories over which His Britannic Majesty exercises a mandate to accede to this Convention under Article 13.

(s) GEORGE GRAHAME,
His Britannic Majesty's Ambassador at Brussels.

Brussels, this 15th day of November 1924.

At the moment of proceeding to the signature of the International Convention for the unification of certain rules relating to

Bills of Lading, the undersigned, Plenipotentiary of Japan, makes the following reservations:

a) To Article 4.

Japan reserves to itself until further notice the acceptance of the provisions in (a) of paragraph 2 of Article 4.

b) Japan is of the opinion that the Convention does not in any part apply to national coasting trade: consequently, there should be no occasion to make it the object of provisions in the Protocol. However, if it be not so, Japan reserves to itself the right freely to regulate the national coasting trade by its own law.

(s) M. ADATCI.

BRUSSELS, August 25, 1925.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, before asking for the advice and consent of the Senate to the treaty, I think it would be well for the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], who is chairman of the subcommittee which considered the treaty, to explain it to the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, the convention which the Senate now has under consideration merely provides for the unification of certain rules relating to bills of lading for the carriage of goods by sea and the protocol of signature thereto. It was signed on behalf of the United States at Brussels on June 23, 1925.

Due to the fact that the convention has been some time coming to the point of ratification, and due to the fact that many changes have occurred in our international monetary relations, the committee decided that it was necessary, in recommending the ratification of the treaty, that it be done with the following understanding:

That notwithstanding the provisions of article 4, section 5, and the first paragraph of article 9 of the convention, neither the carrier nor the ship shall in any event be or become liable within the jurisdiction of the United States of America for any loss or damage to or in connection with goods in an amount exceeding $500, lawful money of the United States of America, per package or unit unless the nature and value of goods have been declared by the shipper before shipment and inserted in the bill of lading.

Mr. President, this understanding, as I said, is necessary because the convention itself calls for a valuation of 100 English pounds and states that the valuation shall be computed according to the rate of exchange.

I move that the Senate give its consent to this understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the reservation submitted by the Senator from Utah in behalf of the committee. The resolution of ratification embracing the reservation will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive E, Sixty-ninth Congress, second session, a convention for the unification of certain rules relating to bills of lading for the carriage of goods by sea and a protocol of signature thereto, signed on behalf of the United States at Brussels on June 23, 1925, with the understanding, to be made a part of such ratification, that, notwithstanding the provisions of article 4, section 5, and the first paragraph of article 9 of the convention, neither the carrier nor the ship shall in any event be or become liable within the jurisdiction of the United States of America for any loss or damage to or in connection with goods in an amount exceeding $500, lawful money of the United States of America, per package or unit unless the nature and value of goods have been declared by the shipper before shipment and inserted in the bill of lading.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, the first diplomatic conference regarding this convention was held at Brussels October 17–26, 1922, and was attended by the duly appointed delegates of 24 nations.

The convention, which was opened for signature in Brussels in 1924, has been signed or adhered to by 16 nations, as follows:

Belgium	1924
Chile	1927
Danzig	----
Estonia	1926
France	1925
Germany	1925
Great Britain	1924
Hungary	1926
Italy	1924
Japan	1925
Yugoslavia	1926
Netherlands	1924
Poland	1925
Portugal	1931
Rumania	1925
United States of America	1925

Six nations have already ratified the convention—Great Britain, Belgium, Netherlands, Spain, Portugal, and Hungary.

The rules of the convention have to date been enacted, by national legislation, in Great Britain and 53 British possessions and in Australia, Belgium, Netherlands, India, and Italy. The effective date of the Italian decree has, however, been postponed to await similar action by other countries.

This convention was signed on behalf of the United States by the American Ambassador at Brussels on June 23, 1925, and was submitted to the Senate by the President of the United States on February 26, 1927.

The purpose of the convention is to secure uniformity in the laws of the leading commercial countries, on the subject of ocean bills of lading. These documents are widely accepted by bankers, as security for advances, and it is essential that their reliability shall be maintained, in order that the movement of our exports and imports may be readily financed. International transportation has, however, been seriously handicapped due to the fact that the law governing ocean carriers has been different, in important particulars, in practically every country of the world and uniform shipping documents have, therefore, been impossible. As a result, bankers have been in doubt as to their security when discounting drafts drawn against bills of lading, cargo underwriters have not known the risks which they covered, when insuring goods in transit, and carriers and shippers have been in constant litigation. For the purpose of overcoming these difficulties, a code has been prepared for international adoption and is embodied in this convention. This code is based upon the law of this country and Judge Hough, of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, who was chosen by Secretary Hughes as the leading American delegate to the Brussels Diplomatic Conference, acted as the chairman of the committee which put the code into its final form.

It is interesting to note, as is stated at some length in the committee report, that the same difficulties which exist today, internationally, because of the diversity of the laws of the various nations, were originally encountered in our interstate transportation, because of the diversity of the laws of the different States. This was corrected by the general adoption of a Uniform State Bill of Lading Act, which was prepared by the National Conference of Commissions on Uniform State Laws. That act was first adopted by Massachusetts in 1910 and is now the law in 27 States, which are named in the report.

The Federal Bill of Lading Act was also passed to make the law as laid down by our Federal courts uniform with that of the State act, and the present convention, which seeks international uniformity, is simply another step in the same direction.

The convention will do more, however, than produce international uniformity, for it will also meet the insistent demands which have been made by American shippers for the past 30 years for greater protection in the handling of their goods. In particular, a shipper will be allowed 1 year within which to bring suit for damage to his cargo (instead of the very short period which now appears in most bills of lading), and carriers who have received goods sound and have delivered them damaged will be required to pay for that damage unless they prove that there has been no negligence on their part. Carriers also will not be allowed to limit their liability below $500 per package.

This code has been in force in Great Britain and Australia since 1924, was incorporated in the code of Holland in 1927, and was enacted in Belgium in 1928. In those countries it has been effective in actual operation and has done much to eliminate litigation. It has also been proved that the additional responsibility which the carriers have been called upon to assume has not, in fact, cost them more money, since greater care is now exercised in the handling of cargo because of the greater liability imposed.

In addition to the countries which have already enacted the code, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and Finland have recently announced their acceptance of it, and it is expected that the code will be enacted in those countries as soon as the legal formalities can be complied with.

In Italy a decree has been entered enacting the rules, but the effective date has been postponed to await the action of other nations. The Italian Government has indicated that it will deposit its ratification and make the rules operative as soon as the United States takes similar action.

Canada has also, within the last few weeks, given the same assurance.

In France the Senate subcommittee charged with the consideration of the bill, which has already been passed by the Chamber of Deputies, has reported favorably on that bill.

After the United States has ratified the convention and Italy, Canada, and the Scandinavian countries have taken similar action, it will mean that a uniform law will be applicable to 88 percent of the total ocean tonnage of the world.

As you will see from the committee report, Latin America has also, since 1931, taken definite action looking toward the adoption of this convention. At the Fourth Pan American Commercial Conference, which met in Washington in October 1931, a resolution was unanimously adopted recommending the prompt enactment of this code by all the nations of the Americas, and that the subject be placed upon the agenda of the next conference of American States. When that conference was held at Montevideo in December 1933, a resolution was passed recommending to the American Republics the adoption of the code and prompt adherence to the Brussels convention. Since that date Uruguay has actually ratified.

The code has been strongly urged by American shippers, cargo underwriters, and bankers, who are unanimous that it will remove a wholly unnecessary and serious trade barrier. The United States Shipping Board has also repeatedly requested the passage of a law enacting the code as one of the means for promoting American shipping.

I do not pretend to be versed in the intricacies of admiralty law, nor do I understand many of the details which enter into the handling of our overseas trade; but it seems to me obvious that when every transaction necessarily involves five parties—shipper, carrier, cargo underwriter, discounting banker, and purchaser—and when each of those parties may be, and often is, of a different nationality, it is undesirable to have the laws of all five countries different.

I also rely strongly upon the report which was submitted to the President by Judge Hough and Mr. Norman B. Beecher, then admiralty counsel of the United States Shipping Board, after the Brussels Conference. They said:

> We regard the rules as finally formulated at Brussels a beneficial advance upon anything heretofore known in respect of bills of lading.
> In our judgment, these rules are a response to the demand of American as well as other shippers; they are being insistently urged for legislative adoption, especially in Great Britain. We think that for business reasons the American shipowner will be wise to offer as good a bargain to the shipper as do his competitors.
> In conclusion, it is our opinion that the "Rules for the Carriage of Goods by Sea" is a thing finished; it lies with the maritime nations of the world to take it or leave it. We think it ought to be taken.

I assume that if the Senate ratifies this convention, Congress will also pass an act extending its benefits to all American shippers who are engaged in international, coastwise, and intercoastal trades. The convention alone, without legislation, would not, of course, protect American citizens while dealing with each other; and it is important that American exporters and importers shall have the benefit of the rules laid down in the convention, not only when they are using foreign carriers but also when American carriers are employed.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] has already introduced a bill, S. 1152, which is intended to enact this code; and I hope it will receive prompt consideration as soon as the convention shall have been ratified.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah whether there is anything in the convention which would require any radical change in the legislation which has been introduced, and to which he refers?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The Senator will note, on page 18 of the report, that anticipating just such a question we have inserted in the report an answer to the Senator's question. It probably would be advantageous if that portion of the report were read. It is headed "Changes Which the Convention Will Effect in the American Law."

Mr. WHITE. My question was not with respect to the present American law but whether the convention would require any radical changes in the proposed legislation which I have introduced in two or three Congresses; or is the bill, in the form in which it now appears, substantially responsive to the convention?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. If I correctly understand the Senator's point, in going over Senate bill 1152, which the Senator from Maine introduced, I discovered that in the first title and through the first 13 or 14 sections his bill and the convention itself are practically identical.

Mr. WHITE. So there is no real antagonism between the bill which is pending and the convention?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. No; instead of there being antagonism, there is almost complete agreement.

Mr. WHITE. That is all I wanted to be sure about.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the reservation to the resolution of ratification.

The reservation was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification as amended by the reservation. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification, as amended by the reservation, is agreed to, and the convention is ratified.

SPECIAL CLAIMS COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND MEXICO

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, while we are on the subject of treaties, I desire to state that the President has requested the Senate to return to him Executive L, Seventy-second Congress, first session, being a convention of June 18, 1932. It is a treaty to extend the life of the Special Claims Commission, United States and Mexico. Another treaty having been adopted settling the whole matter en bloc, the treaty to which I refer can serve no further purpose; and I ask unanimous consent that it be returned to the President in accordance with his request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the next business in order on the calendar.

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Riley E. Elgen, of the District of Columbia, to be a member of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the Army nominations on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Army are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in legislative session, took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, April 2, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 1 (legislative day of Mar. 13), 1935

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, APRIL 1, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou who art the Most High, we rejoice that there is one God and Father of us all, who is over all, through all, and in all. We praise Thee for Him whose footsteps are revealed on earth. Heavenly Father, just now let us feel the breath of the higher world. In a serious and reverent spirit we wait for this. May we be led in the practice of every duty and virtue. Almighty God, most graciously abide with our Speaker and the Congress. O Spirit of our blessed Lord, anoint our eyes that we may see, heal us with Thy touch, and speak to us that we may behold Thy glory. Strengthen us to greet the unseen with fortitude, the future with eagerness and not with reluctance, with confidence and not regret. With quenchless aspiration and abounding faith may we pass these days as the faithful leaders and servants of our people throughout the land. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, March 29, 1935, was read and approved.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 408) entitled "An act to promote safety on the public highways of the District of Columbia by providing for the financial responsibility of owners and operators of motor vehicles for damages caused by motor vehicles on the public highways in the District of Columbia; to prescribe penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other purposes", requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. KING, Mr. COPELAND, and Mr. CAPPER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 404. An act to provide for the acquisition of land in the District of Columbia in excess of that required for public projects and improvements, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 6718) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes", insists upon its amendments and requests a conference with the House thereon, and appoints Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. SMITH, Mr. KEYES, and Mr. NYE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5913) "making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes", numbered 7 and 25.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR RELIEF (H. J. RES. 117)

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conference report on House Joint Resolution 117, making appropriations for relief purposes, be recommitted to the Committee of Conference.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN], explain why he wants to have the joint resolution recommitted?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, there are several reasons.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. TABER. Then I shall object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman is going to object anyway.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and recommit the conference report on House Joint Resolution 117, making appropriations for relief purposes, to the Committee of Conference.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] desire to use some of his time?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I want the House to know what this is all about. This is a most remarkable procedure. This bill was brought before the Appropriations Committee in January, not quite, but almost 3 months ago, and we were told that the relief funds were almost exhausted, that we must make haste, and that unless we passed the bill in 2 weeks the relief funds would be out and there would be nothing to take care of the destitute.

The bill passed the House in about 2 weeks. It was perfectly apparent it was not a relief bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of no quorum. We will have to have a quorum here anyway for a vote. It is well that all the Members should understand this matter. I therefore make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-five Members present; not a quorum.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 42]

Allen	Berlin	Casey	Darrow
Andrew, Mass.	Bolton	Chapman	Dies
Bankhead	Brennan	Cooley	Dingell
Beam	Brooks	Crowther	Doutrich
Drewry	Hancock, N. C.	McAndrews	Sabath
Duffey, Ohio	Hart	McKeough	Sadowski
Dunn, Miss.	Hartley	McLeod	Shannon
Faddis	Hess	McMillan	Snyder
Ferguson	Higgins, Conn.	Meeks	Stack
Frey	Igoe	Mitchell, Ill.	Sumners, Tex.
Gambrill	Johnson, Tex.	Norton	Sweeney
Gillette	Kennedy, Md.	O'Brien	Taylor, Tenn.
Goldsborough	Kerr	Palmisano	Thomas
Granfield	Lamneck	Patton	Wadsworth
Green	Lemke	Peyser	White
Greenway	Lesinski	Polk	Wigglesworth
Griswold	Lundeen	Quinn	Wolcott

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and sixty-three Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I started to say a while ago that this bill was brought up in a hurry. It was passed by the House in a hurry. We did not have time to consider the bill and it was impossible to allocate the funds. The bill then went over to the Senate, where it stayed 2 months, and the Senate made some sort of an allocation but not an effective one. It goes to conference and a conference report is filed limiting some things and trying to put the bill somewhere where somebody might have control over the matter.

In this bill the House delegated all of its authority with reference to this money. The Senate has practically delegated all its authority and the conference report practically delegates all authority. Now the chairman of the conferees comes in here and moves to recommit the bill to conference. For what purpose? It must be some purpose that will not stand the light of day, for no one dares to come here and tell us why they want this bill recommitted. It must be for some purpose contrary to the Constitution of the United States and contrary to the liberties of the American people or they on that side would come out here and tell us the truth.

Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if the Democratic Members of the House are so subservient that they take their stuff done up in packages blind?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Do not worry about them.

Mr. TABER. I do not worry about you. I know that it is practically the purpose to cease to consider legislation over there on the Democratic side, or to care what is in it as long as you get your orders on what to do. Is it not about time that the House of Representatives knew what it was doing? Is it not about time that the Membership of the House of Representatives insist on doing their own constitutional duty with reference to legislation?

We have all sorts of rumors around here, rumors that this member of the Cabinet or some member of the "brain trust" objects to some provision that the conferees have inserted providing that some employment must be provided if the money is to be spent. It looks as though the "brain trust" wanted to use all this money for rackets and not to provide employment.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. How will they be able to report it back until the President returns from his fishing trip?

Mr. TABER. The gentleman means that the fishing trip is more important than the bill?

Mr. HOFFMAN. They must learn what to do.

Mr. TABER. Of course, they must have their orders, and they must be operating under sealed orders, because that is the only kind they like to work under.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Why not wait until he comes back?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. RICH. In the morning papers it is stated that the Speaker of the House wired the President in order that Congress might receive their orders so we could act on this particular bill. If the Speaker of the House has received his orders from the fishing expeditionary forces, then he should enlighten the Membership of the House with respect to the matter that we might know what the President has to say and can then use our own best judgment for the country's good.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me to make an observation?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I am not particularly interested in any rereference of the measure, because I cannot conceive of its being possible to make it any worse than it is in its present form. I have the fear that the adoption of this bill puts us down the road so far toward a paternalistic state as to make it impossible for us to ever turn back toward sound constitutional government without violent breach of public faith, with destruction of private property rights. [Applause.]

While this bill professes the purpose of ending the dole by putting people to work, in effect it is an invitation and an urge to the people to look to the Government for solution of all their problems. It puts the Government into a field of activity into which it should never have entered and out of which it should take itself as quickly as possible. It pledges the Government to uneconomic expenditure of public money amounting to waste on a gigantic scale. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia has made a fine, patriotic statement. Would that a majority of the Membership on the Democratic side of the aisle would put patriotism before blind, ignorant partisanship and vote down this terrible bill which will destroy American liberty. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from New York says that no one dares tell the House why this motion to recommit the conference report is made. I do not see why the gentleman should be so interested in debating this conference report. He was on the conference; his Republican colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] was on the conference; and neither one signed or approved the conference report. [Applause.] Neither one even voted for the bill on its original passage through the House. So that the enemies of the bill and the enemies of the administration are getting up here and trying to tell Democrats in this House how to vote.

Why should the bill be recommitted? I am not going to go into this at length, but there is a provision in this measure requiring 33⅓ percent of the money to be used for direct labor on all projects under the $900,000,000. If this had been direct and indirect labor it would be a different proposition, but it is confined practically to labor actually performed on the site of the project. The man, no matter who he is, who fails to realize that the employment problem in the United States is national and not local, fails to measure up to proper citizenship in this country. Indirect labor is of just as much importance as direct labor, because indirect labor is that labor which is expended in the fabrication of the material used in these projects, and the fabrication of material for these projects is accomplished in your cities where the factories are located and where the great proportion of unemployment exists, and yet they want it confined to one-third for direct labor, practically on the sites of the projects when such sites may not be in congested centers where great unemployment exists.

This will mean the killing of every project where the direct labor on the site is less than 33⅓ percent of the loan, yet the indirect labor, the labor actually employed in fabricating the material may be 20 or 30 percent in addition to the direct labor. For instance, the amount for slum clearance allotted by the Senate amendment is $450,000,000 and the direct labor is only 28 percent. Grade-crossing elimination, which may be done by contract, though a loan, is only 30 percent.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Not now.

Rural electrification and, in fact, construction of all hydroelectric plants and necessary incidental work to be done is only 30 percent. In other words, taking your total appropriation $900,000,000, there is practically one-third of the projects that would be excluded under the 33⅓ percent for direct labor practically on the site.

Another amendment the Senate put in the bill prohibited any money for warships, ammunition, matériel, and so forth. That is all right, but as written in the conference report it excludes new construction for Army or Navy posts, Reserves, and so forth. In that construction, 70 percent is labor.

Ah, Mr. TABER, we want to pass this bill as quickly as possible, but we want to make it practicable and efficient. The President has requested it and has assumed responsibility for it. We owe it to him to give him a bill that he will make a success of in shifting from the dole to honest labor.

That is all we ask. We ask you to vote to recommit the report. You will have another report giving the President a practicable bill, one that he can administer and get rid of the dole, shifting people on the dole to gainful employment. That is all.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. What is it?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the gentleman if there is a disposition on the part of the conferees to eliminate the so-called "amendment" offered by Senator GEORGE?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The House conferees fought that, but it was contended that its elimination would endanger the conference report in the Senate. Rather than endanger the bill, we let it stay in it, because it is harmless, ineffective, and cannot be put into effect, because it does not provide for any reduction of the processing tax nor its elimination.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this provision for one-third to be expended for direct labor applies only to subsection (g). In other words, it applies only to the provisions for loans or grants to States and subdivisions thereof. The question of roads and grade crossings mentioned by the gentleman from Texas is in another subsection and are not involved in this proposal for one-third direct labor.

Most of the loans or grants heretofore made under the Public Works Administration have been for public schools and other public buildings. I am reliably informed that on this class of projects the direct labor on the job is somewhere between 45 and 50 percent of the total cost of the project. Therefore the proposed limitation of one-third of the cost for direct labor will not hamper any loan or grant for a school or other public building.

It applies only to one subsection in section 3, and the thought behind this provision is that if this is to be a real relief bill there should be some relief in it. The contention of the Senate is that if a municipality or subdivision of a State comes to the Federal Government for money, for a loan or a grant, that at least one-third of that money loaned or granted should be expended on direct relief, a thoroughly reasonable proposition. This provision does not apply to any other section in the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. Wait until I am through. The figure of one-third, of course, was a compromise, as all conference reports are compromises, and it was put at one-third in order to cover all of the sample projects given before the committee by Admiral Peoples in his testimony. The Senate conferees held out for sometime for a 50-percent provision instead of one-third. Further than that, there has been a tendency in the past for State subdivisions and municipalities to come to the P. W. A. with projects not for the primary purpose of giving relief but for the purpose of furthering, at Federal expense, some pet local object that ought to be financed locally. This is what the Senate has tried to prevent. If the Congress is going to loan or grant money to States and subdivisions thereof for purposes of relieving unemployment, it is only reasonable to insist that at least one-third shall go to direct relief in the State or subdivision where the work is performed. This provision will also check favoritism, political or otherwise. It will set up a uniform standard.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. BACON. I have no more time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that we are in a very peculiar position here today. As I understand the situation, the conferees, or at least a majority of them, signed this conference report. In listening to the statement made by the chairman of the conferees, I did not understand him to give any information to the House as to what new light or information has been brought to him which causes him to change his position between the time he signed the conference report last Friday and this morning. If the reports carried in the newspapers are correct, and that is the only reason given so far why the conferees are backing up on their own conference report, it is that the report is not satisfactory to the "brain trust" and the various people in the executive departments that are to administer the fund, then it seems to me that Congress has reached a pretty low ebb when it cannot even pass on a conference report without getting orders from the Chief Executive. It also seems to me that the Chief Executive himself is more interested in having a good time on the palatial yacht of Mr. Astor in southern waters than he is in passing this relief bill. It is also specially interesting to know you cannot do anything without first asking his permission.

Mr. KELLER. Oh, shame on you.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I mean exactly what I say, whether the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] agrees with me or not. I have the floor, and he can answer what I say in his own time. The President told us that this is a very important measure, and that it had to be passed before the 10th of February. It is now nearly 2 months from that time, and his own representatives here in the House want to send it back to the committee and delay it for a still longer time. They will not tell us the reason for this unprecedented action. Your action now is characteristic of your actions during the entire consideration of this bill. You evidently do not want anyone to know what your plans are or what you intend to do. Why this secrecy? Why should the people not know something about such an important and expensive piece of legislation? The only excuse I have heard is that 30 percent of the relief bill must be expended for labor.

Mr. BACON. Only 30 percent of one part of the relief bill.

Mr. SNELL. That applies to only $900,000,000 of it. If this is a relief bill, is there anything unreasonable to ask that at least 30 percent of a part of it be spent for direct labor? If there is any objection to this you better change the name and purpose of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, we are again having another chapter in the distressing and painful spectacle of finding our Republican brethren in the House unable to make any contribution to the present dilemma in which the country finds itself, except to throw monkey wrenches into the machinery and place obstacles in the way of the recovery bandwagon. My two distinguished colleagues from New York on the Appropriations Committee now plead with the House in behalf of some provision which they say is in this conference report. Do not be deceived by that. Neither of the gentlemen voted for the bill originally, and neither of them would vote for the conference report this minute if it were brought up for a vote. They did not sign the conference report and they are not for it. There is only one thing they agree on. They are unanimous in wanting to do everything on earth they can do to block the program of Franklin D. Roosevelt, and they do not miss any effort to do that.

Mr. TABER. The program is bad, is it not?

Mr. WOODRUM. Shame on the genial Kentucky colonel, Mr. SNELL, that he should get up and let his partisan feelings cause him to cast aspersions on the great Chief Executive of the United States, who for the moment is trying to get some much-needed relaxation. Oh, yes; that is just what he did. What was the object of all these remarks about the President being on vacation?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Not now.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Why not?

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not yield to the lady.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. WOODRUM. You know it is not often we men are in a position where we can make the ladies sit down and keep quiet. [Laughter.]

My friends on the Democratic side, the minority is very much interested in recovery until some plan comes for recovery, and then they are against it.

Now, there is nothing unusual about this request. Many times committees in this House have reported bills, conference committees have brought in reports, and after they were filed some matter has come up making it desirable that they should reconsider it, and a unanimous-consent request is made and is granted, and no one ever pays any attention to it. The conferees take it back or the committee takes the bill back to the committee and they fix it up as they think it should be presented, and they bring it to the House. The House has lost no right. It has a full opportunity to consider every provision in it and it has not lost any of its rights.

You would not hear anything of this request today and there would not be all this mess about it today except our friends know that once this instrumentality of recovery is placed in the hands of the President, the recovery bandwagon and the new deal will leap forward. When it does leap forward it will flatten out a little more those good gentlemen on the other side of the aisle, if it is possible to flatten them out more. There ought not be a single Democratic vote against this motion today. I appeal to you gentlemen on the Democratic side. It is no use to appeal to the Republicans. I appeal to you gentlemen for a 100-percent party vote for this motion, because the Republicans are making it a partisan matter. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to listen to Simon Legree over on the Democratic side and hear him crack the whip and watch you fellows get under the lash. We all remember how in 1933 it was said a great emergency came upon us and the President went off across the Atlantic and Pacific on that fishing trip. Friday a member of the conference committee brought in this conference report and expected us to vote for it. Now, between Friday and Monday another emergency has arisen, and you do not want us to vote for the conference report until you have orders. Tell us why you do not want to vote for it this morning? That is all we want to know.

Mr. KELLER. Because we can do better.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Because you can do better? What has happened? You can do like Wallace did with the A. A. A. He said that was a political expediency. Is this another one?

Mr. KELLER. Maybe.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I guess probably it is. Trying to fix up a job for somebody. Is that the reason you want the report recommitted?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult for me to follow the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] when he says the Republicans of the House today are obstructing the passage of this bill. The parliamentary situation is we are actually voting against a delay. I do not think any Republican can be justly charged with partisanship when he stands up and asserts the American people are expecting, in this tremendous relief bill, a major share of the money shall go to the people who are actually unemployed. [Applause.]

There could be no other justification for the bill. Huge taxes which result from this legislation can only be excused on the ground it gives actual relief to the vast army of unemployed who are in need. It certainly is no time to waste the resources of a nation, to waste money which may be sorely needed before we escape from the depression. I am sorry the chairman of the committee would stand up in the House and say the so-called "George amendment", which is included in the conference report, is innocuous and will be of no avail. When he makes the statement he says, in effect, the President of the United States has prejudged the case of the textile people and will not take advantage of the power to lift the taxes from this prostrate industry. The amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Senator George] has given the one bright ray of hope to the textile industry in more than a year. Through both the action and the lack of action by the administration the textile industry, the second largest industry in this country, has been placed on the brink of despair and close to destruction. In one instance the industry has been loaded with taxes unjustly imposed, and then the administration has permitted Japanese imports to continue unchecked. As a consequence the industry is in dire distress.

Now we are told these millions of people who are seeking relief are not to be considered in a measure designed for relief. More relief would be given by lifting the processing tax from the textile industry than will be gained in spending the money in many of the fields to which it will be sent.

The Secretary of Agriculture has demonstrated, through his statements, he has no concern for the textile industry; that he is simply thinking of his own activity. He is not broad enough to give equal justice to all of the American people. He is entirely oblivious to the millions who are in dire distress because of his policies.

Mr. FORD of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The Secretary cannot see he is bringing back the cotton growers of the South to a civilization which will be based on a production of 6,000,000 bales of cotton. He cannot see the 750,000 small cotton growers he has forced on the public-welfare list. He does not see, and probably does not care, that 500,000 textile workers of this country are in danger of losing their jobs. He does not care, apparently, that whole communities in this great land of ours are being reduced to destitution and destruction.

He goes blindly on preaching his doctrine of scarcity in a world hungry for food and clothing. He is still for an experiment which has failed.

Now it is stated here the bright hope given a distressed industry by the efforts of Senator GEORGE will be of no avail. I cannot believe the President will be deaf to the calls of this sick industry. I cannot believe the chairman speaks with knowledge when he leaves this impression.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARNOLD].

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, our friends on the opposite side of the aisle ask us why we are asking that this bill be sent back to conference. There are none so blind as those who will not see and none so deaf as those who will not hear. The chairman of this committee told the House plainly and distinctly why it was deemed advisable to send this bill back to conference. The conferees on the part of the House insisted, of course, on the House provisions in the bill the way it passed the House. In the conference, necessarily, concessions had to be made and concessions were made on some provisions of the bill, especially on the provision which makes an allocation of $900,000,000 for loans and grants, on the condition that at least one-third of the aggregate in loans and grants should be for direct labor. We have since learned that the conference report in that regard will make the bill very difficult in administration. Now, we are met with the situation that loans or grants on the condition that one-third of the total be for direct labor excludes all labor that might be performed in fabricating plants in carrying out the general purposes of the bill for the relief of unemployment. If this were "labor, direct or indirect" this question would not arise. Now, the time to correct this in order to make the bill more practicable and more workable, is at the first opportunity and this is the first opportunity.

We are asking this House to send this bill back to conference that we may correct that one matter especially. Other corrections may be found advisable.

This is an unemployment and relief bill; we want to get the bill in shape to accomplish this purpose to the fullest extent. It is designed to bring relief to our unemployed, and in doing so fabricating industries and men engaged in fabricating plants are just as much entitled to assistance and funds from this bill as are men engaged directly at the site of operations. The Comptroller General has ruled that "direct labor" excludes labor in fabricating plants. To carry out the purpose of this bill and to accomplish what was originally intended, it should go back to conference in order that this matter may be corrected and that States, subdivisions, and agencies thereof as well as self-liquidating projects of public bodies created by States and municipalities, cities, and other public institutions to which loans and grants may be made may procure money for the benefit of labor generally as well as for direct labor at the site of operations. This is the purpose of the committee in asking this be returned, and the chairman of the committee explained the matter very fully. The gentlemen on the other side of the aisle that now raise the question would have known, had they but listened, the purpose in sending this bill back to conference. Now, I call upon you, Democrats on this side of the aisle, to go along with us and send this bill back to conference that the real purpose of the bill may be made more effective and put in proper form. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS].

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, the objection is made to the present conference report that 33⅓ percent of the funds loaned to subdivisions of government be spent for direct labor. I call the attention of the House to the fact that this is the estimate submitted by Admiral Peoples himself. No objection was made at the time of his testimony before the committee. If this is to be a work bill, to take people off the dole, certainly the money must be used in direct wages, and it is not unreasonable to put in restrictions insuring that of the money allotted, a fair share will go for direct labor. If you would like us to go along with you, you should explain why there should be objections to this 33⅓ percent requirement.

Perhaps you gentlemen on the other side of the aisle have information that we do not possess; perhaps you know what the program for the expenditure of this money is, but you certainly have not let us in on the information, if you have it.

Maybe if you would tell us what the works program is, and how the money is to be spent, we might know more about your objection to one-third of the money going for direct wages in the community in which it is allotted.

Why should not at least one-third of this money go for direct labor? If a substantial portion of the money is not spent in the local communities, then you will merely continue the process of draining the money off into a few financial and industrial centers. That is the very policy that brought about the collapse that resulted in the present depression.

The very thing we want to do is get this money into circulation in the various States and local communities. Wages are the best way to do it.

I am not concerned with the politics and partisanship involved, but I am amused when gentlemen on the other side say that we are blocking the President's program. As a matter of fact, no President of this country ever has had such complete cooperation from the minority as the present occupant of the White House; and no administration ever was so much blocked by purely partisan political obstructionist tactics as the past administration was by you gentlemen. Its program had no opportunity, because that administration could get no cooperation from your side of the aisle. As I say, I am not concerned with the political side; but I am concerned with the question of the right of the people to be represented in a legislative body. We are no longer a legislature; we have become a blind pig. Everything is being shoved through blindly; you are passing legislation without even giving us a chance to discuss it. Last year you put bills through without the Members even being permitted to see a copy of the bills before they were passed by the House. You put through major bills involving hundreds of millions of dollars in 10 minutes. Why, then, all this delay now, when people are in actual want and relief is in a critical condition?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS], who has just spoken, states we are passing legislation blindly. He should be reminded that we are now trying to prevent the House from doing what he condemns. The question now pending is the motion of the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee to recommit this bill for further conference and not to pass it. It is not unusual for conferees to submit such a motion, and it shows an earnest purpose on the part of the conferees to correct any mistakes in the conference report before finally submitting it to the House.

The four House conferees representing the majority party, all of whom voted for the bill when it first passed the House, and without whose vote no conference report could have been brought back to the House, now unanimously ask that the conference report be recommitted and frankly tell you that this course is necessary in order to correct what they now believe are mistakes and would make it impossible for the bill to be efficiently administered. No pride of opinion prevents the majority conferees from making this frank statement to the House.

It is not my desire in the short time remaining to repeat arguments previously made, since this House does not enjoy superfluous talk. You have heard brief, convincing, and forceful statements by two of the majority House conferees giving some reasons why, in their judgment, the report should be recommitted. I wish to refer to another reason which, in my opinion, suggests that the report should be recommitted for further consideration, namely, the provision requiring confirmation by the Senate of certain administrative officials appointed by the President. It would, in my judgment, greatly delay the effectiveness of the bill primarily designed, if you please, to meet emergency needs.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. As I understand it, the Democratic conferees, the ones who signed this conference report, are all asking that it be recommitted.

Mr. OLIVER. Absolutely.

Mr. RANKIN. And if they had made a motion to agree to the conference report the gentlemen on the other side immediately would have opposed it.

Mr. OLIVER. I think so; and let me conclude with this statement: The conferees whom you appointed have given sufficient reasons, I believe, why our colleagues on the majority side should send this bill back to conference. I give you another reason, ad hominem, perhaps, but the shortness of the time allotted me does not permit more than brief mention of it. Two gentlemen on the minority side, whom I respect, and who are conferees, did not vote for this bill, when it originally passed the House; they did not sign the conference report; and they would not now vote for the conference report, if it was submitted to the House. When you find these two minority conferees, now so vigorously opposing the motion to recommit, I respectfully submit, it furnishes to our colleagues on the majority side a very good and cogent reason why the motion to recommit should be carried.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The two conferees on the minority side never voted to report the bill out of conference and are today opposed to sending it back to conference, yet, if they had their way, it would be in conference now.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I understand this is a unanimous report of the conferees, both of the Senate and of the House; but I have not yet understood why the report should be recommitted. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman was not in the Chamber when the matter was explained, and I have not time to repeat what has been said. I think the reasons given were sound. I can say to the gentleman from Kentucky, however, that it is not unusual for the Supreme Court, both of the Nation and of the several States, to recall announced opinions; nor is it unusual for our highest courts to grant rehearings and state their reasons afterward.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] to suspend the rules and recommit the conference report to the committee of conference.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SNELL) there were—yeas 208, noes 74.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 257, nays 110, not voting 64, as follows:

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GRANFIELD] is away on official business. If present, he would vote "aye." The same thing applies also to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY].

Mr. UTTERBACK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that my colleague the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] is unavoidably absent and, if present, would vote "aye."

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MEEKS] desires it to be known that if present today, which he is unable to be on account of illness, would vote "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE PUBLIC-UTILITIES HOLDING COMPANY BILL AND T. V. A.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the public-utility holding-company bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I wish to make a few preliminary remarks on the public-utility bill now before that committee.

Newton D. Baker once said that "the test of intelligence is a capacity to suspend judgment until the facts are known."

I would like the country to know that a group of level-headed and fair-minded men—the members of that committee—are trying to ascertain the facts. They are proceeding with patience and without passion. They are hearing every side of the question. The hearings have now been going on morning and afternoon for 5 weeks, and are by no means concluded.

Despite excited statements that the bill as first drafted would be "railroaded" through with only 12 hours for a $12,000,000,000 industry to present its case, the committee has already given the industry 48 hours, and still more time will be given. The defense has already consumed more time than the proponents of the bill.

This brief recital ought to reassure anxious investors that the case will be heard before it is judged, and that judgment will be the result of reason, not emotion. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is not a punitive body, on the one hand, nor the creature of the Power Trust on the other.

Its task is as delicate as that of the surgeon—to cut away cancerous tissue and leave unharmed the sources of life and growth. It has but one interest—the public interest. It has but one desire—to promote recovery and the confidence that underlies recovery.

It can build for the future, but it cannot salvage the past. Responsibility for the past rests on other shoulders.

If the key men in the industry in all cases had been industrial statesmen and not, as in some cases, Ponzi financiers, there would be no problem before the industry or Congress today.

An attempt will be made by some of the Ponzis of the industry to deposit their illegitimate offspring on the doorstep of Congress.

Congress did not cause the losses of the past and will not do vicarious atonement for them. Congress did not engage in "write-ups"; it did not capitalize imagination; it issued no watered stocks; it made no "upstream" loans; it did not "trade out" or induce old ladies to exchange sound securities in operating companies for "convertible, redeemable, refunding second preferred, but nonvoting, junior warrants" in holding companies many degrees removed from the stone and steel and coal and falling water which lie at the bottom of the pyramid and alone sustain it.

On the other hand, Congress did not build the magnificent physical properties which today constitute the greatest of the miracles of science. Let the credit go where it belongs and the blame fall where it should.

To keep the record straight let me give these facts. They are taken from the testimony of Mr. David Friday, an economist engaged by the industry to appear before our committee. He states that the market value of utility securities on September 1, 1919, was: Holding companies, $4,444,709,029, and operating companies, $5,294,949,486, a total of $9,739,658,515. On July 1, 1932, values of holding-company securities had shrunk 87 percent and operating companies 79 percent. In other words, $9,739,658,515 had shrunk to $1,684,773,000, showing a market value loss of $8,054,885,000, or an average decline of 83 percent. No doubt the value in 1929 was too high and the value in 1932 was too low. Stocks formerly selling for $100 declined to $5 or less.

That staggering shrinkage in value cannot be blamed on Congress or the present administration or its policies or the pending bill. It occurred before anyone now holding office was elected.

Since the date last given there has been a further shrinkage in the value of public-utility securities. Since March 4, 1933, the present administration has been in power and Insull and others have been fighting to keep out of prison. I shall not attempt to further apportion the responsibility for any continuing loss of confidence in the value of these securities.

It is time for the leaders in Congress and the leaders in business to reestablish that lost confidence and to rebuild this great industry. Let us build it upon the rock of character, and not on the sands of cunning and greed. The light and power industry needs the light of publicity and the power of public opinion. The industry has nothing to fear from the public if it deals fairly with the public. I will play my last card on the sense of fairness of the American people.

I am satisfied, too, that many utilities were managed with as high a degree of honor as prevailed generally in the 1920's—even among politicians—and that their present management is entitled to confidence.

In the task of reconstruction I think government has its part to play. I refer now to the huge hydroelectric program begun with Boulder Dam in the Hoover administration and continuing with Muscle Shoals in the present administration.

I think the Government should make absolutely explicit the frontiers of that program. If more millions of dollars are to be advanced by private investors in the expansion of the light and power industry, if more machinery and equipment is to be bought, more men to be employed, more pay rolls to enter the homes of America, it seems to me imperative that private enterprise must know, with confidence, the limits of that program.

If private business is to be asked to play the game, it must be assured that it will still have a game to play. I would like to repeat that statement in letters a foot high and hang them on the wall of every office in Washington.

I make no criticism of the Tennessee Valley Authority as a "yardstick" to measure the cost of electrical energy. That yardstick has been voted by Congress and is not now the issue.

But the yardstick must be an honest one if it is to be a reliable measure of a competing service. Men have many virtues. A yardstick has only one—honesty. The Tennessee Valley yardstick must contain every item of cost that private enterprise has to include in its operating expense. I have no doubt that that is the intention of the management of the T. V. A. But that intention is not now made clear. It should be, in justice to T. V. A., to the communities it serves, and to the private enterprise with which it competes.

T. V. A. is excepted from the provisions of the pending bill. Private enterprise is included. Uniform accounting is to be required of private utilities but not of the Government utility. Private enterprise is to be subject to Federal regulation, as it is now subject to State regulation. T. V. A. asserts that it is subject to no regulation, State or Federal.

The good intentions of the high-minded men in charge of T. V. A. will not remove the present timidity of private capital. T. V. A. should be like Caesar's wife. Its record of business management should be written where those who run may read. It owes that to itself and to the Nation.

This is no time for hysteria or recrimination or suspicion. It is time when honest men in government and honest men in business should build confidence by an exchange of confidence.

Public office and public utilities should both be a public trust.

We must liquidate the faults of the past and solidify the foundations of the future.

The hope of tomorrow depends on the candor and courage and character with which we all attack the problems of today.

The yardstick of tomorrow must be the Golden Rule.

TRADE TREATIES

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an interview which I gave to the New York Times and which was published on yesterday, on Trade Pacts.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is it the gentleman wants to insert in the RECORD?

Mr. BACHARACH. I just stated it was an interview which I gave to the New York Times on trade pacts with foreign countries.

Mr. BACON. It is the gentleman's own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following interview which I gave to the New York Times, published on March 31, on Trade Treaties:

[From the New York Times, Sunday, Mar. 31, 1935]

BACHARACH WARNS ON TRADE TREATIES—ASSERTS RECIPROCAL PACTS AID FOREIGN FARMERS, BUT FAIL TO PROTECT GROWERS HERE—ASKS REPEAL OF THE ACT—SEES STATE INDUSTRIES HURT BY BELGIAN ACCORD—FEARS LINKS WITH ITALY AND JAPAN

(By ISAAC BACHARACH, Representative in Congress from the Second New Jersey Congressional District and Republican Member of the House Ways and Means Committee)

WASHINGTON, March 30.—In the last Congress we enacted, at the behest of the Roosevelt administration, what is known as the "Reciprocal Tariff Act." I was opposed to the enactment of this legislation and am still opposed to it. So far, under the terms of this act, the President has entered into trade agreements with Cuba and Belgium, but negotiations have begun with other nations, including Colombia, Haiti, Brazil, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Sweden, Spain, Switzerland, Finland, the Netherlands, Italy, and Canada.

Agreements with any and all of these countries vitally affect the State of New Jersey. With the exception of Belgium, agreement with the other countries above mentioned would affect principally our agricultural interests.

We already had a 20-percent differential in favor of Cuban products, but among other concessions made to Cuba under the trade agreement, we have made reductions of from 25 to 50 percent below previous existing tariff duties on lima beans, white potatoes, tomatoes, cucumbers, egg plant, peppers, squash, etc., in the seasonal period from December 1 through the spring months, a time when the domestic producers most need the protection that was afforded under our present tariff act.

TOMATO GROWERS TO SUFFER

Negotiations are under way for a trade agreement with Italy. If this agreement goes through, and I have no doubt on that score, the farmers of New Jersey and other Northeastern States will be materially affected. This is particularly true with relation to any agreement which would lower the tariff on tomatoes and tomato products. Any reduction in these tariff rates will be reflected immediately in lower prices to tomato growers. Even under the benefits of the present tariff law, which has reduced substantially imports of tomatoes and tomato products, producers are unable to sell their produce at a fair profit and they are asking the canners for a 10-percent increase in price. This will be voided if the canners are threatened with a surplus from other countries, and tomato brokers and jobbers are declining to buy tomatoes in view of the negotiations with Italy and the probability of a reduction in tariff rates.

As a result the market is stagnant, prices are depressed below the 1934 level and growers are facing higher production costs due to codes and the competition from higher labor wages in industry. Another thing which confronts the tomato growers of New Jersey and other Eastern States, is the fear of competition from Midwestern areas where much wheat and corn land has been removed from these crops under benefit payments, but are not held under any restrictions as to what crops can be produced thereon.

It is understood that the administration is in process of negotiating an agreement with Canada, with the possibility of a reduction in the tariff on Canadian potatoes, in accordance with the precedent established in the Cuban agreement. New Jersey is a great potato-growing State. Already potato growers of the country are suffering from foreign competition, which has ruined prices and subjected them to a tremendous financial loss. To help them there should probably be an increase in tariff rates instead of a reduction. This is true also of the poultry and egg industry, which is suffering from ruinous competition from China and other foreign countries.

THE BELGIAN AGREEMENT

Industrial New Jersey will be very much affected by the agreement entered into with Belgium. Under that agreement 54 products were affected, and of these 54 products on which concessions were granted, reductions in rates of duty were made on 48, the present duty was bound on 1, and 5 products were bound on the free list.

The 48 products on which reductions were made include 8 chemicals; 7 ceramics, including cement, glass, sand, laminated, plate, rolled, cylinder, crown, and sheet glass; 10 iron and steel products; 3 agricultural products; 8 textiles; 5 paper products; and 7 sundries. The reductions on tariff rates on these products range from 17 percent to 50 percent.

The State of New Jersey will feel the effects of this trade agreement with Belgium, since all of the products on which tariff duties have been reduced under the agreement are produced in our State.

So far as I know, negotiations have not been undertaken yet with Japan looking toward a trade agreement with that country, but, should such a calamity develop—for it would be nothing short of a calamity—it would spell ruin for American industry and the welfare of American workers.

To my mind it is evident that in entering into these trade agreements we are more concerned with the prosperity and welfare of foreign farmers and workers and foreign manufacturers than we are with the welfare of our own farmers, workers, and manufacturers, and I fail to see how we are going to cure unemployment, increase wages, and do the other things so vitally necessary to pull us out of the depression if we are to throw wide open the doors of foreign competition and thereby tear down our tariff walls through these vicious trade agreements.

The law should be repealed before it is too late.

CLAIMANTS WHO SUFFERED LOSS FROM FIRES SET BY GOVERNMENT-OPERATED RAILROADS IN MINNESOTA IN 1918

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill H. R. 366.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I hope my colleagues have read my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for March 28 on page 4644, and also in the RECORD for March 29, on page 4717, in which I discuss H. R. 3662 and point out the objections to the measure are without merit because the courts held the Government liable. The Government, then, in violation of law, forced the claimants to take a percentage of the loss as determined by the Government or else take nothing. This bill has for its purpose the payment to the claimants of the balance of the loss admitted by the Government.

Those who do not understand the bill, and therefore oppose it, say something like this, "Oh, this is an old claim, hoary with age, has been here a long time", and so forth. I want to correct this error. Following the 1918 fire, the Director General of Railroads denied liability for the loss, claimed other fires did the damage, and so forth, and entered into litigation which covered a period of years. In order to force everybody to take what the Director General would pay, he refused to pay anyone a portion of the loss until all would agree to accept a portion of the loss. This disgraceful procedure took time. When the citizens of a great Republic were given no other alternative than to sign on the dotted line, it took considerable time to settle the thousands of claims which had been filed. The last cases were not actually settled until 1927 or 1928. In 1929, in the "lame duck" session, the first bill was introduced in Congress by my predecessor. I took office on March 4, 1929, and at the regular December session that year I introduced a bill for the fire claimants. In March 1930 Ed. M. Erwin, Chairman of the Claims Committee, appointed a subcommittee to conduct hearings. These hearings were held. They extended over a period of several days and contained over 300 pages of testimony and evidence. The former Director General of Railroads appeared in opposition to the claims. This took several months, and Congress adjourned in 1930 with the bill still pending before the committee. At the third session of the Seventy-first Congress consideration of the bill was again had, and on February 17, 1931, Hon. Fred Johnson, of Nebraska, submitted a favorable report to the House. The bill was not reached on the Private Calendar. The bill was again favorably reported in the Seventy-second Congress, and one objection prevented its consideration. It passed the Senate in the Seventy-third Congress. I cite these facts to show that there has been proper diligence, and the bill is not "hoary with age", but has been properly before Congress, where action could not be obtained under the old rules of procedure, where one objection can stop a bill, no matter how meritorious.

Congressman Johnson of Nebraska, in his report in 1931, said, in part:

The testimony developed in the hearings on this case is uncontroverted as to the situation which resulted in part payment of the losses suffered by the fire claimants. The testimony leads to the conclusion that the fire sufferers were practically forced to accept such payments as the Director General of Railroads was willing to make. When he made those part payments it is true that the fire sufferers had no other alternative except to comply with his pronouncements. He required that a legal release of all claims against the Government be executed; he required that a legal stipulation for the entry of judgment be executed; he required that a legal satisfaction of judgment be signed and executed. He took all of these steps so as to forever bar any claimant from having any legal or equitable causes of action against the United States in any of its courts. The only redress, therefore, which the claimants in this bill have is a bill in Congress.

The Government is still indebted to them, in spite of these legal instruments, for the balance of a loss which was ascertained by the Government, on a liability that was established by the courts of Minnesota, and on which only partial payment has been made.

The United States insists that its citizens discharge their duties and obligations fully. In collecting income taxes, it does not accept a percentage of the amount due. The Government should, therefore, recognize its just obligations and, through Congress, ought to treat fairly with its citizens. Either the Government owed the fire sufferers the amount of loss which each of them sustained or else it owed them nothing. It recognized liability in making part payments on these claims. The only way that justice can be done is to pass this bill and pay the balance.

The above language is that of the Committee on Claims in 1931, and was the deliberate judgment of the committee after hearing witnesses and obtaining information as to the fire claims. The members of the Claims Committee were men of high standing. They would not, and did not, submit a report that was not correct and proper. When this claim was considered in the Senate last session, the same results were reached. Surely, those of us who are interested in this measure have proved the justice of these claims. It is unfair for one or two or three men, who did not hear the testimony, or consider it, and who cannot without long and careful study, know the facts, attempt to speak with authority on this measure, or successfully oppose its passage.

Read report no. 255, and note carefully Senator LOGAN'S report in the Seventy-third Congress, incorporated therein.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

TRIBUTE TO W. W. HOWES

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, a majority of the Congressmen come in contact frequently with our genial, accommodating First Assistant Postmaster General, W. W. Howes, and will verify my assertion that no man has ever occupied this important office who has been more conscientious, faithful, and efficient.

As a South Dakotan, I am especially proud of "Bill" Howes, and so are the people of my State in general, for he is one of us—a resident of Wolsey, a former State's attorney for Beadle County, and for years one of the most stalwart leaders of the Democracy of the State. Mr. Howes is still a comparatively young man, yet it is acknowledged by all who know him that he performs the multifarious and detailed duties of his difficult position with rare devotion as well as exceptional tact.

Back when the Democratic Party of South Dakota was in a hopeless minority, Mr. Howes was just as dependable and unwavering a Democrat as he is today. In the days when it seemed that no Democrat had a chance of winning an election, he fought battle after battle as cheerfully and energetically as though victory had been in sight. The years went on and his long and tireless efforts were crowned with success. No Democrat in the country had more right to rejoice over the final triumph than Mr. Howes. I campaigned with him, and I know how splendidly he gave his time and talents to the Democratic cause when defeat was a certainty.

Unlike some men in high office, Mr. Howes' promotion came as the reward of hard work and real service. For him there is no hour limit. He customarily works overtime. Early and late, day and night, he is at his office. It is no simple task to have the responsibility to greater or lesser extent for 48,000 postmasterships. After the Civil Service Commission has certified the names of the three eligibles for a postmastership, the recommendation of the Congressman or the local party organization of the one to be named goes to Mr. Howes for consideration and check-up before it is finally passed on to the Postmaster General. The immense amount of detail work involved may be realized in part, but it is far greater than can easily be realized.

Mr. Howes is a credit to the Nation, to his home State, to his party, and to himself. He is not only an able and painstaking official but he has steadily demonstrated that it is possible for a public servant to be kindly, thoughtful, considerate, and friendly. His friends are legion—as they ought to be—and they include almost as many Republicans as Democrats.

It is a pleasure to turn from ordinary routine of congressional duties and say a few well-merited words in behalf of Mr. Howes. It is my thought that it would not be out of place to make this a matter of record so that proper credit might be given such a splendid example of the best citizenship of governmental efficiency.

PREVENTION OF WAR

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection?

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, as a Member of this House who is both sincere in conviction on the subject and pledged to exert every possible effort to allay the hazards of war, I would like to consume this time so graciously accorded me in outlining a few aspects of the war problem which, I believe, have not yet been extensively examined in the course of current discussions.

While it is generally agreed that war should be abolished, and while sober thinkers realize that there is little possibility that any nation of the world not under the control of madmen would attempt armed invasion of another in the near future, it is too much to hope that another terrible world conflict is not inevitable. No. Of course, we do not want war—but we cannot help but recall the post-war remark of that war-time English statesman, Lloyd George, who said:

> No country really wanted war in 1914, but we gradually slid into it.

No country really wants war today, but once the conflagration starts and patriotism is fired up with martial music and propaganda, the demands of the mass of people will be such that sober reflection and calm judgment will be forced to give way to the feverish desire to annihilate the enemy. War is inevitable; even with all of its gruesome aspects, its vile frightfulness and brutality forever engraved on the minds of those who participated in the last one; with the horrors of human conflict, murderous and fatal, dimmed by a few intervening years, those who yesterday swore they would never again bear arms will be among the first to come forward to fight to the tune of "save democracy" or "down with tyrants" or another catch phrase of like ring.

Why is war inevitable?

While the answer to this question may easily be complicated by examination of historical precedent, it finally narrows down to the bare fact that the cause of war is economic, and as long as the ambitions of men direct them toward progress in trade and commerce, just so long will the desires of the nationals of one land conflict with those of another and ultimately lead to inhuman warfare among humans. The inception of war is motivated by the desire for human gain, in the first instance, and is always followed by a synthetic patriotism, fostered and nurtured into the actual and necessary patriotic fervor which is the prerequisite of the murder and suicide of war. This we well know. We also know that when war is imminent these facts are obscured as reason vanishes in the face of blind unreason.

Even in peace time we appear to find it difficult to get together on methods of minimizing war hazards. I quote a brief item entitled, "How to Abolish War Profits", taken from a recent issue of the United States News:

> Three clashing viewpoints on taking the profits out of war, as set forth in House committee hearings on the McSwain bill:
>
> For the veterans: "Freeze prices, equalize the recompense of workers and soldiers, license business, combat any strike of capital by martial law, seize all war profits."
>
> For organized labor: No conscription of labor; no freezing of prices, which would enrich employers as volume of production mounts.
> For steel manufacturers: Abolish war.
> The bills provisions, in line with recommendations of anti-profiteers Hugh S. Johnson and Bernard M. Baruch: Conscription of men between the ages of 21 and 30; Presidential power to fix prices, license business, determine priority for filling orders. Fine for violations, $100,000.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the McSwain bill to be an excellent measure. It is properly termed "a declaration of policy" and should become a powerful factor in preventing this country from going into war against another nation. I shall certainly vote for its adoption. I also am heartily in accord with the use of the taxing power of the Congress to eliminate any possibility that another world war will again produce in this country 21,000 new millionaires and give some 69,000 men an opportunity to divide war profits of $3,000,000,000, over and above normal profits, as was the case in the last war.

However, the McSwain bill and similar measures, although designed to help prevent war, cannot be regarded as more than one more step in the right direction, even if an extremely important one. After its adoption we must continue to cast about for other means of assuring world peace. We must carry on the good work of encouraging and executing peace pacts and nonaggression treaties, so that when the militaristic influences of the few countries which might feel compelled to fight over some real or imagined grievance would find few allies to join them.

The McSwain bill and the proposed taxing of war profits are, of course, based upon and justified by the idea that it is the duty of the individual citizen of the United States to abide by laws enacted by chosen representatives who, in effect, have a mandate from the people as a whole, demanding, among other things, that they—the representatives—make every possible effort to allay the possibilities of war.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if this particular mandate is not of sufficient importance to justify extraordinary measures of control. Should we not take every step possible in an effort to bring about the ultimate elimination of this uncivilized legal murder of human beings? If the answer to this question is in the affirmative—and I am confident that it will be—I propose that the Congress of the United States inform every citizen of this country that it shall be the duty of that citizen to not only subject himself to such rules of law as will prevent this country from going to war, but shall also refuse to profit by warfare between nations or within nations anywhere in the world. In other words, let us not only avoid such entanglements as a nation, but let us also discourage our citizens from participating, directly or indirectly, in the affairs of foreign nations at war.

The plan I propose is simple in conception, although admittedly complex as to execution. Through the power of Congress to tax incomes, I would impose a levy of 100 percent upon profits accruing to an American citizen from within any nation which happened to be in a state of war at the time such profits existed. This tax should apply with equal force whether the income entered the United States or remained on deposit abroad, and penalties for avoidance should be sufficiently stringent to compel compliance.

I am aware that such a law would cause a small reduction in our foreign trade from time to time, resulting in benefits for other countries, but if the nations of the world desire peace they will adopt similar laws. As a family of nations we talk, talk, and talk, and then talk some more about limiting armaments. We negotiate peace treaties. We send good-will ambassadors across international boundaries to cultivate friendship and understanding.

All of these moves are excellent and indispensable. But, if we know that war is primarily an economic problem why use half-measures in its prevention? Why not attack it in the same manner we go after other economic sore spots in our existence, by striking at the basic cause of the whole sorry mess—the desire for human gain.

What better method could be used to test the sincerity of all nations than to propose a treaty which would arbitrarily end profits for noncombatants, both as nations and individuals?

It is because I believe that this proposal should first be presented in the form of a treaty for legislative consideration that I have not drafted a measure along these lines. Also, I am as yet not sure as to the constitutionality of the taxing method proposed and shall require further time for study. If, however, an amendment to the Constitution is found necessary, I am sure the people of this country would vote almost unanimously in favor of its inclusion.

The proposal should be discussed from all angles before any definite plan is crystallized. It is with this thought in mind that I commend it to your consideration.

PROTECTION AGAINST SOIL EROSION

Mr. WHELCHEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHELCHEL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this occasion to voice my whole-hearted endorsement of the measure before the House today, H. R. 7054, the purpose of this bill being "to provide for the protection of land resources against soil erosion and the making of this project a permanent measure."

The bill itself is very explicit, and the information contained in its provisions set out fully the purposes, and I ask consent that said bill be included herein and made a part of my remarks.

A bill to provide for the protection of land resources against soil erosion, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That it is hereby recognized that the wastage of soil and moisture resources on farm, grazing, and forest lands of the Nation, resulting from soil erosion, is a menace to the national welfare and that it is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to provide for the control and prevention of soil erosion and thereby to preserve natural resources, control floods, prevent impairment of reservoirs, and maintain the navigability of rivers and harbors, protect public lands, and relieve unemployment, and the Secretary of Agriculture, from now on, shall coordinate and direct all activities with relation to soil erosion and in order to effectuate this policy is hereby authorized, from time to time—

(1) To conduct surveys, investigations, and research relating to the character of soil erosion and the preventive measures needed, to publish the results of any such surveys, investigations, or research, to disseminate information concerning such methods, and to conduct demonstrational projects in areas subject to erosion by wind or water;

(2) To carry out preventive measures, including, but not limited to, engineering operations, methods of cultivation, the growing of vegetation, and changes in use of land;

(3) To cooperate or enter into agreements with, or to furnish financial or other aid to, any agency, governmental or otherwise, or any person, subject to such conditions as he may deem necessary, for the purposes of this act; and

(4) To acquire lands, or rights or interests therein, by purchase, gift, condemnation, or otherwise, whenever necessary for the purposes of this act.

SEC. 2. The acts authorized in section 1 (1) and (2) may be performed—

(a) On lands owned or controlled by the United States or any of its agencies, with the cooperation of the agency having jurisdiction thereof; and

(b) On any other lands, upon obtaining proper consent or the necessary rights or interests in such lands.

SEC. 3. As a condition to the extending of any benefits under this act to any lands not owned or controlled by the United States or any of its agencies, the Secretary of Agriculture may, insofar as he may deem necessary for the purposes of this act, require—

(1) The enactment and enforcement of local laws imposing suitable permanent restrictions on the use of such lands and otherwise providing for the prevention of soil erosion;

(2) Agreements and/or covenants as to the permanent use of such lands; and/or

(3) Contributions in money, services, materials, or otherwise, to any operations conferring such benefits.

SEC. 4. For the purposes of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture may—

(1) Secure the cooperation of any governmental agency;

(2) Subject to the provisions of the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, appoint and fix the compensation of such officers and employees as he may deem necessary, except that employees of the organization heretofore established for the purpose of administering those provisions of sections 202 and 203 of the National Industrial Recovery Act which relate to the prevention of soil erosion may be continued without regard to the civil-service laws or regulations and the Classification Act for a period not to exceed 4 months from the date of this enactment; and any persons with technical and expert knowledge, connected with any educational or research institution, may be jointly employed and compensated under this act and by such institution on a basis to be determined by the Civil Service Commission; and

(3) Make expenditures for personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, for the purchase of law books and books of reference, for printing and binding, for the purchase, operation, and maintenance of passenger-carrying vehicles, and perform such acts, and prescribe such regulations, as he may deem proper to carry out the provisions of this act; and any violation of any such regulation shall be punishable by a fine of not to exceed $100.

SEC. 5. The Secretary of Agriculture shall establish an agency to exercise the powers conferred on him by this act and may utilize the organization heretofore established for the purpose of administering those provisions of sections 202 and 203 of the National Industrial Recovery Act which relate to the prevention of soil erosion, together with such personnel thereof as the Secretary of Agriculure may determine, and all unexpended balances of funds heretofore allotted to said organization which shall be available until June 30, 1937, and shall assume all obligations incurred by said organization prior to transfer to the Department of Agriculture. Funds provided in House Joint Resolution 117, "An act making appropriation for relief purposes" (for soil erosion) shall be available for expenditure under the provisions of this act; and in order that there may be proper coordination of erosion-control activities the Secretary of Agriculture may transfer to the agency created under this act such functions, funds, personnel, and property of other agencies in the Department of Agriculture as he may from time to time determine.

SEC. 6. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of this act such sums as Congress may from time to time determine to be necessary.

It is not my purpose, and in no wise do I attempt to discount the legislation being enacted by this Congress, but I do want to take this opportunity of saying, to my mind, the work being done, and that anticipated in regard to the erosion of our soil is of vast importance, and its value is inestimable to our Nation.

Never in the history of our country have the American people faced a situation so appalling, and unless something is done to check this waste, the fertility of our soil will be so depleted that from the standpoint of agriculture and earning a living from the soil it will be a thing of the past. May I say to you that there is in the approximate of 100,000 acres of land being laid in waste by this evil of soil erosion each year.

Of course, I can understand the damage in this connection. It is occasioned by winds in the Western States, but, in my opinion, this evil is doing its deadly work more where watersheds are in evidence than any other place. The fact is, the damage caused by wind erosion is small compared to the land made useless by water, and this is particularly so in north Georgia, and the whole piedmont belt. The fields which were fertile only a few years ago are today ravines and could be truthfully termed "waste lands."

Each year there has been carried from acres of this section many tons of fertile soil that it has taken years to place there by nature and the efforts of man and which is so valuable and means so much to the inhabitants of our country.

There is another evil to this situation, which is predominating in Georgia, and that is where the soil is washed from the lands in the northern portion of our State and these acres left bare. This same soil is being deposited in streams lower down in the State, and it is fast filling the beds of these streams, which causes the water to overflow its banks, and where there were once thousands of acres of fertile lowlands, today they are worthless swamps, made so by seepage from the streams that have been filled by this soil, and you can see from this that, not only is it causing the land in the northern portion of the State to be worthless but it is working such damage to the lowlands that they are becoming untenable and worthless, also, and from this explanation you can see that this soil erosion in Georgia has a twofold evil.

Much has been said, and justly so, in tribute of two men, Hon. H. H. Bennett and Hon. Samuel W. Phillips, who, it is contended, have been instrumental in furtherance of soil erosion in the United States. I would not detract from this praise given these gentlemen, but may I call your attention to the untiring efforts of Hon. Loy E. Rast, regional director of this project, of Athens, Ga.?

It was through this gentleman that I became interested in soil erosion and to really see its value. On every occasion Mr. Rast presented this evil to the people, and, to my mind, he is outstanding in this work and too much cannot be said in his behalf, and I think it is nothing but fair that mention should be made of the splendid results he has attained in Georgia. The people feel that they have, in this gentleman, one whose interest is their interest, in this pioneering soil-erosion project.

In conclusion, may I say that in my opinion this is one of the most important measures presented to Congress, certainly since my stay here, and one that should receive the unqualified support of every American.

REREFERENCE OF BILL

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, in the transfer of bills from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, one bill was overlooked. I therefore ask unanimous consent that H. R. 6119 be referred from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

IDENTITIES OF INTEREST IN RESTORING FOREIGN TRADE

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a speech made by Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace, on World Trade. It is a good speech.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is impossible for the Members of the House to hear what these requests are.

Mr. MAVERICK. I asked unanimous consent to print a speech made by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace on the subject of World Trade.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, in the series of radio broadcasts on world trade and recovery, Washington, D. C., March 30, 1935:

We are now in the seventeenth year since the close of the Great War. Throughout these years people of vision in every country have sought to persuade their countrymen along paths that would lead them out of the wilderness of hatred, chaos, and despair into the promised land of a new world order. Undaunted by reverses and disappointments on all sides, these practical idealists have fought on for policies founded on a spirit of peaceful cooperation between nations.

Yet from the first they have struggled against terrific odds. Instead of unity of purpose and breadth of understanding, so essential to restoring the world to economic health, the spirit of hatred, suspicion, and of intense and narrow nationalism engendered by war remained predominant. Finally in 1929 the whole world economic fabric gave way under the cumulative impact of nationalistic policies. In the severe world depression that has followed, nation after nation has sought refuge in measures of economic exclusion, whose only effect has been to intensify the very disease with which all are afflicted.

The story of our own contribution to the development of this world malady is one upon which I need not dwell. We raised our tariffs higher and higher in amazing disregard of the fact that we had become a great creditor country and one still heavily dependent upon export trade. When we should have lowered our tariffs, we raised them; when we should have accepted more imports, we shut the door against them; when we loaned vast sums abroad, we refused to let our debtors pay us back in the only way they could—in goods.

It is a discouraging fact that we have not yet learned how a mature creditor nation must behave. Five years of depression have not convinced us, apparently, that there is any relationship between foreign trade and national welfare. Individuals, industries, even whole localities and regions whose very life depends upon the restoration of foreign trade, have thus far failed to grasp the true realities of the situation. If they do not become aware of their true interests, the contest will go by default, and it will go 100 percent against them.

Let me begin by reminding you of what has actually taken place with respect to world trade and our own share in it. In 1929 the gold value of the foreign commerce of the world aggregated $69,000,000,000. By 1933 it had declined to twenty-four billion, and in 1934 was probably not far from that figure. Thus, in value, world trade has fallen to but a third of its 1929 level. In actual quantity the decline has been much less than this, because for many commodities entering into world trade the effects of the depression and of trade barriers have been felt primarily in lower prices rather than reduced volume of shipments. Nevertheless, the actual quantity of goods moving in international trade had by 1933 declined to about three-fourths of what it was in 1929, and is still probably not far from that figure.

Our own foreign trade has fared even worse. In value it declined from a little less than $10,000,000,000 in 1929 to less than $4,000,000,000 in 1934, in United States dollars, but to about $2,500,000,000 if figured on the old gold basis. In terms of quantity it amounted in 1934 to only 60 percent of the 1929 volume. What has happened is that we have not only suffered a trade loss since 1929 aggregating in value something like $30,000,000,000, but have also been securing a progressively smaller share of the reduced world trade. Indeed, our share of the world's trade has declined more than that of almost every other country. In 1929 we obtained 13.8 percent of the total world trade. By 1934 our share had fallen to 9.8 percent. Thus our share relative to that of the other countries actually fell by nearly 30 percent. What this means is that a considerable part of our trade loss represents actual diversion of trade to other countries. It will not be easy to recapture.

Foreign trade means bread and butter to millions of people in this country. Relatively few of them seem to realize it. The cotton farmer may know very well that perhaps half his production will be sold abroad, but the railroad employee may not give much thought to the fact that he derives part of his earnings from moving these export and import products. That part of the cargo from our farms, factories, mines, and forests which enters into export trade must move by rail or truck or steamer to one of our port cities and in moving creates employment for thousands of people engaged in transportation, and for the people engaged in manufacture of transportation equipment, in producing coal or oil, or in selling merchandise to the workers. About 10 percent of the workers of this country are in the transportation and communication business. Moreover, it must be remembered that such cargo, after arrival at the port, furnishes livelihood for clerks in export houses, for stevedores, insurance men and brokers, bankers, sailors, and all the other people dependent on shipping. The same can be said of imports. What all this means to our port cities and to transportation agencies, among others, is regularly ignored.

Consider, for example, what has happened with respect to the volume of goods moving through some of our leading port cities. Take New York City. In the year ended June 30, 1929, nearly 29,000,000 tons of goods moved through the port of New York. By 1933 the total had declined to 12,700,000 tons, and though it increased to 15,500,000 tons in 1934, it was still scarcely more than half the 1929 figure.

Philadelphia's foreign trade fell from 6,500,000 tons in 1929 to less than 4,000,000 tons by 1933. Baltimore fared still worse, for its foreign commerce fell from 6,400,000 tons to a little over 2,000,000 tons in the same period. Boston's trade was more than cut in half by 1933, while New Orleans and the minor Louisiana ports saw their commerce fall from 10,400,000 tons to 3,500,000, or little more than one-third the 1929 figure. The California ports suffered less, but their tonnage fell from 10,500,000 long tons in 1929 to 6,900,000 tons in 1933, and the ports of Washington State found tonnage dropping from 4,000,000 tons down to 1,700,000.

The past year has seen some recovery in volume, but our foreign trade is still only 60 percent of the predepression tonnage, and distress in the port cities is still very great. Baltimore has 16.4 percent of its families on relief. New York has 19.4 percent, San Francisco 20 percent, Boston 24 percent, and New Orleans 25.4 percent. Of course, it is not to be supposed that more than a part of these families come from the group normally obtaining its livelihood directly from foreign trade. Yet who will question what a godsend it would be to these port cities if trade were restored.

There would be increased work for thousands of sailors and stevedores, for laborers in repair plants and shipbuilding yards, for clerks in shipping offices, bankers, and trading firms, for truckmen now out of work by the thousands, for railroad employees, and for the much larger number of people who live by selling supplies directly or indirectly to people engaged in foreign trade.

Consider further what the decline of foreign trade has meant to ocean shipping in terms of idle tonnage and of empty cargo space in vessels under operation. Despite the decline of about 25 percent in the volume of international trade since 1929, world tonnage of vessels of 100 gross tons or over (which would include coastwise shipping) has declined by only about 5 percent. Between January 1, 1930, and January 1, 1933, idle tonnage of vessels of 100 gross tons or over more than quadrupled, increasing three and one-tenth million to twelve and seven-tenths million tons. Our own idle tonnage increased from 2,000,000 to three and five-tenths million. Since that time normal retirement and subsidized scrapping of tonnage in other countries have cut the idle world tonnage to a little more than double what it was in 1930.

Although on January 1, 1934, the volume of world sea-borne trade was less than in 1913, the carrying capacity of ocean shipping was 75 percent greater than in 1913. Although freight earnings per ton of cargo were no higher than in 1913, the expenses of ship operation were estimated to be 40 percent higher. The freight losses to shipping engaged in American foreign trade since 1929 are reflected in the decline of 40 percent in tonnage transported and in an aggregate loss of some 174,000,000 tons that would have been carried during 1930–34 if there had been no recession of trade after 1929.

Now consider what the decline in our foreign trade has meant to the railroads. Apparently no detailed study of this sort has ever been made. We can get some idea of the magnitude of the loss, however, by referring to two specific cases for which it has been possible to work out rough estimates. The first includes automobiles, trucks, and automobile parts. On this item alone it is estimated that the decline in exports has resulted in an aggregate loss of revenue to the railroads for the 5-year period 1930–34, inclusive, running in the neighborhood of $70,000,000. The other item is wheat and flour. From the decline in this item the loss of revenue to the railroads during the same 5-year period appears to have been in the neighborhood of $80,000,000.

For some items the decline in actual volume shipped for export has not been great. This was notably true, until recently, in the important case of cotton. However, on the basis of very rough calculations, I am inclined to think that the aggregate loss of revenue to the railroads from the decline of our entire foreign trade during the period since 1929 would amount to at least a billion dollars and probably nearer a billion and a half.

Finally, there are the producers of the things that we export. They are, of course, the most important of the groups adversely affected by the trade decline. The prosperity of our export industries, including those branches of agriculture which normally export a large part of their output, is of the greatest importance to the welfare of the country. In 1929 such industries employed over 7,000,000 workers out of a total of less than 50,000,000 persons gainfully employed in the United States. It is estimated that no less than two and one-half million persons were engaged in producing goods for export. If one includes the families of such persons, this means that some ten millions of our population were directly dependent for their livelihood upon production for export.

Moreover, these workers were in large measure concentrated in certain industries and areas. As a result, the decline in exports has tended to disrupt business much more than it would if this labor and capital had been more generally distributed throughout the country. This is particularly true in the case of agriculture. The 2,000,000 cotton farmers sell more than half of their crop abroad. Forty percent of our tobacco is exported, nearly half of our dried fruit, and about a quarter of our canned fruit. In 1929 a third of our lard went abroad, but restrictions imposed by foreign countries cut this down to quarter by 1933. About two-thirds of the gum rosin produced in this country is exported and more than half of our gum turpentine, as well as large proportions of a multitude of other products of the farm and forest.

Our great manufacturing industries for the most part have not been so dependent upon foreign trade as the farmers raising export crops, but their stake is much larger than is commonly supposed. Approximately 15 percent of all industrial machinery is exported and a quarter of the agricultural implements. From 5 to 10 percent of our automobiles are exported. Forty percent or so of our refined copper is sent abroad as well as a substantial part of a vast number of other industrial products. It is hardly necessary to enumerate the long list of manufactured and mineral products which we export, or were exporting before the depression.

The loss of export markets has been a severe blow to branches of agriculture and industry, such as those that I have just mentioned, which have built up their plant to provide for both the domestic and foreign demand. In many cases exports have declined to a fraction of the former figure. Although exports in 1934, because of improved economic conditions and devaluation of the dollar, were somewhat greater than in the previous year, the volume was nevertheless pitifully small.

The loss to the country from this shrinkage of foreign trade has been far greater, I repeat, than most of our people even faintly suspect. In no small degree it has been responsible for the depth and length to which the depression has extended. Yet the fundamental cause of the decline in exports still persists. We are not importing enough goods to enable our foreign customers to buy more from us.

The volume of our exports depends upon the volume of goods which this country will accept in payment. The nature of our international transactions is such that our only hope of increasing exports again is to increase imports even more. Indeed, I will go further and say that in order to maintain even our present level of exports this country must import more goods and services from abroad.

During the past year the deficiency of imports was made up with gold. Few foreign countries can part with much more without undermining the bases of their currencies. Not only are we faced, therefore, with the possibility of a continuation of exports at the present low level, but we are in real and immediate danger of a still further recession unless steps are taken to make possible greater imports from abroad.

Nevertheless, the simple fact that if we are to have any exports we must have imports gets only lip service throughout the country. Minority groups, among whom tariff-protected groups are plentiful, clamor as of old for special favors enabling them to grab a larger share of the national income. Of 177 bills or resolutions involving foreign trade introduced into Congress up to the 1st of March, only 5 seemed designed to increase imports, while 56 were designed to restrict them even further.

This pressure of interested groups for still further restrictions upon imports, though discouraging in present circumstances, is not surprising. It is, after all, an old story. It has, however, been something of a surprise to me to find advocates of continued, or even more severe, trade restriction among some impartial students whose intellectual integrity cannot be doubted. Some of them take the view that this country should maintain barriers sufficiently high to exclude everything that can be produced in this country. Others seem to feel that we should not permit imports of goods which can be produced efficiently in the United States; but in failing to define what they mean by efficiency, they leave us in great doubt as to what goods would in fact be permitted to get in.

We can, of course, exclude all goods even remotely competitive. The trend of opinion seems to be in that direction. There is still, as I reckon it, about a third of our import trade that might conceivably be called "competitive" if we stretched the word "competitive" to include everything that our domestic industries contend is competitive. Some would even go further and say that bananas compete with apples, or coffee with milk and soft drinks.

But if we refuse to import more goods, or insist upon still further elimination of imports, we ought at least to be prepared to face the consequences. We must be prepared for economic and social readjustments of the most far-reaching kind. In agriculture alone, as I have repeatedly pointed out, we would have to make permanent the retirement of from 40 to 100 million acres of crop land. We would be faced with the necessity of a regimentation of our economic life and of our activities in general compared with which such measures as the Agricultural Adjustment Act would seem quite insignificant. This, as I have often stated, is not the course that I would prefer. The pain of adjustment would be less, I think, if we took a planned middle course; one which might perhaps call for imports of an additional half billion dollars' worth of goods annually, and for the permanent withdrawal of either 25,000,000 acres of good farm land or an equivalent amount of poor farm land.

In order to follow such a course we shall have to reduce our tariff. Against great obstacles we are now endeavoring to do this. Under authority of the trade agreements act, passed last year, we are negotiating trade agreements with foreign countries providing for reciprocal trade concessions. Progress thus far has been retarded by a number of factors: Delays involved in organizing the program; new problems of trade negotiation arising from the complex character of present-day trade restrictions; and the many obstacles always inherent in any attempt to reduce trade barriers. Nevertheless, progress has been made. Agreements have been negotiated with Cuba, Brazil, Belgium, and Haiti, and are in process of negotiation with a large number of others. Of the four that have been negotiated, only one—that with Cuba—has gone into effect.

Our experience under the Cuban agreement has been illuminating. I will not burden you with the long list of concessions made by Cuba on both agricultural and manufactured products. Two items will do for illustration, namely, lard and automobiles.

On lard the duty was cut from the prohibitive rate of 9.6 cents a pound to 2.3 cents; in other words, to about a fourth its previous level. Moreover, during the second year of the agreement, the duty will be further reduced to 1.9 cents a pound, and during the third year, to 1.5 cents—less than a sixth of the old rate.

Until she began imposing prohibitive duties, Cuba had long been one of our most important outlets for lard. Already, our lard exports to Cuba have shown a marked response to the duty cut, and this has been in spite of the sharp rise in domestic lard prices in recent months. For the year 1934 our shipments to Cuba were well over twice the amount shipped in 1933, although the new rates did not go into effect until late in August. During the last 4 months of the year our shipments were nearly three times what they had been during the last 4 months of 1933. During the first 2 months of the present year, though our total exports of lard to all countries were only a little more than a third of what they were last year, our shipments to Cuba were about three times the amount shipped last year. These are most encouraging indications that under reasonably normal conditions Cuba will again become a major export outlet for American lard.

On automobiles the duties were cut by about a half on the lower-priced cars and about a third on the medium-priced. For the entire year 1934 shipments to Cuba were almost three times those in 1933. During the 4 months following the signing of the agreement they were nearly 9 times what they had been during the same period of 1933. During the first 2 months of this year they were 10 times the quantity shipped during the same months last year.

The trade-agreements program has been achieving real results, but it has been doing so without anything like the body of public support that must come if the possibilities of the program are to be fully realized. While its enemies have been hard at work, most of its friends have been asleep. Without an aroused and intelligent public opinion in support of trade agreements they cannot continue.

This means, first of all, that there must be a clear understanding of what the restoration of our foreign trade will mean to our people and, conversely, what the failure to restore it will mean to them. If, in the light of these alternatives, they choose a policy of trade rather than economic isolation, they must then be prepared to take the steps that are necessary in order to restore trade. This means that they will have to do more than lip service to the axiom that it is necessary to buy in order to sell. They will have to begin opposing, instead of proposing, measures of trade exclusion. They will have to get squarely behind the trade-agreements program and every other sound measure for the restoration of trade.

Particularly is it appropriate that I should stress the interest of agriculture in this matter. There are a few groups of producers in agriculture who derive immediate benefits from duties on their products. But throughout almost our entire history the bulk of our farmers have been engaged in producing things the prices of which are determined in world markets, but they have bought their necessities in the protected domestic market. In short, most of them have been buying in a protected market and selling in a free market. Through recent adjustment measures of a stop-gap character this balance against the farmers has been partly redressed. Fundamentally, however, our agriculture is still organized to produce vast surpluses for export. For the majority of farmers, therefore, a revival of our foreign trade will bring direct and important gains. For all of them, I am inclined to think, it will ultimately bring large benefits, for it must be remembered that those farmers who are not on the export market themselves will be materially affected by producers whose export market is denied them. I hope that the true identity of interest that exists between the farmer and the transportation worker, between the interior and the seaboard, can be discovered and put to work before it is too late.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes at the conclusion of the remarks by the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether this is going to be on the controversy raging between himself and the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. TREADWAY. No. This has nothing to do with any previous remarks.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I have been endeavoring to draw these requests to a close.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is the day we take up the Consent Calendar. A considerable amount of time has been taken up, and if these speeches are going to continue, we will not be able to reach the Consent Calendar at all.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have only requested 5 minutes. Will the gentleman from Virginia suggest when time may be secured?

Mr. BLAND. It may be secured on any appropriation bill. There are appropriation bills coming on later.

Mr. TREADWAY. In a week or two hence.

Mr. McFARLANE demanded the regular order.

Mr. BLAND. I will not object to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] or the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], but I shall object to any more unanimous-consent requests along that line.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

STATUE TO GEN. ROBERT E. LEE AT ARLINGTON, VA.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the time has come to put at rest any lingering enmity, animosity, or resentment arising out of the Civil War. We are a united Nation with a common interest in the destiny of our Republic, no matter what section of the country we come from. The past differences between the North and South must be forever buried, and all sections of the country must present a solid and united front in defense of the ideals and principles of government which they cherish and to uphold them against our enemies from within who seek to tear them down and destroy our free institutions and republican form of government.

With this purpose in view and in a spirit of good will, and to further cement the feeling of unity between the North and South, engendered by both the Spanish and World Wars, I introduced today a resolution authorizing funds to erect an equestrian statue of Gen. Robert E. Lee, to be located at Arlington, Va., his home prior to the Civil War, and where both northern and Confederate soldiers have found their last resting place.

General Lee's ancestors fought in the Revolutionary War. He was a graduate of West Point, served with distinction in the Mexican War, was Superintendent of the Military Academy at West Point, and commander in chief of the Confederate armies in the field. Robert E. Lee is universally beloved and esteemed in the North and South for his private as well as public qualities. He was one of the most remarkable men in American history, of lofty and pure character, an able, brilliant, and daring general, who ranks not only among the most famous of our own country but of any nation and of any time. Even in defeat he retained the affection and faith of his troops and the respect of General Grant and his victorious army and of the people of the North. Time will increase his fame and the high regard in which he is held by the American people, regardless of partisanship and sectionalism.

There is a splendid equestrian statue of General Grant in a conspicuous place between the Capitol and the Washington Monument. There are also equestrian statues of other famous northern generals, such as Sherman, Thomas, and Sheridan, located throughout the city of Washington.

I shall ask for a public hearing on the resolution so that ample opportunity will be afforded to American citizens to express their sentiments on honoring the name and fame of Gen. Robert E. Lee, one of the noblest characters and greatest generals born in America. There are few survivors of the Grand Army of the Republic, but I am confident that they would be among the first to pay tribute to the memory of their gallant foe.

WHY NOT HAVE A VOTE ON THE TOWNSEND OLD-AGE REVOLVING PENSION PLAN?

Mr. TOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOLAN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Townsend old-age pension plan, now before Congress, is entitled from every standpoint to a record vote before adjournment. Without criticizing anyone, calling any names, or becoming excited, let us approach this matter calmly and fairly, and ascertain if this great humanitarian measure is not of sufficient importance for the hired servants of the people, their agents and representatives in Congress, to record their vote for or against the Townsend old-age pension plan.

A very short while ago there was a humble, lovable, physician, with scarcely any means whatever, attending the poor, the sick, and the dying in and about Long Beach, Calif. He was a kindly man, going about doing good and worrying over the distress and poverty of the people. He lay awake nights, and, finally, in his golden heart and fertile mind, he evolved what is now known as the "Townsend old-age revolving pension plan." This man was Dr. Townsend—and that name will go down into the ages remembered, honored, and loved, for he has made America "old-age-pension conscious."

As the idea grew within him he gave up his practice, transmitted his enthusiasm to others, and from an humble and almost impossible beginning he has thousands upon thousands of Townsend clubs throughout the United States and approximately one-fifth of our population, or 25,000,000 signatures, on petitions in favor of the Townsend plan. Surely, they cannot all be wrong.

Dr. Townsend has never had a thought of himself and does not now. They claim it is a money scheme, and that he has made money out of it. I deny this charge and challenge anyone to prove it. Just take a look at his kindly, honest face and frail form, practically giving up his life for the love of his fellow men, and there you will find your answer.

What is this plan? First, to effect and maintain complete recovery in the United States and sustain this prosperity by a sufficient supply of purchasing power; secondly, to create a condition of employment assurance by replacing those over 60 now employed with younger workers who are walking the streets, thousands of them high school and college graduates; thirdly, to create a retirement fund for each individual who can and does qualify upon reaching the age of 60.

Logically, the next question is: "How and where are we going to raise the money to pay each person over 60 years of age $200 a month?" Permit me to quote an economist, one of the most noted in the United States. I quote Dr. Robert R. Doane, one of the foremost economists of our time. Dr. Doane is a professor and lecturer in schools of economics, a consultant of the United States Departments of Labor and Commerce, and, in addition, to 15 other outstanding national organizations. The following are his exact words:

> The cumulative effect of a uniform Nation-wide turnover tax at the low rate of 2 percent on limited transactions could easily put a stop to further Budget deficit and finance such a social security program as envisaged by the Townsend plan.
> Certainly sufficient funds could be raised by this turnover tax to more than care for the social security program now before the country.
> The turnover method of taxation is an equitable and fair way to provide means to pay as you go the service charge of Government that will bring revenue and a blessing to all business and social enterprises once it is put into action.

"Where are we going to get the money?" This cry has echoed and reechoed down the ages when any measures for the welfare of the many instead of the few have been proposed. This question was not asked in 1917 and 1918 when we spent in about 17 months nearly $40,000,000,000. Twenty billions of it for shot and shell, death and destruction. Thousands of American boys are sleeping their eternal sleep beneath the soil of Flanders field. Nine billion dollars were spent to feed the hungry and starving of Europe. But it is a different story when it is even mentioned that we should take care of the poor and aged of our own country.

When Lincoln first suggested taking the chains off of millions of slaves a roar of protest went up. The argument was made that it was impossible and impracticable, for the reason that labor could not be obtained to take the place of the slave. Yet the emancipation proclamation will go down in history as an immortal document, and Lincoln is considered the tenderest memory in our history.

Where is the money coming from to take care of the aged of this country?

I ask you, where does the money come from to pay nearly $2,000,000,000 a year for direct help, crime, and welfare work in this Nation? Where does the money come from to pay millions and millions every year to paint the lips and cheeks of the women of this country? This remark may not help me with the ladies, but it goes anyway. Where does the money come from to pay our terrible bills for cheating and killing each other? Where do the billions come from for automobiles, airplanes, and injuries and deaths that result from our speed mania? When we dare mention anything for father and mother and their old age we are laughed at.

Maybe I am old-fashioned, but I say to Congress that never since man was first created did a son or a daughter ever live to see the day that they regretted being good to father and mother. Never will any nation ever fall for taking adequate care of the aged and the helpless.

When I was a boy I heard my mother sing a thousand times and more, Over the Hills to the Poorhouse, I Wander Alone and to Die; now it is Over the Hills to the County Hospital, I Wander Alone and to Die. Why, that little, frail mother of mine, with 11 children, carrying a load the average man would break under—I know just what she would say, "Son, you be good to the old folks, and God will bless you."

This is old-fashioned, I know, but I am just a new Member and will let it stand. Living with me in Oakland, Calif., for 15 years, she is the sweetest memory of my life, and the hands that used to feed me and cool my fevered brow now touch me only in my dreams. But if she were living today, I would love to fold her in my arms and never let her go. So Members of Congress, if this is old-fashioned, make the most of it.

Dr. Townsend has, to my mind, one of the most humane and helpful ideas since Lincoln freed the slaves. It is not perfect; what measure of man is perfect? There is hope, sweetness, and love in the Townsend old-age pension plan.

But they tell us it is a crime for Dr. Townsend and his supporters to offer hope to the old folks of this country through an impracticable plan. Who knows today what will work and what will not work?

Is this plan practicable? I claim any plan is practicable which absorbs hundreds of thousands of indigent inmates of poor farms, poorhouses, and other charitable institutions, some supported by city, county, State, and fraternal organizations. All of these people, at the age of 60, would come within the provisions of the Townsend plan, removing a huge tax burden.

This plan would take the aged of this country, lonely and destitute, from the county poor farms and county hospitals and place them in their own homes. Do you not think they would be happier with their own cookstove, their own furniture, their own beds, and their own neighbors to talk to?

We can pass unanimously in the House and Senate a monetary plan that would prove useless and impracticable tomorrow. We think we know, but in these fast-changing international times we know very little. Not one single individual ever died on account of hope, but rather from a lack of it. Hope is the white light burning in every human heart; the thought that we will be happier tomorrow than today. When that light goes out we are done, for life is such a difficult game and there are so many things over which we have no control—financial troubles, sickness, and death—but always, high up in the blue skies, shines the silver star of human hope.

Two thousand years ago a man came upon this earth and said, "Love thy neighbor as thyself." It was a simple doctrine, but it still stands unrecalled. After 2,000 years we have been trying to improve on that doctrine, but have failed miserably. Times have proven that if we do not take care of our neighbors voluntarily, we will be obliged to take care of them involuntarily, as we are doing today, when we have over 20,000,000 people on the relief roll.

I say to my colleagues, in all humility, for I honestly feel that I know so little, "Do you not think that we should forget for a moment our selfish pride and individual bills, our pet ideas, and pay attention to a great humanitarian measure like the Townsend old-age-pension plan?"

Do you not think one-fifth of our people, in favor of a certain measure, are entitled to at least a vote? Again I say they cannot all be wrong. Parliamentary procedure or no parliamentary procedure, do you not think that the millions of mothers of this country who went into the shadow of death for you and me are entitled to a hearing? I am not mentioning father, for he will get along somehow.

Do you not think these millions of American people who are in favor of the Townsend plan are entitled to have this measure brought on the floor of the House for a vote? If you have any amendments as to the amount or otherwise, let us debate them. Let us not laugh at the hopes of the old folks of this country.

Let me appeal to you to give the old folks a vote on the Townsend old-age-pension plan. Can you not sense the voices of these mighty millions? Can you not hear the countless prayers on bended knees, in hovels of mud and misery, in the desert shack and in the farmhouse, in the foreclosed home, in the hearts and souls of millions of our troubled people who sacrificed so that our Nation is what it is today? They feel that it is their only hope against the poverty and misery of old age.

I know that you will give them a record vote, and for my poor little 1-vote self, so there will be no misunderstanding, I shall take my stand alongside of the poor, the troubled, the aged, the lonely, the helpless, and voiceless of this country and vote for and support the Townsend old-age-pension plan. And if it goes down—well, you can just laugh at me if you want to, but I will go down with it just the same.

THE EFFICACY OF THE LOTTERY

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short editorial appearing in the Evening Record, of Hackensack, N. J.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, the colony of New Jersey had its seat of government at Burlington in 1772. On November 28 of that year, Governor Franklin (son of Benjamin), of New Jersey, transmitted to the Earl of Dartmouth the Minutes of Council and Assembly in a letter wherein he wrote:

I have the Honour to transmit to Your Lordship by this opportunity Copies of the Journals of the Privy and Legislative Council, the Votes of the Assembly and the Laws passed at the last Session held at Perth Amboy. Of these, three are passed with Clauses suspending their taking effect until His Majesty's Pleasure shall be signified thereupon viz.

The acts referred to were:

First—

An Act for establishing the Boundary or partition Line between the Colonies of New York & Nova Caesarea or New Jersey, and for confirming the Titles & possessions.

Second—

An Act to enable all Persons who are His Majesty's Liege Subjects, either by Birth or Naturalization, to inherit and hold real Estates, notwithstanding any defects of Purchases made before Naturalization within this Colony.

Third—

An Act to enable certain persons to erect and draw a Lottery for raising the Sum of One Thousand & fifty pounds, to be applied for the purposes therein mentioned.

With respect to the lottery act, Governor Franklin said:

The principal purpose of this Lottery is to defray the Expenses of making a Road that will be highly beneficial to the Inhabitants settled in the North Eastern parts of this province, and to the City of New York, which must otherwise fall upon a public spirited Gentleman who has already expended considerable Sums on that account. This Law being of immediate necessity, it would be extremely agreeable to the Inhabitants of that part of the Colony to have His Majesty's Confirmation of it as soon as possible, and I cannot but earnestly recommend it to Your Lordship.

The road, it seems, had been constructed by Col. John Scuyler, at his own expense, some years before, for 3 miles from his copper mine at Second River to the main road leading from Newark to New York.

Royal assent to the act was finally had and the road funds were raised by lottery.

Subsequently the seat of the Colonial Government removed to Perth Amboy and then New Jersey joined the Continental Congress.

In the documents relating to the Colonial History of New Jersey prepared and edited by authority of the State, at the request of the New Jersey Historical Society (newspaper extracts) are found interesting reference to numerous lotteries held from time to time for various worthy purposes.

From the New York Mercury of December 3, 1759, there is mention of the lottery conducted for the benefit of the Lutheran Church in Hackensack, N. J. To quote, in part, from the reference:

SCHEME OF A LOTTERY

For repairing of the Lutheran Church, in Hackensack, erected and to be drawn near Shuter's Island, about Two Miles from Elizabeth—Town Point; consisting of Four Thousand Tickets, at Two Dollars each: * * *

The Drawing to commence on the 11th day of December inst. if full, under the Inspection and Management of Lawrence Van Buskirk, Jacob Titsort, Johannes Demarest, Esquires, Capt. Jacobus Van Buskirk, Lawrence Van Horn, and John Vanorden; who are to be under Oath for the true Performance of the Trust reposed in them.

On behalf of the lottery the Pennsylvania Journal, No. 843, February 1, 1759, printed the following:

TO THE INHABITANTS OF PENNSYLVANIA

In the Pennsylvania Journal of November 30th, and in that of January 25th, an indiscriminate charge is brought against lotteries, as in their own nature irreligious, and ruinous to society in their consequences. * * * It would be endless for me to mention, many lotteries carried on by the Trustees of the College of New Jersey (now Princeton), the governments of New York and Connecticut, and almost every other on the continent. Yet all these this writer brings under the general imputation of being the enemys of Religion and of the Poor, the abettors and patrons of the most contagious and dangerous vice. * * *

Is the use of lots forbidden by God in scripture? By no means; he ordered his chosen tribes to use them in the division of their inheritance. Are they contrary to the Christian revelation? So far from it, that we know they were used by the apostles themselves.

From the archives of the General Assembly of the Province of New Jersey we have recorded under date of March 10, 1762, the following:

That the Speaker with the House waited upon the Governor who gave assent to the following bills.

* * * * * * *

2. An Act to impower the Church-Wardens and Vestry-Men of St. Mary's Church in the City of Burlington, to raise by Lottery a Sum of Money for repairing the Church, Parsonage-House and Burying-Ground in said City.

3. An Act to impower the Managers of the Bound-Brook Bridge, in the County of Somerset, to raise by Lottery, a Sum of Money for rebuilding and compleating the said Bridge.

In the New York Mercury of January 9, 1764, is found the following announcement:

SCHEME OF A LOTTERY FOR THE USE OF THE COLLEGE OF NEW JERSEY

The Legislature of the Colony of New Jersey, having been pleased to countencae this rising Seat of Learning, so far as to pass an Act, enabling the Trustees to erect and draw a Lottery, for raising any sum, not exceeding Three Thousand Pounds, Proclamation Money; it is hoped, that the generous Design in making this Law, will be carried into Execution, by all those who wish well to the Institution, or who are desirous of promoting useful Knowledge in these Infant Countries, and preparing our own Youth to sustain the publick Offices in Church and State. The following Scheme is calculated for raising the Sum of Two Thousand Nine Hundred and Ninety-nine Pounds Eighteen Shillings and Six Pence Proclamation Money: * * *

The New York Gazette, or the Weekly Post Boy, no. 1517, May 11, 1772, carries the following:

ROAD LOTTERY

For raising the Sum of Five Hundred Pounds, to be applied in erecting Bridges, and in repairing the Post-Road leading from Powles- Hook Ferry to the City of Albany, through the Counties of Bergen, Orange, Ulster and Albany.

The New York Journal, or the General Advertiser, no. 1537, June 18, 1772, carries this announcement:

SCHEME OF A LOTTERY

For raising the Sum of Four Hundred and Fifty Pounds, New-York Currency, for the Benefit of Christ Church, in New- Brunswick. * * *

The Congregation of Christ Church, being under the Necessity of proposing this Lottery, in Order to assist them in erecting a Steeple, and making some Necessary Repairs to their Church; hope it will meet with a favorable Reception from the Public * * *

In the New York Gazette, or the Weekly Post Boy, no. 1537, September 28, 1772, is found the following:

WOODBRIDGE LOTTERY

For raising the Sum of One Hundred and Sixty-eight Pounds, New York Currency, for repairing and finishing of the Metuchin Presbyterian Meeting House, in the upper part of said Woodbridge, in the Province of East- New Jersey.

Another church lottery was conducted to raise the sum of £545, New York money, for the benefit of the Presbyterian Society at Springfield in east New Jersey.

In the announcement of April 29, 1773, Rivington's New York Gazetteer, no. 2, it is set forth:

The Church is enclosed, but Money is wanting to finish it. The good People of this Country are therefore earnestly intreated to contribute their Assistance that the Tickets may be immediately disposed of, and the Inhabitants assemble together for the Performance of Divine Worship. * * *

The Delaware lottery was conducted primarily for the benefit of the College of New Jersey (now Princeton). It asked for the raising of £5,626, or $15,000, for the use of the College of New Jersey, the Presbyterian congregation at Princeton, and the united Presbyterian congregations of New Castle and Christiana Bridge.

Rivington's New York Gazetteer, no. 4, May 13, 1773, sets forth the following regarding it:

The growing importance of the College of New- Jersey, for the use of which the above Lottery is principally designed, is now generally known through every province of America. It has hitherto subsisted, and been raised to its present situation, entirely by the favour of the public. In the center of North- America, and in a pleasant healthy country, it is well fitted for the most extensive usefulness. The success which hath attended the vigorous efforts already made to raise its funds, and furnish the means of a compleat and finished education, to all who are sent to it, has encouraged those concerned in the present attempt, especially as several judicious persons have warmly recommended it, signifying their Surprize, that at a time, when so many have taken this method of promoting public undertakings, a Seminary, of such importance, should not also put in for a share of the general benevolence. This added to other schemes for the support and improvement of the College, will afford to many friends of that institution an opportunity of contributing, with very little risk of losing, and a considerable chance of gain to themselves, who would not incline that the small sums they could spare, should appear in a subscription paper.

In New Jersey Archives, first series, vol. XXVIII, page 522, may be found the following newspaper extract:

TRENTON, May 22, 1773.

The Managers of the Fishing- Island Lottery, for the Benefit of the Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches, in Trenton, are under the Necessity of postponing drawing said Lottery, until Thursday, the first Day of July next, at which Time the Lottery will certainly be drawn. They desire their Friends who have had Tickets to sell (if they have any on hand) to return them to the Managers before that time.

At page 524 of the same work is found the following:

SCHEME OF THE CREEK LOTTERY

For raising the sum of £300, New York currency, to be applied in clearing and deepening the channel of Elizabeth- Town Creek, in New Jersey, so as to make it navigable for lumber boats, from the mouth thereof, to the Stone Bridge, in the Center of the town.

The New York Journal, no. 1594, July 22, 1772, prints this announcement:

SCHEME OF A LOTTERY

To raise the sum of two hundred and fifty two pounds New-York money, for the benefit of the Presbyterian Congregation at Elizabeth- Town Raway, to enable the said congregation to repair their Meeting- House, and for other purposes necessary for the support of the Gospel at that place.

From New Jersey in this year of grace comes anew a Nation-wide movement for a lottery—this time a national lottery.

The Irish Sweepstakes winnings of a few days ago tend to focus attention upon the value of straight thinking now as in the olden times, when revenue much needed was not available from ordinary sources.

So it is that the Bergen Evening Record, of Hackensack, N. J., in its issue of March 29, 1935, printed the following worth-while editorial:

[From the Bergen Evening Record, Mar. 29, 1935]

ARE WE A RACE OF HYPOCRITES?

Four Bergen County residents are sharing rich cash rewards for their luck in holding winning tickets in the Irish Hospital Sweepstakes. The race was run this morning.

It is impossible to estimate how much Bergen County money went to Ireland for participation in the lottery. One only hears of the few winners, not of the many holders of losing tickets. But it is significant that one-third of the 1,266 winning tickets drawn were held by Americans.

Despite the antigambling laws, despite the fact that the Government had clamped down on the distribution of such tickets here, and efforts of the postal authorities to block them in the mails, a fortune in American money went overseas for participation in the lottery—money that might just as well have been kept here if the Kenney lottery bill were passed.

Every Member of Congress knows that gambling on lotteries is prevalent, that human nature being what it is it cannot be stopped, but they prefer to go along in smug hypocrisy rather than liberalize the laws. It was so with prohibition for a decade. Liquor was sold openly over the bars, gangsters and racketeers became rich from their illicit trade, and not one penny in taxes went to the Government. When given the opportunity, the people quickly ended the farce.

Where are the bootleggers today? Some are still plying their trade because Government taxes were made too high, but the majority of them probably will be found running lottery rackets. Their activities may be curtailed by alert police departments, but the traffic can never be entirely stamped out. It is a moot question whether the time has not come to recognize the fact that we cannot legislate morals into people. If they insist on gambling and are willing to pay a tax for the privilege, the revenue had better go to governmental agencies, which need it badly, rather than the racketeers and the politicians corrupted by such easy money.

The New Jersey Legislature is faced with a similar problem. The joint resolution that would permit the people to decide for themselves whether the antigambling section of the State constitution should be repealed has been blocked by a few votes in the house of assembly.

The weakest argument advanced by those opposed to liberalization of the laws is that the people would vote for legalized gambling, if given the opportunity, and the assembly should save them from themselves. Public gambling may create certain evils, but it might be better to have it in the open, which would at least end the hypocrisy and corruption, and prevent the criminal element that thrives on them from becoming a tacitly accepted factor in American community life.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GILDEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 12 minutes following the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, cannot the gentleman cut that down a bit?

Mr. GILDEA. No; I am asking for 12 minutes.

Mr. BLAND. With 10 minutes granted to the other side, I shall not object.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes following the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GILDEA].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, Consent Calendar is mandatory on the Speaker. He must call it on this day. It has never been the intent that this day be taken up with speeches. I do not know how these previous requests to make speeches were allowed. They should have been objected to; and if no one else does it, I shall object.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman was present when the gentleman from Pennsylvania got 12 minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I did not hear the request or I should have objected to it. The procedure of this House must be protected. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I think the Members of the House must think I am a very generous and a very patient waiter. I am very sorry that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] is not on the floor at the moment. I shall not ask him the question or say what I had planned to say.

There are none so blind as those who will not see; and I feel ashamed, thrice ashamed, for the people who seem to be deliberately strangling a great industry.

I am going to speak first to the southern Members, the Members who have the cotton farmers in their districts; there are 2,000,000 of these farmers. There are 9,000,000 people who gain their livelihood from the raw-cotton industry. Multiply this by 3, the number in the average family, and you have 27,000,000 people affected by any curtailment of the cotton-growing industry.

In 7 months of this year, two and a half million fewer bales of cotton were exported to other countries than the year before. The normal production of cotton is from fourteen to fifteen million bales. It is down to 10,000,000 bales and going lower.

Think what it means to kill the great cotton-textile industry of this country, which employs 400,000 people. It means, with the average family of 3, that 1,200,000 are affected. Think of the suffering that will cause.

The Secretary of Agriculture states that we may have a higher processing tax. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the membership of this House do something to remove the processing tax, instead of increasing it. Do you realize how you are literally torturing the people who work in the mills? I have protest after protest from people all over New England, and also from the South, who are affected by the closing of the mills.

Do you realize that during January and February of this year 24,000,000 square yards of cotton were imported from Japan, according to textile-industry figures, and we are doing nothing about it? It seems to me this is one of the greatest tragedies this country faces.

Do you of the West know what it is going to mean to you, if the cotton pickers and the cotton growers lose their work? Do you know what it is going to mean, if mill after mill is closed? Do you know what it is to go through a mill or a mill town when the mills are closed? It is like going through a graveyard.

All our people want is a chance to work, and I honestly believe, if you cannot raise the tariff enough under the present law to protect our mills from the imports coming in from foreign countries, you can have a quota or you can have an embargo which will stop this tremendous importation of foreign cotton goods now coming into this country. The President has the power now to do this; but if he will not act, Congress must.

I am pleading with you, my friends. This is not a sectional matter. I know how the South has hurt the northern mills, but you of the South are just as vitally interested in preventing the strangulation of every branch of the cotton industry as we are. Perhaps your farmers are getting a little money, but what of the people who pick the cotton? What of their families, who have no money to spend? How can you look with any sort of equanimity upon the killing of one of the greatest industries in our country?

I earnestly ask you to work to wipe out the processing tax and to enact a law which will prevent the importation of cotton textiles.

You have promised so much and talked about being interested in the welfare of the country and in giving work to the people, I want you to act upon your promises—and shame, thrice shame upon you if you do not. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CARTWRIGHT). Under the order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, the time has arrived for a show-down between the "new dealers" and the American people. On the one hand the Department of Justice withdraws a case which has reached the Supreme Court testing the constitutionality of the N. R. A., and on the other hand the lord chief executioner of the N. R. A., Donald Richberg, informs the public that prosecutions will follow failure to comply with its requirements. The administration, undoubtedly from the facile pen of Mr. Richberg, has prepared a brandnew authorization of the N. R. A. with still further powers than in the original act. Senator HARRISON introduced this revised administration bill last Friday. It is time for a show-down as to whether greater authority is granted to prosecute innocent people under N. R. A. or whether business can be let alone and allowed to attend to its own affairs.

Another illustration: On the one hand the Secretary of Agriculture threatens to increase the processing tax and on the other a leading authority on cotton, the distinguished Senator GEORGE, flays the Secretary of Agriculture for this threat, and says he is not only turning the cotton export trade over to foreign countries but that he is unfit to be Secretary of Agriculture. We need a show-down right here.

Who is this Secretary Wallace, anyway, who is telling the people of the country that if they do not like his method he will give them more of it? He is Secretary of Agriculture by the grace of President Roosevelt, without the slightest experience in governmental affairs, but the owner of a rural agricultural publication. That may be sufficient qualification for a man to tell the American people what he is going to do to them; but if it is, it is a new-deal type. Let us have a show-down.

On the one hand we have the Secretary of State and Chairman of the Tariff Commission uttering pretty words without argument over the radio in an endeavor to convince the public of the merits of reciprocal tariff treaties, while on the other hand Members of Congress of both parties, realizing the iniquity of these treaties, have introduced bills in behalf of American industry calling for the repeal of the reciprocal tariff law. It is high time for a show-down.

I quote from an editorial which appeared in the Washington Post on Sunday:

> Two years ago the President informed Congress that he was then studying a "broad public-works labor-creating program." This program, if any has been formulated, has never been vouchsafed to Congress. Instead of furnishing a bill of particulars, the President has merely demanded unprecedented spending powers, leaving Congress to make a silk purse out of a sow's ear while he goes fishing.

In 2 years no constructive program has been offered, but there has been profligacy of expenditure unequaled and unrivaled in peace time in all history. The country has been anxious to supply all needs for relief, but it has now reached the point where it wants to know whether this orgy of spending is to be continued and no bottom found to the sieve, or whether constructive business restoration is to result. We want a show-down.

Senator WALSH, in the Senate, and my colleague, Mrs. ROGERS in the House, have called attention to the textile difficulties in New England. These cannot be cured unless manufacturers know where they stand and under what laws they will be called on to transact business. Sweetly worded radio addresses by Secretary Hull and Chairman O'Brien will fail to convince the people of the merits of tariff reductions when in 2 years there have been only 21 cases of appeals to the Tariff Commission.

There is a right way and a wrong way to revise the tariff. The right way is by congressional action. The wrong way is by political subterfuge. With tremendous majorities in both Houses for over 2 years and a Democratic President in the White House there has been ample opportunity for such revision provided there was any occasion for it. Why did not President Roosevelt take a leaf out of the book of history made by President Wilson? The latter no sooner entered the White House than he called Congress in special session to revise the tariff in accordance with Democratic doctrines. If President Roosevelt had followed this example the people of the country and the Republican Party could have found no fault as that was high right under majority rule. But instead he adopted the wrong method and was misled by theorists like Secretary Hull and Assistant Secretary Sayre into revising the tariff by subterfuge. At his dictation Congress was forced to pass a law permitting the President in cooperation with representatives of other governments to write the tariff laws of this country rather than Congress itself. That is the wrong way. The people and business resent it and I predict that from now on the going will be harder for the Democratic Party and the new deal. The time has come for a show-down.

We are told the most recent trade treaty is one with Haiti wherein the duty on Haitian rum is reduced 50 percent for the purpose of preventing bootlegging. The tariff has been accused of all sorts of iniquities, but whoever heard of it before as part of a rum-bootlegging proposition? If this is reason to change tariff rates fixed by Congress, excuses for murder under the guise of liberty of action will soon be the law of the land.

All the people of the country ask is a square deal, which was the slogan of a famous predecessor of the President, rather than the theories of "brain trusters" under the new deal. The day for a show-down is here.

Secretary Wallace and his cohorts have endeavored to throw up a smoke screen about an increase of exports conditional upon an increase of imports. He raises the false alarm of isolationism. There is no such thing. This country is dependent on foreign countries for many raw materials, and these are practically all on the free list. What Secretary Wallace wants to do is what he admitted in his testimony last year before the Ways and Means Committee, namely, to put out of business small industries in this country. Let us have a show-down.

No one doubts that foreign countries dislike our tariff rates as they deprive them to a certain extent of the best market in the world, namely, the United States of America. No one doubts that every nation invited to sit around a table and tell our people what laws to write reducing tariff rates will be tickled to pieces to do so and praise such men as Secretaries Wallace and Hull and Chairman O'Brien. I care more what the American people say than what representatives of foreign governments think. We have been accused of favoring special interests. Under this administration the words "special interests" are synonymous with "foreign manufacturers." It is time for a show-down. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GILDEA] is recognized for 12 minutes.

Mr. GILDEA. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, April 1 is observed in United Mine Workers circles and by my constituents back home in Pennsylvania as 8-hour day. The wheels of industry are silenced today as the miners and their friends pay tribute to the sturdier trades-unionists who established the 8-hour day. This year the All Fools' Day connection attending the annual recurrence of April 1 seems apt and applicable to any 8-hour celebration held anywhere, because with 50,000 people in my home county of Schuylkill on the relief list, with the Governments of the State of Pennsylvania and the United States pouring $500,000 monthly into the bottomless abyss of relief—one-half million dollars for food orders alone—it is time to call time out and ask, Where are we headed?

To those of you who uphold the sanctity of contract—the sacredness of private enterprise—who deplore with uplifted hands the regimentation of men, let me ask how many of you have stood and watched the forming of a relief line in any of our towns and cities? Can there be a more abject picture of regimentation than that offered by distressed humanity forming in line to fill out "pink slips" of poverty and wretchedness that they may be recognized as deserving of a weekly food-order dole?

And so, Mr. Speaker, on this 8-hour day I intrude upon the time of the greatest deliberative body in all the world to pay tribute to those who hurdled the obstacle of "divine-right" consciousness in establishing labor's right to a place in the sun, and without dwelling too long in the past, let us look ahead from the 8-hour-day milestone to the 30-hour-week goal and to the day when we as the Congress of these United States measure up to our responsibilities and refuse to rest satisfied until every citizen of this country who wants to work is again employed at a gainful occupation.

In criticizing past action needed remedy must be offered. Today we have considered the administration work bill. We did not stand up to be counted when the $50 average was written into that measure, and, having passed the buck once, we pass it again, and in so doing admit that we are not satisfied to pay the full price for recovery—not satisfied to go the full distance toward putting all our unemployed to work.

The Townsend plan has been laughed out of court. It has been branded illogical, fantastic, a gold brick sold irresponsible people.

In truth it is just as practical as we want to make it. The Townsend plan in its revenue-raising provisions is an admission that if we want recovery we must be satisfied to pay for it.

I hold no brief for the proposition offered to retire every man and woman in this country 60 years of age or over on a $200-per-month spending allowance.

But I do say $4,800,000,000 spread over a 2-year period is not the price America must pay to lift this country up by its boot straps.

It has been said that the Townsend plan necessitates the raising of $24,000,000,000 yearly. I am not in position to testify as to the accuracy of Dr. Townsend's figures, but I am mathematician enough to know that just half of $24,000,000,000—$12,000,000,000—would put 10,000,000 men to work 12 months in each year, at a monthly wage of $100—just twice the average offered in the work bill today engaging attention.

Let us be honest with ourselves. Let us ask the question our President asked the country in his fireside talk 1 year ago. Is the district we represent better off today than it was this time last year—or this time 2 years ago?

To be truthful about it, the Thirteenth District of Pennsylvania in this third year of the new deal is going backward instead of forward, and the fault is not the President's; the responsibility is yours and mine.

Panaceas are offered in the form of old-age insurance, unemployment insurance, labor relations, equal representation, and other shop-worn and antiquated cure-alls, when in truth the day for poultices is past; a major operation is needed.

Certainty of employment for all is more important than unemployment insurance.

Certainty of employment in mid-age provides the best policy of old-age insurance that can be written.

Labor relationship means nothing to the man divorced from his job, and the only cure worth thinking about or talking about must come through raising the general wage rate all over the country by fixing a minimum wage for skilled and unskilled labor on public works and thereby compelling industries to raise wages to hold employees.

Let us count the cost. You and I have been told the Townsend transaction tax would raise the price of necessities 25 percent and increase the cost of luxuries from 60 to 80 percent.

The only figures I am interested in are these:

A man earning $100 per month, paying 2 cents on every dollar he spends, can only be taxed $2 per month.

If his income is $200 per month, his tax bill doubles, and he is called upon to pay $4 per month.

If you happen to be fortunate enough to have a congressional checking account after April 1 of $833.33 per month, you could be called upon, under a 2-cent transaction tax, to return to the Government of the United States $16.66 monthly to purchase security for our beloved country, to give jobs to 10,000,000 idle Americans, and to fulfill the promise of our esteemed President to make the security of our men, women, and children the paramount aim of the new deal and his administration.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILDEA. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. As Democrats suggested these remedies, I would like to ask the gentleman if he is not aware that the President is opposed to all of these suggestions—the minimum wage, the 30-hour law, and adequate pensions?

Mr. GILDEA. I am fully aware of it but I regret the fact.

As a new Member of Congress—one of those freshmen of the class of 1935 commonly supposed to have ridden into Congress on the President's coat tails—I have sat patiently through endless discussions—I have enjoyed the political gestures toward 1936 offered by well-meaning gentlemen on both sides of the aisle, but as one who realizes the unimportance of his own political future, I say to you in all sincerity that the only thing worth while, the only future at stake, is the security of America, and we as a Congress of the United States first, and as new dealers, or 1936 opportunists second, should approach the problems now before us with honest convictions and give real attention to the social measures promised and as yet unfulfilled.

The 30-hour week in a Nation beset with idleness is not abhorrent.

Back home there are mine workers who, at one time in the mining industry, never saw the light of day from the start of winter until the lengthening daylight hours of spring gave them a chance to bask in the glory of God's sunshine on the way to work in the morning and for a few hours as the day lengthened upon returning home.

The present Lieutenant Governor of the State of Pennsylvania, as a boy, went into the mines before sun-up and returned home in the shadows of darkness after completing 10 hours or more underground.

When the 12-hour day gave place to 10 hours, when the 10-hour day gave place to 9, when progress lessened the work period from 9 to 8, there were those who stood in the pathway of progress and lamented the fact that men of property were no longer permitted to manage their business as they saw fit. "Divine Right" Baer used all the arguments in 1902 that are being used now. It remained for an earlier Roosevelt, through the use of a big stick, to whip Baer's generation of mossbacks into line, and my regret today is, that with an overwhelming Democratic majority in the House, with an administration elected through a decided leaning to the left—we lack the courage to do what is right and what is expected with a full 100-percent follow-through.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILDEA. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. Practically every one of the strikes—the textile strike, the automobile strike, the coal strike, and the rubber strike are based on the fact that they are asking for a 30-hour week.

Mr. GILDEA. That is true.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Labor Committee of this House, I regret the lack of a definite labor program or policy.

Labor relationship, equal representation, and all other bromides should be placed secondary to the problem of putting idle Americans to work at a security wage.

I believe and suggest that the 30-hour-week bill is worthy of the best thought and utmost attention that can be given it by the membership of this House. It merits a place on the calendar—it demands its day in court, and the 50,000 men, women, and children back in my home county depending on a food-order dole demand that I ask this Government to cease subsidizing a soulless industry to the extent of $500,000 per month and to move toward a more abundant future by spreading work through the 30-hour-week process—spreading work through limiting machinery and mass production to 30 hours per week and then, with eyes trained on a definite and happy goal, impose the Townsend transaction tax that we may pay as we go and fulfill the President's promise by putting every American citizen who wants to work back on the job.

Mr. Speaker, and you, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I propose putting these ideas into form of a spread-the-work, pay-as-you-go bill, and I ask your earnest consideration of the measure to the end that we cease temporizing with this gigantic problem and devote ourselves seriously to the task of lifting 10,000,000 Americans to our accepted standards of living as a safeguard and provision against their pulling our American structure and standard of living down to the unemployment level.

This country cannot endure with one-third its employable citizens condemned to idleness. [Applause.]

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILDEA. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Is it not a fact that the great majority of labor disputes prevailing today are due to the wrong and unfair interpretation placed on section 7 (a) by Mr. Richberg, now appointed as head of the N. R. A.?

Mr. GILDEA. Most all our troubles are due to legalisms and to the wrong interpretation of intent legalistic minds are permitted to place an ordinary phraseology. The 8-hour day United Mine Workers are today celebrating back home has been made a mockery through permitting a qualifying clause justifying the working of overtime on emergency or necessary repair work to become the law. The clause referred to reads: "Or other causes necessary to efficient operation" and strange to say in a contract establishing an 8-hour day this clause has been so construed as to permit the operation of three 8-hour shifts in a single day being worked at the central breaker and stripping operation, adding to unemployment and leaving no cause for rejoicing or 8-hour celebration. So also section 7a has been swerved from its original purpose by wrong interpretation of intent.

Mr. McGROARTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGROARTY. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in addressing the House at this time is to inform the Members that I have today introduced a bill to provide for the aged people of our country. On the 16th day of January last I introduced a somewhat similar bill, which was designated as H. R. 3977. The bill was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, but the committee declined to report it out. A petition to discharge the committee was laid on the Clerk's desk, but has failed to receive the necessary number of signatures.

In the meantime we have been informed of the objections held by the Committee on Ways and Means and many Members of the House to H. R. 3977, and as a result of these objections, and after consultation with Members, a new bill has been drawn, the bill which I have today introduced.

The present bill retains the basic principle of the now world-famed Townsend plan, but with many modifications and changes in technique, although not departing essentially from Dr. Townsend's idea. I apprehend that this new bill will also be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means for its consideration, and, I trust, for its favorable action. At any rate the bill will, in the ordinary course, be printed so that all members of the House can come into immediate possession of an official copy. It will be on the desks of the Members in their offices for scrutiny and study.

In order that this measure, as now proposed, may receive the close scrutiny and earnest study of the Members, let me say that the bill is the result of long and patient labor on the part of a sincere group of experienced Members of this House. It is a group composed of men who strongly favor an adequate old-age pension, but who could not reconcile themselves to the Townsend plan as set forth in H. R. 3977. So they took the matter in hand and have prepared the measure which I now submit. Even in its present form, it may not meet with the approval of all, but it certainly meets with the approval of many who could not see their way clear to support the first bill.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGROARTY. Yes.

Mr. BEITER. What was wrong with the old Townsend bill, the original bill? Clubs were formed all over the country favoring that bill. What was wrong with it?

Mr. McGROARTY. It did not go far enough; it did not go into detail enough. For one thing, the old bill provided that everybody 60 years and over who would withdraw from gainful occupation must receive a pension of $200 a month. The new bill provides that it shall not exceed $200 a month. This new bill is so carefully drawn and so fair and just in its provisions that I am sure a great many Members of the House who did not agree with the original bill will agree with this.

What I want to urge upon the Committee on Ways and Means is to let us have the bill here on the floor of the House for debate or for amendment, but, above all things, for action, no matter what that action may be.

It is not a matter which we can lightly ignore. We are to bear in mind that the country has become old-age-pension minded. There are 30,000,000 of the people of this country back of the Townsend plan alone, and that is a vast force of public opinion to be behind anything. It is a force that must be reckoned with, no matter who likes it or who does not, a force that must be faced sooner or later. Pensions or annuities, as we prefer to call them, are inevitable. And they must be so adequate as to make living secure and comfortable for the aged, a proposal that will preserve to them the dignity of life and not a pauper's dole that woud humiliate them before the world and bow their heads in shame before their fellow men and still leave them without sufficient means to exist.

Here we present to you a solution to the problem of business depression, a sure antidote to the machine which is devouring us and will continue to devour us unless the antidote is applied—purchasing power put in the hands of the masses. That is the antidote and the only antidote. If full prosperity were to return tomorrow the machine in 6 months would again so overproduce goods and materials as to again put men out of work. Yet we cannot rid ourselves of the machine. We have it and must keep it. The only way to keep up with it is to put purchasing power in the hands of the masses, to take men over 60 years of age out of competition with younger men and at the same time make it possible for the elders to become purchasing consumers. This bill which I have introduced today will do that. And it will not cost the Government a penny to do it. It is a challenge to the exercise of your common sense. Let no man tell me that this Nation, the richest and the most powerful the world has ever known, is futile to care for its aged citizens. I would be ashamed of my country were it to make such a humiliating admission.

We propose a plan that is workable, practicable, and sound. It should be enacted into law without hesitation or delay.

Good, hard-headed business is a reason for it. And, if at the same time, we can be kind, then all the better for us. We live in a broken world that kindness can patch together again.

So many minds, so many creeds,
So many ways that wind and wind,
When all the help this sad world needs
Is just the art of being kind.

Let us face the task like men and in a valiant and honorable spirit.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

WAR MINERALS RELIEF STATUTES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2077) to amend section 5 of the act of March 2, 1919, generally known as the "war mineral relief statutes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. As I recollect, this is a bill for the payment of $1,250,000 for interest under the war minerals relief statute from March 2, 1919, up to date. I understand that the principal has been paid, and the interest has been paid from the time that the original relief statute was passed up until the 2d day of March 1919.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman's information is not entirely correct. It is true a portion of this money is for interest. The law permitted a reimbursement of all net losses, and the net loss of interest is just as important as the net loss of principal.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, there are several large claims here where the interest alone amounts to more than the principal. The principal has already been paid to these companies, and had they applied the principal payment to their indebtedness there would be no occasion for interest.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Washington is going to object, there is no need of engaging in argument about it. This bill passed the Senate Friday. It is merely to carry out what was the intent of Congress in 1919, when Congress passed the War Minerals Refund Act. These claimants have been driven to the Supreme Court four different times. It was the intention of Congress to pay them their net loss and all that is sought in this bill is to reimburse these people their net loss.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I yield.

Mr. COX. To permit me to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes.

Mr. COX. Is this the bill which the Rules Committee granted a special rule for in the last session of Congress?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is correct. This bill was given a special rule in the last session of Congress.

Mr. COX. And in the consideration of that rule the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] made the statement that his committee was then investigating certain charges that had been made against some people in the different departments of the Government in reference to the manner in which these claims had been handled.

Mr. McFARLANE. Was it this company?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No; it was not.

Mr. COX. No. With the leave of the House consideration of the rule was withdrawn. Mr. McSWAIN, as I understand it, has since made the statement that this committee has gone into all these matters thoroughly, and has found that this concern had nothing to do with any of those things his committee was investigating.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Georgia is correct. When this bill was under consideration in the last session of Congress, the Committee on Military Affairs was conducting an investigation of activities of the War Department and asked that the bill be laid aside even after debate had been carried on for approximately an hour and a half.

They made a thorough investigation. There were no complaints whatsoever against any of these war mineral claims. Let me state to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK] that there are approximately 300 claims involved. Over half of them are less than $500. We are seeking by this bill to carry out the intent of Congress expressed in 1919. The Supreme Court has on four different occasions decided that interest on borrowed capital was an item that came within the purview of this law. The only reason this bill is here today is because they placed a cut-off date as of March 2, 1919, in the bill. There is not a line in the War Minerals Relief Act saying for what period of time interest on loans shall be calculated.

Mr. PITTENGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I yield.

Mr. PITTENGER. The claims covered by this bill are for interest actually lost on money advanced at the request of the War Department?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Absolutely.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. How could these people lose interest for a period of 16 years subsequent to the war when they have already been paid the interest and principal up to the 2d of March 1919?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Let me say that if the gentleman borrows $1,000 and that obligation is not due until a certain date and he goes to the lender and offers him $1,000, that does not relieve him of the obligation to pay interest. That is this case exactly. These people, at the request of the Secretary of the Interior, went out and borrowed this money. They borrowed this capital. These obligations did not fall due until after March 2, 1919. The Supreme Court held they were entitled to collect interest up to March 2, 1919——

Mr. ZIONCHECK. And no further.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Just a moment. But it wrote into the decision that the word "accrued" meant "incurred."

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

KENNESAW MOUNTAIN NATIONAL MEMORIAL MILITARY PARK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 59, to create a national memorial military park at and in the vicinity of Kennesaw Mountain, in the State of Georgia, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TRUAX and Mr. LESINSKI objected.

The SPEAKER. Three objections are required. Only two objections have been made. The Clerk will report the bill.

Without objection, the Clerk will report the committee amendments.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 1 after the enacting clause and insert the following—

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order against the committee amendments. The committee amendments purport to strike out language which is not in the bill, and to insert language which is already in the bill. The mistake came about in this way: When the bill was introduced during the last session the committee, by these amendments, suggested entirely different language for the bill. When it was reintroduced by myself at this session I adopted the committee language in toto. The error comes about through the submission of the report from the committee, which exactly copies the report rendered the last time; but these amendments are not applicable to the pending bill.

The point of order is that the committee amendments are not in order, since they propose to strike out language which is not now in the bill and to insert language which is already in the bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order that with such a large change in the language the bill may be entirely different.

Mr. TARVER. It involves no change whatever. If the gentleman will examine the copy of the bill, which he has before him, he will see that it simply strikes out the language of the bill and then reinserts the identical language of the bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Oh, if it is identical language, there is no objection.

The SPEAKER. It occurs to the Chair that the remedy is to vote down the committee amendments.

Mr. TARVER. I think the committee amendments are out of order since they purport to strike out language which is not in the bill and to insert language which is already in the bill. In drafting the bill we have used exactly the committee language—the language suggested by these amendments.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands it, the committee amendment proposes to strike out all of the original bill and insert a substitute in lieu thereof.

Mr. TARVER. The committee amendments are adjusted to the bill introduced during the last Congress, and they propose to strike out all of the language of that bill, which is not now before the House, and to insert the language of this bill. If the Chair will examine the language of the bill before him, he will see that the printer has stricken out all of the language of this bill and has then reinserted the identical language stricken out. Therefore, if a point of order is sustained to the amendments, the bill will be before the House in the exact language recommended by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair fails to understand how the Chair can take action upon a matter of that sort. The committee has reported an amendment as a substitute. It seems to the Chair it is a question for the House as to whether it wishes to adopt the substitute or to adopt the gentleman's original bill.

Mr. TARVER. The committee amendment is out of order, because the committee proposes to strike out sections and language that are not in the bill. Therefore the committee amendments are not adjusted to the bill. Further, the committee amendments propose to insert language that is already in the bill. Therefore they are clearly out of order.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. A point of order against the committee amendments does not come until after the bill has been read and the committee amendment has been read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when title to all the lands, structures, and other property within the military battlefield area and other areas of Civil War interest at and in the vicinity of Kennesaw Mountain in the State of Georgia, as shall be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, in the exercise of his discretion, as necessary or desirable for national battlefield park purposes, shall have been vested in the United States, such areas shall be, and they are hereby, established, dedicated, and set apart as a public park for the benefit and inspiration of the people and shall be known as the "Kennesaw Mountain National Battlefield Park."

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept donations of land, interests in land, buildings, structures, and other property within the boundaries of said national battlefield park as determined and fixed hereunder, the title and evidence of title to lands purchased to be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That under such funds available therefor he may acquire on behalf of the United States by purchase when purchasable at prices deemed by him reasonable, otherwise by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888, such tracts of land within the said national battlefield park as may be necessary for the completion thereof.

SEC. 3. Upon creation of the national battlefield park the Secretary of the Interior shall—

(a) Allow monuments and memorials to be erected in the park by and to the various organizations and individuals of either the Union or Confederate armies, subject to the written approval of said Secretary as to the location and character of such monuments and memorials.

(b) Make such regulations as are necessary from time to time for the care and protection of the park. Any person violating such regulations shall be guilty of an offense punishable by a fine of not more than $500, or imprisonment not exceeding 6 months, or both.

(c) Provide for the ascertainment and marking of the route of march of the Union and Confederate armies from Chattanooga, Tenn., through Georgia, and of principal battle lines, breastworks, fortifications, and other historical features along such route, and for the maintenance of such markers to such extent as deemed advisable and practicable.

SEC. 4. That the administration, protection, and development of the aforesaid national battlefield park shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes", as amended.

SEC. 5. The sum of $100,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any sums in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes herein designated.

SEC. 6. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed to the extent of such inconsistency.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That when title to all the lands, structures, and other property within the military battlefield area and other areas of Civil War interest at and in the vicinity of Kennesaw Mountain in the State of Georgia, as shall be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, in the exercise of his discretion, as necessary or desirable for national battlefield park purposes, shall have been vested in the United States, such areas shall be, and they are hereby, established, dedicated, and set apart as a public park for the benefit and inspiration of the people and shall be known as the 'Kennesaw Mountain National Battlefield Park.'"

Mr. TARVER (interrupting the reading of the committee amendment). Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order against the first committee amendment, which is to strike out all of section 1 after the enacting clause and insert certain language. The language which is proposed be inserted is identical with the language of section 1 now in the bill. The proposal of the committee amendment is simply to strike out existing language and then reinsert identical language.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot pass on that. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Georgia that is a matter for the House to determine. The Chair cannot enter into the purpose of the committee in proposing the amendment, since that is not within the province of the Chair. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that the remedy that occurs to the Chair is for the House to vote down the committee amendment and pass the bill as originally introduced.

Mr. TARVER. Of course, Mr. Speaker, so far as this amendment is concerned, I have no objection to its adoption, but it is a useless procedure. It strikes out language now in the bill and then reinserts it. The next amendment proposes to strike out all of section 2 (a) and (b) and all of sections 3 (a), (b), and (c), and (d), yet there are no such sections in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the amendment; it is all one amendment.

Mr. TARVER. May we have a vote on each amendment as it is read?

The SPEAKER. There is just one amendment; it is proposed as a substitute.

Mr. TARVER. No; if the Chair please, the first amendment is to strike out all of section 1 after the enacting clause and insert the language which follows. Another amendment strikes out all of section 2 (a) and 3 (a), (b), and (c), and (d).

The SPEAKER. The amendment proposed by the committee is to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute; it is simply one amendment proposed as a substitute to the bill.

Mr. TARVER. However much I may be convinced that the Chair is in error, I, of course, will yield to his decision.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept donations of land, interests in land, buildings, structures, and other property within the boundaries of said national battlefield park as determined and fixed hereunder, the title and evidence of title to lands purchased to be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That under such funds available therefor he may acquire on behalf of the United States by purchase when purchasable at prices deemed by him reasonable, otherwise by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888, such tracts of land within the said national battlefield park as may be necessary for the completion thereof.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the committee amendment be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is going to be the final disposition of the bill? Is this amendment a new bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I think the point was taken care of by the Speaker's decision on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Georgia. Everything after the enacting clause has been stricken from the bill and the committee amendment is offered as a substitute. I have just asked unanimous consent that further reading of the committee amendment be dispensed with, but that it be printed in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. TRAUX. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TRUAX. If it is a new bill, practically, with the exception of the enacting clause, why is it not subject to one objection instead of three?

The SPEAKER. Because it is simply proposed as an amendment; it is not a part of the bill until the House has adopted it.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, we are informed that the amendment is practically a new bill.

The SPEAKER. It is a new bill only in the sense that the amendment proposes to strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute new language for the remainder of the bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman from Ohio that the bill was subject to one objection last time, but to three this time, and only two objections were made to it today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington that the further reading of the committee amendment be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There was no objection.

The remainder of the committee amendment follows:

SEC. 3. Upon creation of the national battlefield park the Secretary of the Interior shall—

(a) Allow monuments and memorials to be erected in the park by and to the various organizations and individuals of either the Union or Confederate Armies, subject to the written approval of said Secretary as to the location and character of such monuments and memorials.

(b) Make such regulations as are necessary from time to time for the care and protection of the park. Any person violating such regulations shall be guilty of an offense punishable by a fine of not more than $500, or imprisonment not exceeding 6 months, or both.

(c) Provide for the ascertainment and marking of the route of march of the Union and Confederate Armies from Chattanooga, Tenn., through Georgia, and of principal battle lines, breastworks, fortifications, and other historical features along such route, and for the maintenance of such markers to such extent as deemed advisable and practicable.

SEC. 4. That the administration, protection, and development of the aforesaid national battlefield park shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes", as amended.

SEC. 5. The sum of $100,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any sums in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the purposes herein designated.

SEC. 6. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed to the extent of such inconsistency.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TREASURY-POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1936—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4442) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, together with Senate amendments, disagree to all Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, have the Republican members of the committee been consulted about this?

Mr. ARNOLD. I told the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] that I would get the bill to conference as soon as I could, and that was agreeable to him.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, personally I think the policy of a former distinguished Democratic leader, when that party was in the minority, that the minority Members be consulted before these requests were made is a good policy to continue.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the Treasury-Post Office Department bill's going to conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? (After a pause.) The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. ARNOLD, LUDLOW, BOYLAN, GRANFIELD, O'NEAL, TABER, and MCLEOD.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next bill on the Consent Calendar.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1068, to establish a commission for the settlement of the special claims comprehended within the terms of the convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States, concluded April 24, 1934.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

An act to establish a Commission for the settlement of the special claims comprehended within the terms of the convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States concluded April 24, 1934

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) there is hereby established a Commission to be known as the "Special Mexican Claims Commission" (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission") which shall be composed of three commissioners, learned in the law, to be appointed by the President. Such Commission shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine, as hereinafter provided, conformable to the terms of the convention of September 10, 1923, and justice and equity, all claims against the Republic of Mexico, notices of which were filed with the Special Claims Commission, United States and Mexico, established by said convention of September 10, 1923, in which the said Commission failed to award compensation, except such claims as may be found by the committee provided for in the Special Claims Convention of April 24, 1934, to be general claims and recognized as such by the General Claims Commission. For the purpose of this act, claims which were brought to the attention of the American agency charged with the prosecution of claims before the aforesaid Commission, prior to the expiration of the periods specified in the convention of September 10, 1923, for the filing of claims, but which, because of error or inadvertence, were not filed with or brought to the attention of the Commission within the said periods, shall be deemed to have been filed with the Commission within such periods.

(b) The President shall designate one of such commissioners as chairman of the Commission. Not more than two of such commissioners shall be members of the same political party. Each commissioner shall be a citizen of the United States, shall hold office until the functions of the Commission are terminated, and shall receive a salary at the rate of $7,500 a year. Any vacancy that may occur in the membership of the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as in the case of an original appointment. Two members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of its business.

SEC. 2. The Commission shall have a secretary, and such additional legal, clerical, and technical assistants as may be approved and appointed by the Secretary of State, and at the rates of compensation fixed by him.

SEC. 3. (a) Before taking up his duties, each commissioner shall make and subscribe a solemn oath or declaration that he will carefully and impartially examine and decide all claims according to the best of his judgment and in accordance with the evidence and the applicable principles of justice and equity, and the terms of the said convention of September 10, 1923. All decisions by the Commission, which shall be by majority vote, shall constitute a full and final disposition of the cases decided. Such decisions shall be based upon the present records in the cases and such additional evidence and written legal contentions as may be presented within such period as may be prescribed therefor by the Commission.

(b) The Commission shall have authority, in its discretion, to make independent investigations of cases. For the purpose of all investigations which, in the opinion of the Commission, are necessary and proper for carrying out the provisions of this act, each commissioner is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpena witnesses, take evidence, and require the production of books, papers, or other documents which the commissioner or the Commission deems relevant to the inquiry.

(c) Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing. In case of disobedience to a subpena the Commission may invoke the aid of any district or territorial court of the United States or the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence, and the court within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpena issued to any person, issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Commission, or to produce documentary evidence if so ordered or to give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

(d) For the purpose of assisting the Commission in carrying out the provisions of this act, the heads of the various departments and independent agencies and establishments of the Government are hereby directed to cooperate with the Commission and to place at its disposal such information as the Commission may from time to time request.

SEC. 4. If, after all claims have been passed upon and all awards have been entered, the Commission shall find that the total amount of such awards is greater than the amount that the Government of Mexico has agreed to pay to the Government of the United States in satisfaction of the claims, less expenses of the Commission, it shall reduce the awards on a percentage basis to such amount, and shall enter final awards in such reduced amounts.

SEC. 5. The said Commission shall perform its duties in the city of Washington, beginning within 15 days after its appointment. It shall, as soon as practicable, make all needful rules and regulations not contravening the laws of the United States, or the provisions of this act, for regulating the mode of procedure by and before it and for carrying into full and complete effect the provisions of this act; it shall also, as soon as practicable, notify all claimants of record of the establishment of the Commission and of the rules of procedure adopted by it for the adjudication of the claims, including the time allowed for the filing of additional evidence and written legal contentions.

SEC. 6. The Commission shall complete its work within 2 years from the date on which it undertakes the performance of its duties.

SEC. 7. The Commission shall be allowed the necessary actual expenses of office rent, furniture, stationery, books, printing and binding, and other necessary incidental expenses, to be certified as necessary by the Commission and approved by the Secretary of State.

SEC. 8. The Commission shall, at the time of entering an award on any claim, allow counsel or attorneys employed by the claimant or claimants, out of the amount awarded, such fees as it shall determine to be just and reasonable for the services rendered the claimant or claimants in prosecuting such claim, which allowance shall be entered as a part of said award: Provided, however, That the Commission shall determine just and reasonable fees, where there is a contract or agreement for services in connection with the proceedings before the Commission and with the preparations therefor, only upon the written request of the claimant or claimants, or of the counsel or attorneys, made to the Commission within 90 days after notice of the entry of an award and notice of the provisions of this section shall have been mailed by the Commission to the claimant or claimants; and payment shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury to the person or persons to whom such allowance shall be made in the same manner as payments are made to claimants under section 9 of this act, which shall constitute payment in full to the counsel or attorneys for prosecuting such claim; and whenever such allowance shall be made all other liens upon, or assignments, sales, or transfers of the claim or the award thereon, whether absolute or conditional, for services rendered or to be rendered by counsel or attorneys in the preparation or presentation of any claim or part or parcel thereof, shall be absolutely null and void and of no effect.

SEC. 9. The said Commission shall, upon the completion of its work, submit a report to the Secretary of State, attaching thereto the following documents in duplicate: (a) A statement of the expenses of the Commission; (b) a list of all claims rejected; (c) a list of all claims allowed in whole or in part, together with the amount of each claim and the amount awarded by the Commission; and (d) its decision in writing showing the reasons for the allowance or disallowance of the respective claims. Certified copies of lists (a) and (c) shall be transmitted by the Secretary of State to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall, after making the deduction provided for in section 11 hereof, distribute in ratable proportions, among the persons in whose favor awards shall have been made, or their assignees, heirs, executors, or administrators of record, according to the proportions which their respective awards shall bear to the whole amount then available for distribution, such moneys as may have been received into the Treasury by virtue of the convention of April 24, 1934. The Secretary of the Treasury shall follow like procedure with reference to any amounts that may thereafter be received from the Government of Mexico under the convention of April 24, 1934.

SEC. 10. As soon as the adjudication of the claims shall have been completed, the records, books, documents, and all other papers in the possession of the Commission, or members of its staff, shall be deposited with the Department of State.

SEC. 11. For the expenses of the Commission in carrying out the duties as aforesaid, the sum of $90,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, including personal services in the District or Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to the provisions of any statute relating to employment, rent in the District of Columbia, furniture, office supplies, and equipment, including law books and books of reference, stenographic reporting and translating services, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes; traveling expenses; printing and binding; and such other necessary expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State: Provided, That any expenditures from the amount herein authorized to be appropriated shall become a first charge upon any moneys received from the Government of Mexico in settlement of these claims, and the amount of such expenditures shall be deducted from the first payment by the Government of Mexico and deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 12. After a fee has been fixed under section 8, any person accepting any consideration (whether or not under a contract or agreement entered into prior or subsequent to the enactment of this act) the aggregate value of which (when added to any consideration previously received) is in excess of the amount so fixed, for services in connection with the proceedings before the Commission, or any preparations therefor, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than four times the aggregate value of the consideration accepted by such person therefor.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 5, line 23, after the word "duties", add "at which time all powers, rights, and duties conferred by this act upon the commission shall terminate."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STAY OF ALIENS IN THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5839, to authorize the shortening of the stay in the United States of certain aliens not admitted for permanent residence, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mrs. O'DAY, Mr. MARCANTONIO, Mr. JENKINS of Ohio, Mr. WITHROW, and Mr. STEFAN objected.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR NATURALIZATION OF ALIEN VETERANS OF THE WORLD WAR

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2739, to extend further time for naturalization to alien veterans of the World War under the act approved May 25, 1932 (47 Stat. 165), to extend the same privileges to certain veterans of countries allied with the United States during the World War, and for other purposes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the author of this bill is the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CANNON]; at least, he was very much interested in this matter when we had it up for consideration on the last calendar day. I think an objection was made, or the bill was passed over without prejudice, with the agreement at that time that an amendment would be placed in the bill. The gentleman and I have agreed on what the amendment should be, and if it is all right I shall be glad to withdraw my reservation of objection, with the understanding that the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. What is the amendment?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I may not be offering the amendment at the right place, but I have the right meaning. The amendment is as follows:

Strike out the period in line 25 and add the following: "and that he was and had been a bona fide lawfully admitted resident in the United States for 2 years before the passage of this act."

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, the whole bill is based on the fact they are now residing here and have been residing here for 10 years or more, and participated in the World War. This just extends their time to be naturalized under a short-form naturalization. Now, what objection could there be to that procedure?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I think the gentleman is in error in that respect. The gentleman knows that we have extended this period to the veterans time after time, and there has never been any opposition heretofore. This bill is directed especially to the benefit of a group of Polish veterans, and there is no inclination on the part of anyone to object to that part of it. On the contrary, I want especially to help them. As far as I am concerned, and as far as I know, the recommendations have been overwhelmingly in favor of that part of the bill, but there is a thread running through the bill which seeks to provide that they must be residents of this country. It is strictly a bill for the benefit of aliens who fought for our country. In that respect it should be held strictly as a bill in favor of veterans and will not be permitted to be an immigration matter. My amendment will not in any way militate against the real purpose of the bill. It will strengthen it.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KENNEY. I understand the amendment is satisfactory to the gentleman?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAVERICK. There were a lot of boys of Mexican extraction that were in the United States Army and who always thought they were citizens of the United States.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I think the sentiment of this Congress is overwhelmingly in favor of any proposition that assists veterans to become citizens. However, there is a loophole in this bill that would allow a lot of people to come in under one guise or another and the veterans would not be in favor of that.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. May I say to the gentleman that the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and other patriotic organizations came before the committee and endorsed the language of this bill. There is not one alien that will come in here. This has nothing to do with immigration. The men who served in the war must be residents and permanently admitted to the United States, and they must have been in this country 14 years.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I understand that is what the bill tends to do.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Then why stick in an amendment that is going to destroy this piece of legislation? The gentleman is cutting off the legislation.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No. If the gentleman agrees to my amendment, there will be no difficulty. Does the gentleman agree to my amendment?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; I do not agree to it because it is nonsensical.

Mr. KENNEY. I think the bill as written virtually carries out the idea that the gentleman has in mind. If there is likely to be an objection, perhaps the bill should be passed over.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. May I make this suggestion: In order to be absolutely sure what we are doing here, I will be glad to pass the bill over at this time.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No. We might as well dispose of it now.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It is up to the gentleman.

Mr. MOTT demanded the regular order.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I want this thing done right and the gentleman wants it done right.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I say it is being done right in this bill as it is written.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. Speaker, on page 2, section 2 provides that persons must be legally admitted to the United States. They cannot come in under any other conditions at all. They are here. They must have served in the World War. This simply extends the courtesy to become naturalized under a short-form naturalization process. It is endorsed by everyone who came before the committee. What amendment does the gentleman want to put in?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I have been telling the gentleman. I read my proposed amendment, but the gentleman probably did not hear it. All I want to do is to put the language in this bill that it shall apply to veterans who are here. That is what the American Legion wants and that is what everybody wants. If there is a loophole in it, and it looks as if there is, or the gentleman would not be so persistent, let us straighten it out.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I will accept the gentleman's amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, with the understanding my amendment will be accepted, I withdraw my reservation of objection and will permit the bill to be read.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (a) of section 1 of the act entitled "An act to further amend the naturalization laws, and for other purposes", approved May 25, 1932 (47 Stat. 165; U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 8, sec. 392b (a)), shall continue in force and effect to include petitions for citizenship filed prior to May 25, 1936, with any court having naturalization jurisdiction.

SEC. 2. The provisions of section 1 of this act are hereby extended to include any alien lawfully admitted into the United States for permanent residence who departed therefrom between August —, 1914, and April 5, 1917, or who, having been denied entry into the military and naval forces of the United States, departed therefrom subsequent to April 5, 1917, for the purpose of serving, and actually served prior to November 11, 1918, in the military or naval forces of any of the countries allied with the United States in the World War and was discharged from such service under honorable circumstances: Provided, That before any applicant for citizenship under this section is admitted to citizenship, the court shall be satisfied by competent proof that he is entitled to, and has complied in all respects with, the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. The Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, shall prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the enforcement of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 6, after the word "shall", insert the words "as herein amended."

And on page 2, line 1, after the word "jurisdiction", insert the following:

"Provided, That for the purposes of this act clause (1) of subdivision (a) of section 1 of the aforesaid act of May 25, 1932, is amended by striking out the words 'all such period' and in lieu thereof inserting the words 'the 5 years immediately preceding the filing of his petition.'"

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. JENKINS of Ohio: On page 2, line 21, after the word "act", strike out the period, insert a semicolon, and add the following: "and that he was and had been a bona fide lawfully admitted resident in the United States for 2 years before the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSENT CALENDAR

LOSS OF UNITED STATES CITIZENSHIP

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5799, to declare that a citizen of the United States who votes in a political election in a foreign state loses his citizenship.

Mr. WITHROW, Mr. JENKINS of Ohio, Mr. DIRKSEN, and Mr. WOLCOTT objected.

PACIFIC EXPOSITION OF 1938 AT LOS ANGELES

The Clerk called the next joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 164, authorizing the President to invite foreign countries to participate in the Pacific Exposition of 1938 at Los Angeles, Calif.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

GROVER CLEVELAND

The Clerk called the next joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 147, authorizing the erection of a monument to Grover Cleveland in Washington, D. C.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over until the Chairman of the Library Committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER], is present, to be returned to upon his return. I do this at the request of the Chairman of the Library Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

REPATRIATION OF NATIVE-BORN WOMEN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4354, to repatriate native-born women who have heretofore lost their citizenship by marriage to an alien, and for other purposes.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

CUSTODY OF FEDERAL PROCLAMATIONS, ORDERS, REGULATIONS, ETC.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6323, to provide for the custody of Federal proclamations, orders, regulations, notices, and other documents, and for the prompt and uniform printing and distribution thereof.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I discussed with the author of this measure, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], an amendment to this bill, and the amendment is acceptable to the gentleman from New York.

I would propose to strike out in line 9, on page 1, the words "there shall be at the head of the" and then strike out all of lines 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 on page 2.

I am informed that this work can be well handled by the present Assistant Director of Archives and will require no additional appropriation or no authorization by the President with respect to the appointment of a new director to handle the work.

Mr. CELLER. I thought we had agreed only that the salary of $6,000 would be stricken out. I agreed, however, most reluctantly and, indeed, not from choice, but simply to get the bill considered and not to have objections voiced against the bill. In view of the importance of the work to be done under the bill, I do hope the gentleman will not press his objection to the appointment of a director of division to handle this work. A tremendous task will be thrust upon such a gentleman. This position will require a great deal of skill and knowledge of law and codification. I understood the gentleman's main objection was to the salary that would be paid. The work probably could be conferred upon an assistant in the Archives Bureau, who might already have been appointed, and this would be among his tasks and duties, but to strike out the whole provision would destroy the symmetry of the bill, because in other places we mention a Director of Division. I do hope the gentleman will not press the striking out of all the words he has indicated.

Mr. TRUAX. I would call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the section remaining in the bill a new appointee could be appointed and receive a salary of, say, $10,000 a year. There is absolutely no protection there; and I would also remind the gentleman that 1 year ago, when we passed a bill which, as I recall, was on the Consent Calendar, authorizing the appointment of a Director of Archives, at a salary of $10,000 per year, I made the assertion that it would seem fair if we could select some one of the 70,000 employees already on the pay roll in Washington without importing a new man to handle this work.

Mr. CELLER. I am in thorough sympathy with the gentleman's endeavor to save money for the Government, but, as I have stated, in view of the fact that in other parts of the bill we mention a Director of Division, for example, at page 5, line 21, where the words "Director of the Division" are used, the whole fabric of the bill is sort of built around a Director of Division together with an appointee of the Attorney General and an appointee of the Government Printer. Strike out all the gentleman wants and you do much to destroy the bill.

Mr. TRUAX. Would the gentleman agree to an amendment stating "no other salary than those already provided for"?

Mr. CELLER. In view of the importance of the bill I would be in the position of being compelled to take the half loaf if I could not get the full loaf and I would be agreeable to that request, although again I yield most reluctantly.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I am very much interested in the discussion and particularly interested in the bill. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that this bill sets up an entirely distinct and separate feature in the Archives establishment, different from anything contemplated in the original Archives Act. It seems to me if we are going to get any benefit out of this measure, and we ought to get great benefit out of it, there should be some person specially selected whose duties and responsibilities would be the carrying out of the provisions of this bill alone, in no way connected with the preservation of the national archives.

Mr. TRUAX. I understand there is already employed a gentleman who is qualified to handle this particular work.

Mr. WOODRUM. If he is in the Archives establishment now he is receiving other pay, and I may say that if we are to get the full benefits of this bill there ought to be someone assigned to do this particular work. I know it has been the gentleman's experience as a legislator that if you want a good job done you have got to get a good man to do it and it cannot be done for nothing.

Mr. TRUAX. I agree with the gentleman about that.

Mr. WOODRUM. There are no funds in the appropriation for the Archives establishment for this particular work.

Some slight portion of it undoubtedly will be duplication and can be carried on by the regular force, but this bill, of course, will call for some additional force.

Mr. TRUAX. May I say to the gentleman from Virginia, who is a distinguished member of the Committee on Appropriations, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] has already agreed to the striking out of all of line 5 and part of line 4, with the intention that if the position can be taken care of by the present personnel, without any extra salary or appropriation, it will be done.

Mr. WOODRUM. That, of course, is agreeable to me. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] has done pioneer work on the bill, and I readily accede to anything that is agreeable to him.

Mr. CELLER. I agree, provided we do not strike out "Director of Division"; but I yield most grudgingly and hope the gentleman will not press his suggestion.

Mr. WOODRUM. Oh, I think the position ought to be left in the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX], he is familiar, of course, with the fact that the demand for this particular legislation has grown out of the fact that an enormous number of rules and regulations have been issued about which nothing has been known by the public at the time.

That is the cause of the immediate demand for legislation. We sought to bring about an arrangement under which rules and regulations will be given to the public and thereby given actual notice instead of mere constructive notice.

Then there is the matter of taking care of the archives. I call my friend's attention to the fact that the language in sections 4 and 5 is, as a matter of fact, language of limitation on any lump sum. The compensation cannot exceed $6,000. I am not familiar with the general legislation as to lump-sum appropriations, but if that language fixing the maximum at $6,000 is stricken out it might be possible that the salary would be fixed in excess of $6,000.

Mr. TRUAX. I made that observation a while ago.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. To be frank with the gentleman, the bill came to the Committee on the Judiciary from the Department of Justice. It was prepared by those who had charge of this particular activity, and the amount of salary provided for originally was $7,500.

The committee went into the matter very thoroughly and felt that the compensation should not exceed $6,000—that that would be enough compensation to put in the bill. It did not say that the salary must be $6,000 but not more than $6,000.

Personally, I am apprehensive that to strike out the language in the bill would be to strike out the limitation. We did not know whether they could get a man for a less amount of money who was qualified, and we did not want to pay him any more than that. I hope my friend will not insist on striking it out.

Mr. TRUAX. Does not the gentleman think that somebody might be obtained who was well qualified for four or five thousand dollars? I think we have a lot of such persons in the State of Ohio well qualified for the job.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my former amendment and offer another in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

A bill to provide for the custody of Federal proclamations, orders, regulations, notices, and other documents, and for the prompt and uniform printing and distribution thereof

Be it enacted, etc., That the Archivist of the United States, acting through a division established by him in the National Archives Establishment, hereinafter referred to as the "Division", is charged with the custody and, together with the Public Printer, with the prompt and uniform printing and distribution of the documents required or authorized to be published under section 5. There shall be at the head of the Division, a director, appointed by the President, who shall act under the general direction of the Archivist of the United States in carrying out the provisions of this act and the regulations prescribed hereunder, who shall receive a salary, to be fixed by the President, not to exceed $6,000 a year.

SEC. 2. The original and two duplicate originals or certified copies of any document required or authorized to be published under section 5 shall be filed with the Division, which shall be open at all hours for that purpose. The Director of the Division shall cause to be noted on the original and duplicate originals or certified copies of each document the day and hour of filing thereof: Provided, That when the original is issued, prescribed, or promulgated outside of the District of Columbia and certified copies are filed before the filing of the original, the notation shall be of the day and hour of filing of the certified copies. Upon such filing, at least one copy shall be immediately available for public inspection in the office of the Director of the Division. The original shall be retained in the archives of the National Archives Establishment and shall be available for inspection under regulations to be prescribed by the Archivist. The Division shall transmit immediately to the Government Printing Office for printing, as provided in this act, one duplicate original or certified copy of each document required or authorized to be published under section 5. Every Federal agency shall cause to be transmitted for filing as herein required the original and the duplicate originals or certified copies of all such documents issued, prescribed, or promulgated by the agency.

SEC. 3. All documents required or authorized to be published under section 5 shall be printed and distributed forthwith by the Government Printing Office in a serial publication designated the "Federal Register." It shall be the duty of the Public Printer to make available the facilities of the Government Printing Office for the prompt printing and distribution of the Federal Register in the manner and at the times required by the Archivist in accordance with the provisions of this act and the regulations perscribed hereunder. The contents of the daily issues shall be indexed and shall comprise all documents, required or authorized to be published, filed with the division up to such time of the day immediately preceding the day of distribution as shall be fixed by regulations hereunder. There shall be printed with each document a copy of the notation, required to be made under section 2, of the day and hour when, upon filing with the division, such document was made available for public inspection. Distribution shall be made by delivery or by deposit at a post office at such time in the morning of the day of distribution as shall be fixed by such regulations prescribed hereunder. The prices to be charged for the Federal Register may be fixed by the administrative committee established by section 6 without reference to the restrictions placed upon and fixed for the sale of Government publications by section 1 of the act of May 11, 1922, and section 307 of the act of June 30, 1932 (U. S. C., title 44, secs. 72 and 72a), and any amendments thereto.

SEC. 4. As used in this act, unless the context otherwise requires, the term "document" means any Presidential proclamation or Executive order and any order, regulation, rule, certificate, code of fair competition, license, notice, or similar instrument issued, prescribed, or promulgated by a Federal agency; the terms "Federal agency" or "agency" mean the President of the United States, or any executive department, independent board, establishment, bureau, agency, institution, commission, or separate office of the administrative branch of the Government of the United States but not the legislative or judicial branches of the Government; and the term "person" means any individual, partnership, association, or corporation.

SEC. 5. (a) There shall be published in the Federal Register (1) all Presidential proclamations and Executive orders, except such as have no general applicability and legal effect or are effective only against Federal agencies or persons in their capacity as officers, agents, or employees thereof; (2) such documents or classes of documents as the President shall determine from time to time have general applicability and legal effect; and (3) such documents or classes of documents as may be required so to be published by act of the Congress: Provided, That for the purposes of this act every document or order which shall prescribe a penalty shall be deemed to have general applicability and legal effect.

(b) In addition to the foregoing there shall also be published in the Federal Register such other documents or classes of documents as may be authorized to be published pursuant hereto by regulations prescribed hereunder with the approval of the President, but in no case shall comments or news items of any character whatsoever be authorized to be published in the Federal Register.

SEC. 6. There is established a permanent Administrative Committee, of three members, consisting of the Archivist or Acting Archivist, who shall be chairman, an officer of the Department of Justice designated by the Attorney General, and the Public Printer or Acting Public Printer. The Director of the Division shall act as secretary of the committee. The committee shall prescribe, with the approval of the President, regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act. Such regulations shall provide, among other things: (a) The manner of certification of copies required to be certified under section 2, which certification may be permitted to be based upon confirmed communications from outside of the District of Columbia; (b) the documents which shall be authorized pursuant to section 5 (b) to be published in the Federal Register; (c) the manner and form in which the Federal Register shall be printed, reprinted, compiled, indexed, bound, and distributed; (d) the number of copies of the Federal Register which shall be printed, reprinted, and compiled, the number which shall be distributed without charge to Members of Congress, officers and employees of the United States, or any Federal agency for their official use, and the number which shall be available for distribution to the public; and (e) the prices to be charged for individual copies of, and subscriptions to, the Federal Register and reprints and bound volumes thereof.

SEC. 7. No document required under section 5 (a) to be published in the Federal Register shall be effective as against any person who has not had actual knowledge thereof until the duplicate originals or certified copies of the document shall have been filed with the division and a copy made available for public inspection as provided in section 2; and, unless otherwise specifically provided by statute, such filing of any document, required or authorized to be published under section 5, shall, except in cases where notice by publication is insufficient in law, be sufficient to give notice of the contents of such document to any person subject thereto or affected thereby. The publication in the Federal Register of any document shall create a rebuttable presumption (a) that it was duly issued, prescribed, or promulgated; (b) that it was duly filed with the Division and made available for public inspection at the day and hour stated in the printed notation; (c) that the copy contained in the Federal Register is a true copy of the original; and (d) that all requirements of this act and the regulations prescribed hereunder relative to such document have been complied with. The contents of the Federal Register shall be judicially noticed and, without prejudice to any other mode of citation, may be cited by volume and page number.

SEC. 8. Whenever notice of hearing or of opportunity to be heard is required or authorized to be given by or under an act of the Congress, or may otherwise properly be given, the notice shall be deemed to have been duly given to all persons residing within the continental United States (not including Alaska), except in cases where notice by publication is insufficient in law, if said notice shall be published in the Federal Register at such time that the period between the publication and the date fixed in such notice for the hearing or for the termination of the opportunity to be heard shall be (a) not less than the time specifically prescribed for the publication of the notice by the appropriate act of the Congress; or (b) not less than 15 days when no time for publication is specifically prescribed by the act, without prejudice, however, to the effectiveness of any notice of less than 15 days where such shorter period is reasonable.

SEC. 9. Every payment made for the Federal Register shall be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt. The cost of printing, reprinting, wrapping, binding, and distributing the Federal Register and any other expenses incurred by the Government Printing Office in carrying out the duties placed upon it by this act shall be borne by the general appropriation to the Government Printing Office and such appropriation is hereby made available, and is authorized to be increased by an amount equal to the amount so covered into the Treasury and such additional sums as are necessary, for such purposes. The purposes for which appropriations are available and are authorized to be made under section 10 of the act entitled "An act to establish a National Archives of the United States Government, and for other purposes" (48 Stat. 1122) are enlarged to cover the additional duties placed upon the National Archives Establishment by the provisions of this act. Copies of the Federal Register mailed by the Government shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails in the same manner as the official mail of the executive departments of the Government. The cost of mailing the Federal Register to officers and employees of Federal agencies in foreign countries shall be borne by the respective agencies.

SEC. 10. The provisions of section 2 shall become effective 60 days after the date of approval of this act and the publication of the Federal Register shall begin within 3 business days thereafter. The limitations upon the effectiveness of documents required, under section 5 (a), to be published in the Federal Register shall not be operative as to any document issued, prescribed, or promulgated prior to the date when such document is first required by this or subsequent act of the Congress or by Executive order to be published in the Federal Register.

SEC. 11. Within 6 months after the approval of this act each agency shall prepare and file with the committee a complete compilation of all documents which have been issued or promulgated prior to the date documents are required or authorized by this act to be published in the Federal Register and which are still in force and effect and relied upon by the agency as authority for, or invoked or used by it in the discharge of, any of its functions or activities. The committee shall, within 60 days thereafter, report with respect thereto to the President, who shall determine which of such documents have general applicability and legal effect, and shall authorize the publication thereof in a special or supplemental edition or issue of the Federal Register. Such special or supplemental editions or issues shall be distributed in the same manner as regular editions or issues, and shall be included in the bound volumes of the Federal Register as supplements thereto.

SEC. 12. Nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to treaties, conventions, protocols, and other international agreements or proclamations thereof by the President.

SEC. 13. All acts or parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed insofar as they conflict herewith.

SEC. 14. This act may be cited as the "Federal Register Act."

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 4, after the word "hereunder", strike out the following: "who shall receive a salary, to be fixed by the President, not to exceed $6,000 a year."

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer a substitute amendment on the same point.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I repeat the statement I made a while ago. One year ago, when the bill authorizing the creation of this new position of Superintendent of Archives was under consideration, I said then it was not necessary to import a specialist to handle this job at a salary of $10,000 a year, nor is it necessary today to import a specialist at a salary of $6,000 a year to handle this particular job. It seems to me that with all of the thousands of employees who are employed alone in the Government Printing Office, there should be found one man, or perhaps a woman, eminently qualified for this position at a salary perhaps of three or four thousand dollars a year. One of the pledges of our party in that historic convention held in Chicago in 1932 was a solemn promise to the people of this country to cut down bureaucracy and reduce bureaucratic expense. If I recall that convention correctly, we pledged in our party platform a reduction of at least 25 percent of the bureaucratic expenses of this Nation. Instead of that, we have increased vastly the positions now being held by the bureaucrats and the salaries that they are drawing.

I am informed that the main controversy in the adoption of the report of the conferees on the public-works relief bill is because of the objections of Mr. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, to an amendment adopted by the Senate which provides that one-third of $900,000,000 shall be spent directly for labor. I was one of the few Democrats who voted "no" on the motion to recommit that conference report to the conference committee. I voted "no" because I am opposed unalterably to any further usurpation of bureaucratic power by Mr. Ickes, Mr. Hopkins, or any of the other "four horsemen."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. TABER. If they would repeal the N. R. A. and A. A. A. and a few of those rackets, we would not need this bill at all.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I do not favor the repeal of the N. R. A., because it contains provisions that are beneficial to American labor, such as the abolition of child labor, the outlawing of "yellow dog" contracts, and the right of labor to collective bargaining. There is much more good in the N. R. A. than there is bad, and therefore I favor, and shall vote for, its retention.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. And I think the gentleman is in accord with me, that the interpretation of the labor provisions of the N. R. A. have been against labor, and those interpretations are being used to regiment labor to a low standard of living.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I am in accord with the gentleman's statement. I sit on the Committee on Labor with the gentleman. We had Mr. Richberg testify before our committee and we have legislation now in our committee which we have reported favorably for passage that will correct that situation and make section 7 (a) what it is intended to be, a protection for the rights of American labor.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman please get back to the bill that we are discussing.

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. And tell us what he thinks about that amendment which he has suggested.

Mr. TRUAX. My amendment?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. I am for it 100 percent. I think it should be adopted by the House.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Following the gentleman's views, does he not think that we should go a little further and put the employees of this new bureau under civil service. If we did that, then we could find a person at the salary the gentleman has suggested.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman mean by putting them under civil service that that will mean Republican appointments by the Republican bureaucrats?

Mr. MICHENER. Oh, no.

Mr. TRUAX. That has been my experience. I have found that many times whenever you place employees under civil service, it means the appointment of Republicans, regardless of merit.

Mr. MICHENER. The only way that that could be possibly true would be because only Republicans are competent.

Mr. TRUAX. I ask the Members of this House to adopt this amendment. It eliminates the necessity for going out into some other State, possibly New York, and importing a specialist at a salary of $6,000 a year, when we have men right in the departments here who are well qualified and have all the specialization that is necessary to handle the job.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I sympathize thoroughly with the aims and aspirations of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] to keep down expenditures for the operations of various bureaus and departments of the Government. Unfortunately, the gentleman from Ohio injected into his remarks matters that are extraneous to the subject at hand. This bill has nothing to do with the usurpation of bureaucratic power and other and sundry items the gentleman adverted to. I rise to call the attention of Members of the House to the importance of this legislation.

In the first 15 months after March 4, 1933, the President alone issued 674 Executive orders, aggregating approximately 1,400 pages. This was a greater volume than that of the preceding 4 years, and nearly six times as great as that for the 39 years from 1862 through 1900. Moreover, in the first year of the National Recovery Administration 2,998 administrative orders were issued. In addition to these, the N. R. A. has adopted numerous regulations and sets of regulations which can only be found after a search through some 5,991 press releases issued during this period. It is estimated that the N. R. A. alone issued in all some 10,000 pages of "law"—a greater volume than the total amount of statute law contained in the United States Code.

Aside from the tremendous number of rules and regulations issued by the National Recovery Administration and the great activity by the President in the promulgation of his Executive orders, there are the many other departments and officials adding to the avalanche of executive orders, decrees, regulations, notices, and codes. The Agricultural Adjustment Administration has issued many series of regulations, some of them most complicated by amendments and supplements. There are customs regulations, internal-revenue regulations, immigration rules and regulations, and postal rules and regulations, comprising several volumes, frequently amended. The Veterans' Bureau has issued two large volumes of regulations; much of the data are already out of date. There is an elaborate series of regulations under the Pure Food and Drugs Act. Pretty soon the new boards and new commissions, like the Federal Communications Commission and the Securities and Exchange Commission, will issue their myriad of executive legislation. We have mentioned only a few of the bureaus. There are literally dozens of agencies with powers to publish rules and regulations. Ofttimes these rules and regulations prescribe penalties. It is difficult at times to find out what they are. Yet the property and persons of the citizens may be at stake.

The enactments of Congress are easily available, but often the regulations issued under them are more important than the basic acts. But these administrative rules and pronouncements oftentimes cannot be found. As to their publication and distribution, there is utter chaos. These rules and regulations frequently appear in separate paper pamphlets, some printed on single sheets of paper and easily lost. Any attempt to compile a complete private collection of these rules and regulations would be wellnigh impossible. No law library, public or private, contains them all. Officials of the department issuing them frequently do not know all of their own regulations. Recently, as has been pointed out by Prof. Erwin N. Griswold, of the Harvard Law School, in an article in the December 1934 issue of the Harvard Law Review, entitled "Government in Ignorance of the Law—A Plea for Better Publication of Executive Legislation", an indictment was brought and an appeal was taken by the Government to the Supreme Court before it was discovered that the regulation on which the proceeding was based did not exist. (See United States v. Smith, no. 3, October term, 1934,; appeal dismissed on motion of the appellant, Oct. 1, 1934. See New York Times, Oct. 2, 1934, at p. 6.)

A committee of the American Bar Association has this to say on the subject:

> The practice of filing Executive orders with the Department of State is not uniformly or regularly followed, and the totals are really greater than above indicated. Some orders are retained or buried in the files of the Government departments, some are confidential and are not published, and the practice as to printing and publication of orders is not uniform. Some orders are made known and available rather promptly after their approval; the publication of others may be delayed a month or more, with consequent confusion in numbering. The comparatively large number of recent orders which incorporate provisions purporting to impose criminal penalties by way of fine and imprisonment for violation is without numerical precedent in the history of the Government.

Such chaos and disorder concerning statutory rules and regulations demands an immediate solution. H. R. 6323 provides such solution. There shall be an official publication called the "Federal Register", in which all rules and regulations shall systematically and uniformly be published, and such Federal Register shall be readily accessible to all parties interested. There shall be available for public use indices and tabulations of such rules and regulations.

There is not an enlightened country in the world that has not legislation of this character. I have taken the trouble to go through many volumes to discover what England does, what Canada does, and the South American countries, and France, India, New Zealand, and South Africa. They all have legislation of this character and they have had it for years. A bill of this character was passed by the English Parliament as far back as 1890. The London Gazette is the English publication corresponding to the Federal Register set up in my bill. When you recollect that there are these 11,000 pages of rules and regulations promulgated by the N. R. A.—and very few people know what they are or where they are—you will have some idea of the size of this job. Suppose any one of you had to codify and rearrange that vast amount of administrative law. You would have your hands full.

In some departments these rules and regulations take the form of mimeographed blanks, they take the form of telegraph blanks, yet many of those so-called "rules and regulations", so improperly promulgated, carry with them penalties threatening your liberties. Take the huge amount of rules and regulations issued by the Veterans' Bureau and a similar number issued by the Post Office Department, the S. E. C., the R. F. C., the A. A. A., the F. E. R. A., the C. C. C., H. O. L. C., and so forth. Where they are and what they are the Lord only knows. It takes a Sabbath-day journey to find a few of them, yet we know that these rules and regulations are far more important than the basic acts that we pass in this House. See how lax we have been? Shall that laxity continue?

Keep in mind that anomalous situation that arose in Texas when a man was arrested and indicted for an alleged violation of a regulation which had been repealed prior to the date of the alleged offense. Yet nobody connected with the Petroleum Code knew anything about the repeal of the regulation. The United States attorney knew nothing about it. The great Department of Justice had to move to dismiss the case.

Such proceedings make us look ridiculous. It shall not happen again. My bill is the safeguard.

Now is the time to call a halt. We should have some means by which the whole Nation may be apprised of rules and regulations promulgated, many of which carry criminal penalties, so that you and I will be safe from arrest for violating something which does not even exist.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Does the gentleman think this will in any way encourage the continuation of legislation in that manner?

Mr. CELLER. My bill will prevent it. I think it would discourage also the so-called "wild cat" legislation by rule and regulation. Heads of bureaus will think twice and most carefully before promulgating rules. This bill has two purposes. It provides for the codification of all past rules and regulations and proper promulgation of rules and regulations in the future, and the custody of those rules and regulations in the proper place is assured, after certain notice, so that you and I may know where to find them and what they are. They will be under a division composed of a member of the Archives Department, a member of the Department of Justice, and the Government Printing Office.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BLAND. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman ought to give consideration to the fact that there are other important bills on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. I will not use the 5 minutes.

There must be a specialist employed to supervise this work. It requires much acumen, intelligence, and skill. Originally we wanted to place this whole thing in the Library of Congress, but we found the Librarian had not the facilities to handle the situation. We wanted to save the money which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] is anxious about. We then had arranged to let the Department of Justice handle it exclusively. The Attorney General said they had no facilities. We went to the Bureau of Archives, and they said they would be glad to handle it, provided we would get a man skillful enough, well grounded, and highly intelligent, and who had a ready knowledge of departmental work. If you are going to reduce the amount of salary which we originally placed at $7,500 in the bill, down to three or four thousand dollars, you will not get the proper man to handle this work. I hope you will not reduce the salary to such a low extent that you will not get the proper talent to take care of this work. I believe $6,000 is the proper amount.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. It is true that an ordinary clerk of a small court or the clerk of a city or town receives in the vicinity of three or four or five thousand dollars a year salary for the type of work he does?

Mr. CELLER. That is true.

Mr. HEALEY. And this man will have all of these very valuable documents, affecting all of the people in our country and our Government, under his jurisdiction?

Mr. CELLER. That is true.

Herewith I give you a synopsis of the bill by sections:

Section 1 provides that the Archivist of the United States shall be charged with the custody and, together with the Public Printer, with the prompt and uniform printing and distribution of the documents required or authorized to be published under the provisions of the bill. This section further provides that the provisions of the bill shall be carried out under the supervision of a director, appointed by the President, who in turn shall act under the general direction of the Archivist of the United States.

Section 2 provides for the filing with the division in charge, of the original and two duplicate originals or certified copies of any documents required or authorized to be published under section 4 of the bill. Further provision under section 2 is made that the original be retained in the archives of the National Archives Establishment and that one duplicate, original, or certified copy thereof be immediately transmitted to the Government Printing Office for printing.

Section 3 provides for the printing and distribution by the Government Printing Office of a serial publication designated the "Federal Register", to be distributed daily except Sundays, Mondays, and days following legal holidays. It is further provided in section 3 that the contents of the daily issue shall comprise all documents filed with the Division up to such time of the day immediately preceding the day of distribution as shall be fixed by the regulations. The method of distribution of, and the prices to be charged for, the Federal Register are also provided for in section 3.

Section 4 sets forth the documents required or authorized to be filed in the Division and to be published in the Federal Register.

Section 5 (a) makes specification as to which Presidential proclamations and Executive orders shall be published in the Federal Register, as well as to which document or classes of documents are to be published.

Section 5 (b) further provides for the publication in the Register of certain other documents or classes of documents.

Section 6 provides for the establishment of a permanent administrative committee of three members, which committee, consisting of the Archivist or Acting Archivist, an officer of the Department of Justice designated by the Attorney General, and the Public Printer or Acting Public Printer, shall prescribe, with the approval of the President, regulations for carrying out the provisions of the bill. The provisions of such regulations are also set forth in section 6.

Section 7 provides that the Federal Register shall be judicially noticed.

Section 8 provides that publication in the Federal Register shall be deemed to have been duly given to all persons residing within the continental United States (not including Alaska), except in cases where notice by publication is insufficient in law.

Section 9 provides that the purposes for which appropriations are available and are authorized to be made under section 10 of the act entitled "An act to establish a National Archives of the United States Government, and for other purposes" (48 Stat. 1122) are enlarged to cover the additional duties placed upon the National Archives Establishment by the provisions of this bill.

Section 10 provides that the provisions of section 2 of this bill shall become effective 60 days after the date of approval of this bill and the publication of the Federal Register shall begin within 3 business days thereafter.

Section 11 makes provision for and sets forth rules governing the publication of a special or supplemental edition or issue of the Federal Register.

Section 12 excludes treaties, conventions, protocols, and other international agreements or proclamations thereof by the President from the provisions of this bill.

Section 13 provides that all acts or parts of acts in conflict with this act are repealed insofar as they conflict therewith.

Section 14 provides that this act may be cited as the "Federal Register Act."

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a perfecting amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ZIONCHECK: Page 2, line 5, strike out "$6,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The only reason I do this is to let the House say whether they will limit the salary to $5,000 or $6,000.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the perfecting amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to provide for the custody of Federal proclamations, orders, regulations, notices, and other documents, and for the prompt and uniform printing and distribution thereof

Be it enacted, etc., That the Archivist of the United States, acting through a division established by him in the National Archives Establishment, hereinafter referred to as the "Division", is charged with the custody and, together with the Public Printer, with the prompt and uniform printing and distribution of the documents required or authorized to be published under section 5. There shall be at the head of the Division a director, appointed by the President, who shall act under the general direction of the Archivist of the United States in carrying out the provisions of this act and the regulations prescribed hereunder, who shall receive a salary, to be fixed by the President, not to exceed $6,000 a year.

SEC. 2. The original and two duplicate originals or certified copies of any document required or authorized to be published under section 5 shall be filed with the Division, which shall be open at all hours for that purpose. The Director of the Division shall cause to be noted on the original and duplicate originals or certified copies of each document the day and hour of filing thereof: Provided, That when the original is issued, prescribed, or promulgated outside of the District of Columbia and certified copies are filed before the filing of the original, the notation shall be of the day and hour of filing of the certified copies. Upon such filing, at least one copy shall be immediately available for public inspection in the office of the Director of the Division. The original shall be retained in the archives of the National Archives Establishment and shall be available for inspection under regulations to be prescribed by the Archivist. The Division shall transmit immediately to the Government Printing Office for printing, as provided in this act, one duplicate original or certified copy of each document required or authorized to be published under section 5. Every Federal agency shall cause to be transmitted for filing as herein required the original and the duplicate originals or certified copies of all such documents issued, prescribed, or promulgated by the agency.

SEC. 3. All documents required or authorized to be published under section 5 shall be printed and distributed forthwith by the Government Printing Office in a serial publication designated the "Federal Register." It shall be the duty of the Public Printer to make available the facilities of the Government Printing Office for the prompt printing and distribution of the Federal Register in the manner and at the times required by the Archivist in accordance with the provisions of this act and the regulations prescribed hereunder. The contents of the daily issues shall be indexed and shall comprise all documents, required or authorized to be published, filed with the Division up to such time of the day immediately preceding the day of distribution as shall be fixed by regulations hereunder. There shall be printed with each document a copy of the notation, required to be made under section 2, of the day and hour when, upon filing with the Division, such document was made available for public inspection. Distribution shall be made by delivery or by deposit at a post office at such time in the morning of the day of distribution as shall be fixed by such regulations prescribed hereunder. The prices to be charged for the Federal Register may be fixed by the administrative committee established by section 6 without reference to the restrictions placed upon and fixed for the sale of Government publications by section 1 of the act of May 11, 1922, and section 307 of the act of June 30, 1932 (U. S. C., title 44, secs. 72 and 72a), and any amendments thereto.

SEC. 4. As used in this act, unless the context otherwise requires, the term "document" means any Presidential proclamation or Executive order and any order, regulation, rule, certificate, code of fair competition, license, notice, or similar instrument issued, prescribed, or promulgated by a Federal agency; the terms "Federal agency" or "agency" mean the President of the United States, or any executive department, independent board, establishment, bureau, agency, institution, commission, or separate office of the administrative branch of the Government of the United States but not the legislative or judicial branches of the Government; and the term "person" means any individual, partnership, association, or corporation.

SEC. 5. (a) There shall be published in the Federal Register (1) all Presidential proclamations and Executive orders, except such as have no general applicability and legal effect or are effective only against Federal agencies or persons in their capacity as officers, agents, or employees thereof; (2) such documents or classes of documents as the President shall determine from time to time have general applicability and legal effect; and (3) such documents or classes of documents as may be required so to be published by act of the Congress: Provided, That for the purposes of this act every document or order which shall prescribe a penalty shall be deemed to have general applicability and legal effect.

(b) In addition to the foregoing there shall also be published in the Federal Register such other documents or classes of documents as may be authorized to be published pursuant hereto by regulations prescribed hereunder with the approval of the President, but in no case shall comments or news items of any character whatsoever be authorized to be published in the Federal Register.

SEC. 6. There is established a permanent Administrative Committee of three members consisting of the Archivist or Acting Archivist, who shall be chairman, an officer of the Department of Justice designated by the Attorney General, and the Public Printer or Acting Public Printer. The director of the division shall act as secretary of the committee. The committee shall prescribe, with the approval of the President, regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act. Such regulations shall provide, among other things: (a) The manner of certification of copies required to be certified under section 2, which certification may be permitted to be based upon confirmed communications from outside of the District of Columbia; (b) the documents which shall be authorized pursuant to section 5 (b) to be published in the Federal Register; (c) the manner and form in which the Federal Register shall be printed, reprinted, compiled, indexed, bound, and distributed; (d) the number of copies of the Federal Register which shall be printed, reprinted, and compiled, the number which shall be distributed without charge to Members of Congress, officers and employees of the United States, or any Federal agency for their official use, and the number which shall be available for distribution to the public; and (e) the prices to be charged for individual copies of, and subscriptions to, the Federal Register and reprints and bound volumes thereof.

SEC. 7. No document required under section 5 (a), to be published in the Federal Register shall be effective as against any person who has not had actual knowledge thereof until the duplicate originals or certified copies of the document shall have been filed with the division and a copy made available for public inspection as provided in section 2; and, unless otherwise specifically provided by statute, such filing of any document, required or authorized to be published under section 5, shall, except in cases where notice by publication is insufficient in law, be sufficient to give notice of the contents of such document to any person subject thereto or affected thereby. The publication in the Federal Register of any document shall create a rebuttable presumption (a) that it was duly issued, prescribed, or promulgated; (b) that it was duly filed with the division and made available for public inspection at the day and hour stated in the printed notation; (c) that the copy contained in the Federal Register is a true copy of the original; and, (d) that all requirements of this act and the regulations prescribed hereunder relative to such document have been complied with. The contents of the Federal Register shall be judicially noticed and, without prejudice to any other mode of citation, may be cited by volume and page number.

SEC. 8. Whenever notice of hearing or of opportunity to be heard is required or authorized to be given by or under an act of the Congress, or may otherwise properly be given, the notice shall be deemed to have been duly given to all persons residing within the continental United States (not including Alaska), except in cases where notice by publication is insufficient in law, if said notice shall be published in the Federal Register at such time that the period between the publication and the date fixed in such notice for the hearing or for the termination of the opportunity to be heard shall be (a) not less than the time specifically prescribed for the publication of the notice by the appropriate act of the Congress; or (b) not less than 15 days when no time for publication is specifically prescribed by the act, without prejudice, however, to the effectiveness of any notice of less than 15 days where such shorter period is reasonable.

SEC. 9. Every payment made for the Federal Register shall be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt. The cost of printing, reprinting, wrapping, binding, and distributing the Federal Register and any other expenses incurred by the Government Printing Office in carrying out the duties placed upon it by this act shall be borne by the general appropriation to the Government Printing Office and such appropriation is hereby made available, and is authorized to be increased by an amount equal to the amount so covered into the Treasury and such additional sums as are necessary, for such purposes. The purposes for which appropriations are available and are authorized to be made under section 10 of the act entitled "An act to establish a National Archives of the United States Government, and for other purposes" (48 Stat. 1122) are enlarged to cover the additional duties placed upon the National Archives Establishment by the provisions of this act. Copies of the Federal Register mailed by the Government shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails in the same manner as the official mail of the executive departments of the Government. The cost of mailing the Federal Register to officers and employees of Federal agencies in foreign countries shall be borne by the respective agencies.

SEC. 10. The provisions of section 2 shall become effective 60 days after the date of approval of this act and the publication of the Federal Register shall begin within 3 business days thereafter. The limitations upon the effectiveness of documents required, under section 5 (a), to be published in the Federal Register shall not be operative as to any document issued, prescribed, or promulgated prior to the date when such document is first required by this or subsequent act of the Congress or by Executive order to be published in the Federal Register.

SEC. 11. Within 6 months after the approval of this act each agency shall prepare and file with the committee a complete compilation of all documents which have been issued or promulgated prior to the date documents are required or authorized by this act to be published in the Federal Register and which are still in force and effect and relied upon by the agency as authority for, or invoked or used by it in the discharge of, any of its functions or activities. The committee shall within 60 days thereafter report with respect thereto to the President, who shall determine which of such documents have general applicability and legal effect, and shall authorize the publication thereof in a special or supplemental edition or issue of the Federal Register. Such special or supplemental editions or issues shall be distributed in the same manner as regular editions or issues, and shall be included in the bound volumes of the Federal Register as supplements thereto.

SEC. 12. Nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to treaties, conventions, protocols, and other international agreements, or proclamations thereof by the President.

SEC. 13. All acts or parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed insofar as they conflict herewith.

SEC. 14. This act may be cited as the "Federal Register Act."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, the bill (H. R. 6359) relating to repeal of publicity of income-tax returns has been sent to conference and the conferees will meet in the near future to consider the Senate amendment.

As there has been no opportunity to debate the amendment in the House I wish to call attention to its importance and to express the hope that the House conferees will recede and agree to it in conference.

The Senate amendment provides:

(1) All returns filed under this title shall be open to examination by any official, body, or commission of any State or political subdivision thereof lawfully charged with the administration of any State or local tax laws and while engaged in the performance of official duties. Such examination shall be made in a manner prescribed by the Commissioner and approved by the Secretary.

(2) Any information thus secured by an official, body, or commission of any State or political subdivision thereof shall be used only in connection with the administration of State or local tax laws and for no other purpose. Any such official or employee or agent of any such body or commission who divulges, except in the performance of his official duties, or when called upon to testify in any court or official proceedings, any information acquired by him through examination of said income-tax returns, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall upon conviction be punished by a fine of not less than $500 and not more than $1,000.

This is a most salutary provision, Mr. Speaker. While protecting the returns from scrutiny by the general public as provided by the House bill it affords the tax authorities of States which impose a State income tax an opportunity to compare State and Federal returns, and thereby discourages evasion of the State law and insures a maximum State revenue from this source.

The importance of this provision is indicated by the fact that in my own State inspection of Federal income-tax returns by the State taxing authorities brought in an additional $400,000 to the State of Missouri last year which otherwise would not have been collected. The Senate amendment, while affording ample protection from unofficial inspection, is the most effective aid in the enforcement of State income-tax laws that could be enacted. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the crying fiscal need of the States today is revenue with which to match Federal contributions—contributions for Federal relief, contributions for old-age pensions, contributions for the building of State roads, contributions to insure the maintenance of our schools and equal educational facilities to the children of every American citizen. There is hardly a State in the Union that is not hard pressed for funds to finance one or all of these essential activities, and agreement by the House conferees to the Senate amendment will do more to care for the aged and the needy, to relieve unemployment and to provide for the proper training of the next generation than anything else that could be done in this connection.

A provision of this character, contributing to the enforcement of State income-tax laws, will to that extent protect the consumer against the necessity for the imposition of irksome and burdensome sales taxes to which some States are having to resort in order to provide for these purposes.

I sincerely trust the House conferees will agree in conference to the Senate amendment and am certain the House will be inclined to favor such a report if opportunity is afforded.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMPACTS BETWEEN STATES

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 146, to authorize the several States to negotiate compacts or agreements to promote greater uniformity in the laws of such States affecting labor and industries.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY] states that in no way will this bill be detrimental to labor or labor disputes, or in any manner authorize State compacts of that kind.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, this resolution is designed to protect the interests of labor. I have a letter from the president of the American Federation of Labor, Mr. Green, the last paragraph of which reads as follows:

Secretary Watts states that the resolution deserves the support of labor. I concur in this position. I am glad to advise you in this way.

This letter is signed by William Green, president American Federation of Labor.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALEY. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think there is an ambiguity in section 3 which should be cleared up. I am asking these questions merely to accomplish the legislative intent of the author of the bill. Is it the gentleman's understanding that the last sentence requires that these pacts be sent to Congress for the approbation of Congress before they become effective?

Mr. HEALEY. That is absolutely so. There is not a safeguard that already exists that is not included in this particular bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. After the States have entered into the compacts and their legislatures have ratified them they must then be ratified by Congress?

Mr. HEALEY. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is the object of the bill.

Mr. HEALEY. The objects of the bill are manifold. Section 2 provides that upon the request of the States negotiating under this act the President may designate a representative to attend upon such negotiations. This is new and confers a right upon the States to request that a representative of the Government be present during the negotiation of the pact. The bill also is designed to encourage and support the policy of States entering into agreements and compacts with each other and in groups for the purpose of agreeing upon and securing uniform legislation affecting the relation of employer and employees.

Events of the past 3 or 4 years have demonstrated that there is a necessity for a more effective method of conserving the economic and social interests of the citizens of the several States. The migration of factories from State to State has become all too common. The causes of this migration can be found principally in the effort to discover locations where the most lenient industrial legislation exists. States which have enacted regulatory legislation for the betterment of working conditions in its industries find themselves sorely handicapped in competition with those States which have less stringent industrial legislation. This condition has become accentuated during the depression. This situation has resulted in a general lowering of standards. Advances which have taken years to accomplish are in danger of being swept away.

This legislation will afford the States an opportunity to reach a solution of problems confronting them by their own efforts and by mutual cooperation. The members of the Judiciary Committee, which unanimously reported this resolution, believe such efforts should be encouraged in every way by the Federal Government. Favorable action by Congress on this resolution is a significant step in the direction of indicating our desire for higher standards of industrial legislation.

The compacts may provide for considerable flexibility of legislative and administrative detail which will leave the individual States free to draft their legislative and administrative decrees in common without restrictive details in the compacts themselves. Provision may be made for continuing modification in the light of experience in that operation.

Compacts between States have hithertofore been concerned with the natural or physical resources of the various States that have entered into them, while compacts envisaged under this resolution will be concerned with social interests. There is, in fact, a precedent which may be recited in relation to this resolution, chapter 186, acts of 1911—Sixty-first Congress, United States Statutes at Large, volume 36, part 1, page 961—provides in part as follows:

The consent of the Congress of the United States is hereby given to each of the several States of the Union to enter into any agreement of compact not in conflict with any law of the United States, with any other State or States, for the purpose of conserving the forests and the water supply of the States entering into such an agreement or compact.

Not only is this an example of advance consent as provided by this resolution, but it is an indication of the interest of the Congress in conservation. Thus, it may be seen that the conservation of natural resources was recognized as a matter of national concern more than 20 years ago. Surely then it must be no less evident today that the conservation of the economic and social interests and resources of the several States should be a matter of not less importance and national concern.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I thank the gentleman.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Joint resolution to authorize the several States to negotiate compacts or agreements to promote greater uniformity in the laws of such States affecting labor and industries

Resolved, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to the several States to negotiate and enter into compacts or agreements among them or any of them providing for greater uniformity in the laws of the several States affecting the relation of employers and employees.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU: Page 1, line 3, strike out all of section 1 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That upon the request of the Governor of any State negotiating a compact or agreement with any other State or States the President may designate a representative to attend upon such negotiations."

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I did not ask any questions of the gentleman from Massachusetts while he was attempting to secure unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill because I did not want any objections I may have had to the bill to start any discussion that might ultimately result in killing the bill.

I think it has a very good purpose, namely, that the Federal Government shall assist the various States in an effort to negotiate these agreements. I do not believe, however, that we should go as far as this bill goes. It is dangerous, because, as I see it, if two States were to enter into a pact or agreement and that pact or agreement were confirmed or approved by the Congress, there is no way in which the various States could get out from under the provisions of the agreement excepting and unless they again entered into another agreement canceling the first. The gentleman from Massachusetts stated to me privately when I was discussing the matter with him that undoubtedly these agreements or pacts would contain some provision which would enable the States to get out from under the provisions of such agreement once it became operative; however, I believe it is dangerous to enter upon a policy that makes it possible for two or more States to enter into an agreement that would be so binding there would be no possibility of those States repealing the same and no possibility of their changing their minds later on unless they got the consent of the other States with which they negotiated the treaty. Therefore, I offered the amendment which would have the effect of merely authorizing the President to designate some Federal Government official to collaborate with the States and assist them in entering into negotiations.

Mr. LLOYD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LLOYD. Will the gentleman answer this question: If one State did not want to abide by the agreement how could the agreement be enforced?

Mr. BOILEAU. That is the law.

Mr. LLOYD. But how could it be enforced?

Mr. BOILEAU. It would be enforced the same as any other law, as I understand it, and I confess I have not given this matter the thought and study that would justify me in making an objection that would kill the bill. That is what prompted me to refrain from interposing an objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Perhaps I can help the gentleman. When the proposed legislation was first suggested, it contained a provision that the conferees should be the States and a representative of the Federal Government. I was responsible for raising the point that the Federal Government had no business in these conferences among the States which dealt with matters peculiarly to the interests of the States themselves unless invited. As a compromise it was arranged that if the States themselves desired the assistance of the Federal Government they would notify the Federal Government to send a representative to the conference. We were anxious to get away from the notion that the Federal Government was dominating the conferences of States dealing with matters peculiar to the States' own interests.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is a fine position for the gentleman to take, and I believe my amendment accomplishes just that, because it provides that upon the request of the Governor of one of the States the President of the United States shall designate some official to assist in negotiations with the States. I do not believe that any agreement the States might enter into would be binding until Congress approved of the agreement. That is as I see it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I make this statement to the gentleman? The gentleman is familiar with the fact that the only limitation imposed upon the right of the States to enter into an agreement is contained in the Federal Constitution. The Federal Constitution provides that agreements are not effective or binding unless they are approved by Congress. In this connection, may I say this—and I do so because it is of more than ordinary and passing interest. There is not so much reason for that provision in the Constitution now. As a matter of fact, it was incorporated in the Constitution in the beginning in order to prevent groups of States from getting together and breaking up the Union. We are now a Nation.

May I say just one more word, which will not take more than a minute, and then I will be through?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BOILEAU. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Does the gentleman think if the States did enter into a pact, that the Federal Government could coerce any State in the Union to live up to that pact? I think that is the subject which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] was just discussing. Could you coerce or force through the Federal Government the States to live up to any kind of a pact?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No. I do not think so, with reference to the character of agreement which seems to be contemplated under this bill.

Mr. DONDERO. I do not think you could, either.

Mr. BOILEAU. May I ask the gentleman from Texas if there is any necessity for Congress to give the States authority to enable them to negotiate or to get together and talk over these pacts?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I doubt whether you could coerce any State to do anything. I think this is in the nature of a treaty between sovereign States, but they may not make it unless they have the authority of Congress. That is all there is to it.

Mr. Speaker, there is one thing I want to say to my colleagues. Due to the enormous concentration of power in the Federal Government and the fact we do not have the opportunity for decentralization that for instance England has, where it has physical separation among its territories, we are going to have to develop in America the policy of States that have things that are of common interest getting together and dealing with such interest without having to come to the American Congress in order to have it done for them. We will have to feel our way in that direction. This bill will help to give us a chance to see how it works.

Mr. BOILEAU. I agree with the gentleman perfectly. I simply want to bring out this point, if I may, and I believe the gentleman from Texas will agree with me. In order for the States to get together to negotiate a treaty it is not necessary that they have permission from Congress. They can get together and talk about a treaty and come to an agreement, but such a treaty is not binding until it is approved by Congress.

Mr. KELLER. Why?

Mr. BOILEAU. That is my understanding, under the Constitution. So we do not need this legislation in order to give them the right to talk these things over, and if we do not pass the legislation they can get together and negotiate and then submit their agreement to Congress and if Congress approves it, it becomes binding. As I understand it, the only real change in the law that would be accomplished by the enactment of this measure is to give the President of the United States the right to designate a Federal representative to deal with the States and assist them. Is not that correct?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. In order that we may save time, since other gentlemen are in a hurry to get on with the consideration of this calendar, I will say to my friend, without going into any detail, this is the usual procedure followed since the organization of the Government. I have not time to go into it further.

Mr. BOILEAU. I am going to take enough time to discuss my amendment. I did not object to the consideration of the bill because I did not want to be put in the position of stopping the legislation without giving it adequate consideration, but it seems to me that if the only thing to be accomplished is to give the President of the United States the right to designate an official to confer with the States we ought to give him that power and stop, because I think there is a lot of danger in giving this authority and permitting the States to go ahead and negotiate treaties with the approval of Congress that might possibly be irrevocable, so that even the action of one of the States could not change the effect of the treaty once they got into it. If the only purpose to be accomplished by the bill is to give the President the right to designate someone to assist the States and act with them, we ought to pass the bill with that language in, and that language only. I therefore have offered this amendment, which would have that desired effect.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

The question was taken: and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU), there were—ayes 29, noes 32.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Upon the request of the States negotiating under this act the President may designate a representative to attend upon such negotiations.

SEC. 3. No such compact or agreement shall be binding or obligatory upon any State a party thereto unless and until it has been approved by the legislatures of each of the States whose assent is contemplated by the terms of the compact or agreement and by the Congress.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

GROVER CLEVELAND

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 33, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 147) authorizing the erection of a monument to Grover Cleveland, in Washington, D. C.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

House Joint Resolution 147

Resolved, etc., That authority is hereby granted to any association organized within 2 years from the date of the approval of this resolution for that purpose, to erect a statue of Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, 1885 to 1889 and 1893 to 1897, in the city of Washington at such place as may be designated by the Fine Arts Commission, subject to the approval of the Joint Committee on the Library, the model of the statue so to be erected and the pedestal thereof to be first approved by the said Commission and by the Joint Committee on the Library, the same to be presented by such association to the people of the United States.

That for the preparation of the site and the erection of a pedestal upon which to place the said statue, under the direction of the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital, the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5456, relating to the powers and duties of United States marshals.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

LEECH LAKE BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS IN MINNESOTA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2045, to set aside certain lands for the Leech Lake Band of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there a member of the committee present who can explain the purposes of this bill?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman have a copy of the report?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; and I have read it very carefully. The report does not say a thing or give any report, I think, probably, contrary to the rules, and that is why I am asking for information.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit, the Committee on Indian Affairs acted on this bill pending a report from the Secretary of the Interior, because, as the gentleman will note from the report, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs appeared before the committee and said there was no objection to the bill. Since the committee acted, we have received a report from the Secretary, and he has approved the bill. The Secretary of Agriculture has also approved the bill as well as the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. BACON. Who owns the lands now, may I ask?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. The Government owns the lands now.

Mr. BACON. They are public lands?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Yes. The Indians formerly owned the lands, and the Indians were paid $2,000 for the lands. If the Indians are given the lands back, the bill provides that the Government shall be reimbursed $2,000 out of tribal funds. This will not cost the Government anything.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is the reason I asked the question.

Mr. BACON. How much land is involved?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. It is just a small acreage, large enough for a townsite—200 acres.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In view of the gentleman's explanation, I withdraw the reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H. R. 2045

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described lands are hereby withdrawn from the Minnesota National Forest Reserve under the Department of Agriculture and are hereby permanently reserved as Indian lands for the use of the Leech Lake Band of Chippewas in the State of Minnesota, without in any manner affecting existing reserves for church, cemetery, or other purposes, or individual rights and interests in said lands:

South half southwest quarter northeast quarter and lots 9 to 30, inclusive, section 17, township 142 north, range 30 west, fifth principal meridian, Minnesota, containing 168.44 acres.

Said Indians may take fish from the navigable waters adjacent to the above-described lands for their own use and not for sale without being amenable to the State game and fish laws of the State of Minnesota.

SEC. 2. Said lands are hereby permanently reserved for the use of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota for village site purposes.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Chippewa tribal fund now held in trust in the Treasury of the United States a sufficient sum to reimburse the United States for any moneys paid said Chippewa Indians for these lands.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TO ASSIST LATIN AMERICAN REPUBLICS IN MILITARY AND NAVAL MATTERS

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 3482, to amend the act of May 19, 1926, an act to authorize the President to detail officers and enlisted men of the United States Army, Navy, and Marine Corps to assist the Governments of the Latin American Republics in military and naval matters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. YOUNG. I object.

Mr. EDMISTON. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. YOUNG. I will.

Mr. EDMISTON. I think the gentleman misunderstands this. We had this up before by unanimous consent. This has nothing to do with Latin American countries.

Mr. YOUNG. I might say that that is the reason for my objection. If this had anything to do with Latin American countries I would not object, because the Latin American countries are in our own backyard. More than a hundred years ago, in announcing the Monroe Doctrine, we were protecting things in our own backyard. This has relation to the Philippine Islands, many thousand miles away.

Mr. EDMISTON. Does the gentleman believe that during this 10 years of the formative period we should not assist them, show them the courtesy of loaning our officers of the Marine Corps to direct them in preparation for national defense?

Mr. YOUNG. I am not convinced, and I object.

PAWNEE TRIBE OF INDIANS OF OKLAHOMA

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 4376, for the relief of the Pawnee Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX and Mr. WOLCOTT objected.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at this point that I be permitted to insert in the RECORD a letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, showing that this claim was settled by the United States Government through an act of Congress, in which Congress paid this Indian tribe for the very land that this bill now provides that this tribe should be reimbursed for. That was by act of Congress, March 3, 1875.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object to the gentleman's request, and I shall not object, I should like to say that there are other bills on this calendar that are just as vicious as this bill, which would take $57,000 interest out of the Treasury on these claims that have already been paid.

Mr. COCHRAN. The Committee on Expenditures recently held hearings, which showed that Congress has passed legislation sending cases to the Court of Claims, setting aside the statute of limitations, and the claims amount to three and one-quarter billion dollars.

The hearings before the Committee on Expenditures disclose that the Congress since 1924 passed 110 bills which empowered the Court of Claims to hear cases growing out of claims filed by Indian tribes in which they held they were entitled to money as a result of treaties, acts of Congress, and Executive orders. Some of the claims go back to 1779. There were no limitations. The bills appeared harmless, no amount being named therein, and in every instance they passed under unanimous consent, always being placed on the Consent Calendar. There are two dozen such bills pending now before House and Senate committees, one having been reported and is on the Consent Calendar. Some of the bills give the Government the right to offset the claims by showing money advanced and gratuities the Indians had received, but in many of the laws there is no provision for offsets.

It cost the General Accounting Office $157,000 and took 7 years for that office to secure evidence for the Department of Justice to oppose one claim amounting to over $250,000,000. That case has not been tried. No matter the result, the General Accounting Office spends thousands of dollars in securing evidence to present to the court. The bills further provide the General Accounting Office must turn over its records to the attorneys for the claimants. Congress in the future, I am sure, is going to go slow before passing any additional bills of this kind.

The Indian Bureau does not know what is going on. All bills such as this one and future bills granting jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to hear cases should be referred to the Attorney General and the Comptroller General and not to the Indian Bureau or Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, March 25, 1935.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
Member of Congress, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. COCHRAN: Further reference is made to your letter of March 11, 1935, forwarding a copy of H. R. 4376, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, entitled "A bill for the relief of the Pawnee Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma", and requesting to be advised whether this office has ascertained from the accounting records the gratuity payments made by the United States to this tribe.

No statement from the accounting records showing gratuity or other payments to the Pawnee Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma has been prepared, for the reason that no suit has been authorized and no claim filed heretofore on behalf of these Indians which would necessitate its preparation, and no report has been requested by the committee for use in its consideration of this bill or identical bills introduced in prior Congresses.

The bill H. R. 4376 provides as follows:

"That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,479.50, together with interest at the rate of 5 percent per annum from the 5th day of February 1878, due the Pawnee Tribe of Indians in the State of Oklahoma, on account of a deficiency of 4,800 acres in the area of the reservation under the treaty of September 24, 1857 (11 Stat. L. 279 [729 correct]), at $4.25 an acre; and to cover compensation for railroad rights-of-way for which no payment was ever made to the tribe."

With reference to that part preceding the semicolon, line 10, you are advised as follows:

Under the terms of article 1 of the treaty of September 24, 1857 (11 Stat. 729), the confederated bands of Pawnee Indians ceded and relinquished to the United States all their right, title, and interest in and to all the lands owned or claimed by them, with the exception of a tract of land, contained within said cession, which was set apart as a reservation for the Pawnee Indians and described as "30 miles long from east to west by 15 miles from north to south, including both banks of the Loup Fork of the Platte River, the east line of which shall be at a point not farther east than the mouth of Beaver Creek." The survey of said tract of land was completed in 1873. In 1874 a resurvey was made of the eastern boundary line of said reservation, and it was ascertained by the resurvey that the east and west lines were but 29½ miles apart instead of 30 miles, thus leaving a deficiency in the proper area of the reservation of 4,800 acres. (See Annual reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1873 and 1874, pp. 16 and 36, respectively.)

In the following year, 1875, an appropriation was made to indemnify the Pawnee Tribe of Indians for the aforesaid deficiency of 4,800 acres of land. See the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. 448), the pertinent provision of which is as follows:

"For this amount, to indemnify the Pawnee Indians for 4,800 acres of land erroneously excluded from their reservation in Nebraska by the survey of the boundary line thereof, $6,000."

The amount, $6,000, was set up on the books of the United States Treasury under the heading "Payment to Pawnees for lands excluded from reservation", and an examination of the records of this office discloses that the entire sum of $6,000 was disbursed for the benefit of the Pawnee Tribe of Indians in the fiscal year 1876.

It thus appears that the Pawnee Indians were compensated for the entire 4,800 acres of land erroneuosly excluded from their reservation in the amount of $6,000, or $1.25 per acre, which must have been regarded by the Congress as a proper settlement at the time provision therefor was made. In this connection, see act of June 10, 1872 (17 Stat. 391), which fixed $1.25 per acre as the minimum price at which lands within this reservation were authorized to be sold. This law was still in effect at the time the above-mentioned settlement was made.

It would appear from the report on this bill, House Report No. 286, of the Committee on Indian Affairs, that the committee was not aware of the settlement heretofore made, and the committee may now wish to give the matter further consideration.

If notwithstanding the fact that in 1875 these Indians were allowed what was then considered a fair price for the 4,800 acres of land, the sponsors of the bill feel that the tribe should have been paid for the 4,800 acres of land at the rate of $4.25 per acre instead of $1.25 per acre, it is suggested the bill be amended to provide for an additional payment of $3 per acre instead of $4.25, making a total of $14,400 instead of $20,400, and to provide for the deduction from the payment of any amounts disclosed by the accounting records to have been paid to the tribe as gratuities.

As to the other item included in the bill, being $79.50, "to cover compensation for railroad rights-of-way for which no payment was ever made to the tribe", neither the bill nor the committee's report thereon discloses any details as to the particular period, authorization, location, or area of the land involved therein, or any reasons why the allowance should be made at this time.

I trust the foregoing will be helpful in your consideration of the bill.

Sincerely yours,

J. R. McCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak on this bill. The statement has been made that this is "with other vicious bills." I think I am entitled to make this statement in the RECORD. The council for the tribe proposed this legislation 2 or 3 years ago and the bill was introduced and went to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Indian Affairs Committee requested a report from the Indian Bureau. The Bureau reported favorably on the bill, to the effect that a survey had omitted 4,800 acres for which the Indians had never been paid. It was agreed by the Bureau that $4.50 an acre for this land was a proper amount that should be paid the Indians for the property.

Mr. COCHRAN. The letter I have comes from the Comptroller General of the United States.

Mr. DISNEY. I am going to say that, if the gentleman will give me time. The Indian Bureau never mentioned the idea of the claim having been paid, nor did I ever hear of such a thing until less than an hour ago, when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], and I think very properly so, called my attention to the fact that he had a very recent report—I do not know the date, but evidently within the last few days—from the Comptroller General to the effect that years ago the claim had been paid and the money used by the Government for the benefit of the Indians. I am very glad that he put the statement from the Comptroller General in the RECORD, because if these are the facts nobody has a right to make any such claim. I think it is fair that he does put it in the RECORD. I want to know what the facts are. The Indian Bureau, since I have been in Congress the last 4 years, never made this suggestion, that this claim has ever been paid, and I never heard of such a thing until today. So the bill is not necessarily a "vicious bill", in the language of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX], because the Indian Bureau did not know that the claim had been paid, if it has been paid, and, further, this is the first time it has been on the calendar this year, and it now develops that it may have been paid.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOTT. Is this academic discussion of this bill in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma is speaking under unanimous consent.

Mr. DISNEY. And not necessarily in an academic way. I thought I was giving the House some facts.

Mr. MOTT. I understand the bill has been objected to.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield to the voluntary interruption of the gentleman from Oregon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma was allowed 2 minutes.

Mr. DISNEY. I did not understand that I was restricted to 2 minutes. I wanted a moment or two to discuss it, and I have not intruded upon the House, and I surely do not enjoy being intruded on to no effect. Here is the report of the Secretary of the Interior to the House Committee on Indian Affairs.

[H. Rept. No. 286, 74th Cong., 1st sess.]

PAWNEE TRIBE OF INDIANS OF OKLAHOMA

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4376) for the relief of the Pawnee Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass without amendment.

The views of the Department are expressed in a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to an identical bill (H. R. 9606) of the Seventy-third Congress. The letter follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, June 14, 1934.

Hon. EDGAR HOWARD,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Further reference is made to your request for report on H. R. 9606, a bill for the relief of the Pawnee Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma.

This bill is for the same purpose as H. R. 4503 and H. R. 6007, upon which a report was submitted to your committee under date of April 28, 1934.

The bills last above mentioned authorized an appropriation of $6,079.50, for loss by the Indians of 4,800 acres of land representing a shortage in the reservation, and payment for rights-of-way of $79.50. The value of the shortage in acreage of the reservation lands was computed at $1.25 an acre.

The reservation was granted these Indians by the treaty of September 2, 1857 (11 Stat. L. 1179). The treaty provided that the reservation should be 30 miles long and 15 miles wide, but after the survey had been completed it was found that the reservation was 29½ miles long, resulting in the shortage in the acreage abovementioned. This shortage was mentioned in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1874, page 36.

A proposal has heretofore been made to pay these Indians $1.25 an acre for their land, on the theory that that was the usual price for land of this nature. However, it has recently been brought to our attention that authority was not given to sell the land of the Indians until 1876, when Congress enacted legislation for that purpose. (See the act of Apr. 10, 1876; 19 Stat. L. 28.) The act provides that the lands should be appraised and sold, but the minimum price should not be less than $2.50 an acre. The lands were opened to sale by the General Land Office circular of February 5, 1878, and the different tracts of land on the reservation brought from $2.50 to $6 an acre.

The bill now here authorizes the payment to these Indians of $20,479.50, with interest at 5 percent from February 5, 1878, at $4.25 an acre, which is the average price for other Pawnee Reservation lands sold under the above act. It is believed that this is only fair to the Indians, and would be no more than sufficient compensation for the shortage in their reservation.

Favorable reports have been made heretofore on H. R. 4503 and H. R. 6007, which carried authority for an appropriation of only $6,079.40.,

While I favor legislation carrying the compensation provided by the instant bill, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, under date of June 6, advised that the proposed legislation would not be in accord with the financial program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary of the Interior.

It will be noted that the Secretary of the Interior states that he favors legislation, carrying the compensation provided by the identical bill (H. R. 9606) of the Seventy-third Congress, but that on June 6, 1934, the Bureau of the Budget advised that the proposed legislation would not be in accord with the financial program of the President.

During the consideration of H. R. 4376 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs appeared before the committee and stated that the Department has no objection to the passage of this bill.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say, on behalf of the committee that considered the bill, that the letter sent by the Secretary of the Interior reviewed all of the facts in the case and acknowledges it to be a just debt. It did not say it had been paid.

Mr. COCHRAN. The letter I put in the RECORD is from the Comptroller General, dated March 25, 1935.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING, JONESBORO, ARK.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6290) to authorize acquisition of land to provide appropriate means of access to the post-office building at Jonesboro, Ark.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, as an addition to the post-office site at Jonesboro, Ark., such portion of the 15-foot public alley north of the site as may be necessary to provide appropriate means of access to the loading platform of the building as extended and remodeled under authority of the act of Congress (46 Stat. 1595), approved March 4, 1931.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

SAN FRANCISCO EXPOSITION, 1938

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 151, authorizing and requesting the President to invite the countries of the world to participate in the San Francisco Exposition of 1938 at San Francisco, Calif.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

DEMURRAGE ON COLLECT-ON-DELIVERY PARCELS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5540) excepting the imposition of demurrage charged on collect-on-delivery parcels exchanged between the continental and island possessions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is the author of the bill present?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. The purpose of this bill seems to be to reduce charges by the Post Office Department on certain classes of mail. Am I correct?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. I am wondering if the gentleman would be willing to suggest to the Post Office Department that they also reduce the rates on first-class mail from 3 cents to 2 cents an ounce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of May 23, 1930 (46 Stat. 377; 39 U. S. C., Supp. VII, sec. 246c), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That under such regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe, any collect-on-delivery parcel which the addressee fails to remove from the post office within 20 days from the first attempt to deliver or the first notice of arrival at the office of address may be returned to the sender, charged with the return postage, whether or not such parcel bears any specified time limit for delivery; and a demurrage charge of not exceeding 5 cents per day may be collected when delivery has not been made to either the addressee or the sender until after the expiration of the prescribed period: Provided, That no demurrage shall be charged on collect-on-delivery parcels exchanged between post offices in continental United States and post offices in the Territories and island possessions of the United States."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read: "A bill extending the period during which no demurrage is charged on collect-on-delivery parcels and excepting the imposition of demurrage charged on collect-on-delivery parcels exchanged between the continental and island possessions."

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REPATRIATION OF CERTAIN NATIVE-BORN PERSONS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3023) to provide for citizenship to persons born in the United States, who have not acquired any other nationality by personal affirmative act, but who have heretofore lost their United States citizenship through the naturalization of a parent under the laws of a foreign country, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, we should have further time to consider the bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COMPENSATION FOR POST-OFFICE INSPECTORS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3612) to provide for adjusting the compensation of post-office inspectors and inspectors in charge to correspond to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I wish the author would explain the bill. This means increasing compensation of post-office inspectors, does it not?

Mr. DOBBINS. Yes. The purpose of this bill is to place the field forces of the Post Office Department under the same classification arrangements as to salaries, grades, and promotions as apply to all of the field forces of the other executive departments.

Mr. TABER. What classification are they now?

Mr. DOBBINS. They are required to be automatically promoted during the first 5 years. It results in the promotion of some who would not be selected for promotion otherwise and occasionally retards the deserved promotion of others who have performed rather distinguished service under trying or dangerous conditions. I would say to the gentleman that at the present time the salaries and grades for Post Office inspectors run from $2,800 to $4,500. They are automatically promoted during the first 5 years, so that there are only 70 who are now drawing a salary less than $3,800. Of the 540 inspectors, the remaining 470 of them are in the grades from $3,800 to $4,500. This bill does not propose to disturb their present pay at all but to regulate promotions in the future as they are in the Revenue Service, in the Customs Service, and in the other field services of the departments. The Post Office Department is the only one excepted from that otherwise uniform procedure.

Mr. TABER. What will the salary of these people be under this bill?

Mr. DOBBINS. This does not propose to change the salaries or grades. They run from $2,800 up to the highest grade of $4,500.

Mr. TABER. It will not go higher than it did before?

Mr. DOBBINS. This does not propose to change the salary grades at all, but simply to apply to them the same provisions of the general law that apply to other field forces.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOBBINS. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. I wonder if the employees affected have approved of this bill?

Mr. DOBBINS. We held hearings on it before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and there were no objections raised. The chief inspector approved it, and I believe there was another representative of the Department present, but I cannot remember who it was. I think it is generally approved by the forces in the Department, however. It is a very fair measure and is expected to promote even greater efficiency than prevails under the present system.

Mr. TRUAX. I questioned the fact because the postal employees are usually quite active in their own organization and we usually hear from them when there is legislation affecting them, but if the gentleman assures me it is acceptable to the employees affected, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to adjust the compensation of post-office inspectors and inspectors in charge in the post-office inspection service to correspond, so far as may be practicable, to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for positions in the departmental service in the District of Columbia. Any appropriation now or hereafter available for the payment of the compensation of post-office inspectors and inspectors in charge shall be available for payment of compensation in accordance with the rates adjusted in accordance with the provisions of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING MERCHANT MARINE ACT, 1920

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 619, to amend section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended, is amended by striking out the final period and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: "Provided further, That this section shall not apply to merchandise loaded on railroad cars and transported in any railroad-car ferry operated between fixed termini on the Great Lakes as part of a rail route or to railroad freight traffic transported in any vessel as part of a rail and water route pursuant to rail and water rate tariffs, if such car ferry or vessel is owned by a common carrier by water and operated as part of a rail route with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and if the stock of such common carrier by water, or its predecessor, was owned or controlled by a common carrier by rail prior to June 5, 1920, and if the stock of the common carrier owning such car ferry or vessel is, with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, now owned or controlled by any common carrier by rail and if such car ferries and vessels are documented under the laws of the United States."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 9, strike out the words "or vessel."

Page 2, lines 11 and 12, strike out the words "ferries and vessels are" and insert the words "ferry is built in and."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, the purpose of the amendments as set forth in S. 619, which is an act to amend section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1920, engages my attention because of the operation of the car ferries from St. Ignace to Mackinaw and also crossing Lake Michigan. It was brought out before the committee by Capt. E. H. Doner, of St. Ignace, Mich., who holds the position of superintendent of the State-owned car ferries, and who testified before our committee that the State enters into contract for the winter months with the Mackinaw Transportation Co., owners and operators of an ice-crushing steamer that successfully keeps the lane open between Mackinaw City and St. Ignace. Upon inquiry from the distinguished chairman of the committee, Congressman Bland, Captain Doner explained that the ice crusher is one-third Canadian owned, which percentage of ownership is not according to the requirements as now set forth. But Captain Doner further testified that the State of Michigan owned ferries were not competent to break the ice across the straits and for that reason the business was turned over to the Mackinaw Transportation Co. during the winter months.

Were this act to amend section 27 of the Marine Act of 1920 not to pass it would necessitate the building of an ice-crushing steamer by the State of Michigan and the reconditioning of docks at Mackinaw City and St. Ignace, incurring a cost of about a million dollars and as this cost would come, strange as it may seem, from the road department having these ferries in charge, it would mean a curtailment in the highway program of the State to the extent of a million dollars. The paving program of the State therefore would suffer. Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, the passing of the bill will prove a tremendous saving to the State of Michigan, and at the same time protect the rights of the traveling public wishing to cross the straits in motor vehicles both as to passengers in passenger cars and as to trucks and their contents. Even the hunter takes this route to the northern lands of Michigan and the returning course bears evidence of the trophies of the chase.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL PULASKI'S MEMORIAL DAY

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 107, authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11 of each year General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate Joint Resolution 21 be substituted in lieu of House Joint Resolution 107.

The effect of the request which I make would be to cause the law, when enacted, to authorize and direct the President of the United States to issue a proclamation calling upon officials of the United States Government to display the flag of the United States on all Government buildings on October 11 of each year, and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day in schools and churches, or other suitable places with appropriate ceremonies in commemoration of the death of Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

The only change which the request will make will be to authorize and direct the President to do what is provided to be done by him each year on October 11 rather than to do it only once, on October 11, 1935.

Mr. Speaker, the commemoration of the death of General Pulaski is a worthy act, and his death should be commemorated annually. General Pulaski was a true patriot. Born in Poland, where his father and brothers had died for Polish liberty, he came to our shores and volunteered his services to Washington in the Revolutionary War in 1777. These services were of so high a character, especially in the Battle of Brandywine, that he was promoted by the Congress to a Cavalry command, with the rank of brigadier general. He afterward organized an independent corps of Cavalry and Light Infantry, operating effectively under General Lincoln in South Carolina. He was mortally wounded in action in the siege of Savannah, Ga., and died on October 11, 1779.

The Polish people in their own land have been an oppressed people. They have fought and struggled bitterly for their own freedom. They appreciate liberty. They respect constituted authority. The Polish people in the United States are good citizens—home-loving and law-abiding, with a pride in the country of their adoption. They should be encouraged in this pride.

Let us pass this resolution calling for annual commemoration of the death of the great Polish-American hero, General Pulaski, as an expression of our appreciation of the contribution of Poland and the Polish people to the history of our country.

I trust that the substitute will be unanimously consented to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Reserving the right to object, I think it is fair to the House to have you understand the effect of that request. The House resolution limits the operation of this proposed law to this year. The House bill provides that the President of the United States shall issue a proclamation to the people of the United States with regard to the display of flags, and so forth, for this year. The Senate bill makes Pulaski Day a permanent thing.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. Does not the gentleman think we ought to do that for a man who dedicated his life to us on the altar of freedom?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Well, I was not talking about the altar of freedom yet. I was trying to explain the bill. I think the House ought to understand just what the bill means. The Senate bill makes this an annual matter, calling upon the President of the United States to issue a proclamation each year.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. PETTENGILL. What reasonable objection is there to substituting the Senate resolution and making it a permanent matter? What is the objection?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am explaining what the bill is. It may turn out there will not be any objection. After all, we are comparatively a young country. General Pulaski rendered a great service to this country. I used to go to a town in Texas named Pulaski. All over this country are towns of this name. There are monuments erected to him, and he is honored in other ways.

Mr. KENNEY. Of course, the Revolutionary War was the most important war this Nation has fought, the war that gave us our independence, and General Pulaski was one of the greatest of our leaders who gave us our liberty.

From the day of his birth in Podolia, in 1748, until his tragic death at Savannah, Ga., in 1779, Casimir Pulaski breathed the air of liberty and knew what it was to battle the dread monster, oppression.

By honoring him we shall pay just tribute to a great patriot and, by so doing, shall recognize Poland's contribution to our liberty and civilization. It will be an example to our children of Polish extraction and all true Americans. His unselfish devotion to the cause of freedom and this liberty-loving land of ours will be the object of emulation by the younger generation, if we but now confer a belated honor to his memory by establishing Pulaski's Day not for a day, but for the years to come.

Congress now has the opportunity of making "the amend honorable", and I have the greatest faith that this body shall not fail to grasp it. Long ago Congress, by legislation, voted to erect a monument to his sacred memory, but, strange to relate, its action was never carried into effect. Pulaski did not fail our country; we shall not, I am sure, fail him now. Therefore, we must, if we act rightly, substitute the Senate bill or else reject the committee amendment so as to commemorate for all time this great general and hero of the Revolutionary War.

Coming to America in 1777 he presented himself to Gen. George Washington and offered his valued services to the Continental Army. He immediately showed his dash and brilliancy at Brandywine. Congress was quick to see his worth and made him a brigadier general and chief of cavalry. He was given command of his own legion—Pulaski Legion it was called—named for him. Valiantly he fought for 2 years, distinguished for bravery and military success. He won many laurels as is so well known by every school boy and girl. He was one of the foremost heroes of the war. Our debt to him is huge. Finally he gave up his life for our heritage, having been wounded mortally at Savannah, on October 11, 1779. Our purpose shall be, indisputably, to pay him a mark of respect, not only on that day of this year, but we shall authorize the President to issue his proclamation calling upon all officials of the Government to display our flag on all Government buildings on October 11 of this and each year in the future and inviting our people to observe the day in schools and churches, or other suitable places, with appropriate ceremonies or exercises in commemoration of the death of this great Polish-American hero.

My State of New Jersey has already honored Casimir Pulaski. The great highway structure erected between Jersey City and Newark, forming part of a great transcontinental highway, has been dedicated to his memory and is nationally known as the "General Pulaski Skyway." Honor to General Pulaski is honor where honor is due. He established a precedent for the great population of Polish people who came to America, a precedent and example that has had a salutary effect and is responsible in great measure for their love of America and its institutions and for their devotion and loyalty to this great country, whose citizenship they readily embrace. Let us pay all due respect and honor to the great Pole and American hero today, and for all time. It cannot be gainsaid that General Pulaski is one of the great heroes to whom we owe our independence and our liberty.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN. This bill does not create a national holiday.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; it does not.

Mr. COCHRAN. It simply provides recognition of this great patriot who came to our country and gave up his life that the country might be free. There are millions of people now citizens of this country who came here from Poland and who celebrate annually General Pulaski Day. I cannot, for the life of me, see any objection to making this an annual affair rather than an affair for just one year.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I have no personal objection to it.

Mr. MEAD. I would suggest to the distinguished gentleman from Texas that we might as well settle this important question definitely right now. Otherwise the gentleman's committee will have a similar resolution to consider in the next session. I hope the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee will accept the Senate resolution which sets aside October 11 of each year to honor the memory of Gen. Casimir Pulaski, whose great service played such an important part in winning the War of the Revolution.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, House Joint Resolution 107, which sets aside October 11, 1935, as a national holiday in commemoration of Gen. Casimir Pulaski, while somewhat applauding the courage and daring of this Polish patriot, actually, because it necessitates a separate resolution each year, setting aside this holiday, seems to play a sort of game with the pride of the Polish people, who have embraced American citizenship, but whose natural affection for the heroes of their nation can never die out.

This resolution but weakly pays tribute to General Pulaski, who by his noble sacrifice in the cause of the American Colonies, has endeared himself forever in the hearts of Americans.

The resolution which would proclaim October 11, 1935, as General Pulaski's Memorial Day attempts to give recognition to the achievements of General Pulaski, and through them recognition of the contributions given to America by the Polish people. Why belittle our laudation by requiring separate legislative action each year in order to proclaim this holiday? At least 17 States have, through legislative enactment, designated October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day. The legislatures of other States have this matter up for similar consideration.

If the sentiment of so many individual States is for setting aside October 11 as a permanent holiday in memory of General Pulaski, Congress should also adopt the resolution which is now pending in the Senate and which would always make October 11 a holiday in memory of the man whose death was caused by wounds incurred while he was fighting for the Thirteen American Colonies. Surely his greatness, his suffering, his martyrdom to this country deserves that we take no half-way measures but instead freely acknowledge our debt to the Polish people by proclaiming the anniversary of his death permanently a holiday. It is only proper and just that we adopt the resolution which is now pending in the Senate.

The contribution of the Polish people to the American civilization is an important one. The Poles who have come to our shores have enriched our country in countless ways. A holiday in honor of one of their heroes who gave his all for our country will bring them pride and gratification, but that pride and gratification will be embittered unless we do the right thing—pay them the recognition which is due them by adopting a resolution calling for a permanent holiday on October 11 such as they themselves want.

I personally cannot support this resolution which requires separate legislative action each year to proclaim the anniversary of the date of the death of General Pulaski a holiday. It is a privilege to vote for the substitute Senate Joint Resolution No. 21, which is now before us, and which at once would designate this day for all time a day of commemoration and recognition to the Poles of America.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate resolution, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 21

Joint resolution authorizing the President to proclaim October 11 of each year General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski

Whereas the 11th day of October 1779 is the date in American history of the heroic death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, who died from wounds received on October 9, 1779, at the siege of Savannah, Ga.; and

Whereas the States of West Virginia, Illinois, Michigan, Tennessee, Indiana, Wisconsin, New York, Nebraska, Texas, Minnesota, Delaware, Maryland, Arkansas, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Missouri, Ohio, Louisiana, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Kentucky, South Carolina, Connecticut, California, Nevada, and other States of the Union, through legislative enactment have designated October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States of America has by legislative enactment designated October 11, 1929; October 11, 1931; October 11, 1932; and October 11, 1934, to be General Pulaski's Memorial Day; and

Whereas it is fitting that the recurring anniversary of this day be commemorated with suitable patriotic and public exercises in observing and commemorating the death of this great American hero of the Revolutionary War: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all governmental buildings on October 11 of each year, and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day in schools, churches, or other suitable places, with appropriate ceremonies commemorating the death of Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

House Joint Resolution 107 was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact a very large number of the Members of the House are interested in the resolution which has just been passed, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days within which to extend their remarks on the resolution just passed.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I join in this request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. FENERTY. Mr. Speaker, this resolution should not be limited by any amendment. The committee's amendment would restrict the observance of the memorial day to this year. This, I believe, is unjustly restrictive of the glory which the illustrious Polish-American soldier won for our infant Nation on the battlefields of the American Revolution. There can be no valid reason for limiting the commemoration of the virtues of such an outstanding and heroic figure to any one year. Just as his memory is greater than all the ages, so the observance of his achievements should be equally enduring and perpetual.

There is but one way to make this commemoration coextensive with his character. General Pulaski Memorial Day must occur in each and every year so that American children will constantly have before them the inspiration of his life and the memory of his heroic death at the siege of Savannah. Let us now substitute for this resolution the one that has already passed the Senate of the United States—Senate Joint Resolution 21—wherein it is provided that the memorial day commemorative of General Pulaski's death shall be observed in each year while the Nation lasts. There should not be a dissenting voice in this House in the overwhelming passage of this resolution.

Shortly after the opening of this session of Congress I introduced a resolution which not only directed the President to proclaim October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day but also authorized the Postmaster General to issue a special series of postage stamps in honor of the beloved Polish patriot. It is in every sense appropriate that we should thus extend merited recognition to the valorous son of a land that in 1932, during our celebration of the George Washington Bicentennial, issued a postage stamp with the engraving of the first President of our country. So, in honoring the courage and fidelity of Pulaski, we are similarly paying tribute to the brave land that gave him birth and gladly yielded him to us in our effort to liberate America from British rule.

The name of Pulaski was holy and revered even before he volunteered his services to the great American Commander in Chief. Even yet the Russian trembles as he reads of the death struggle at Okope. Mention the name of Pulaski within the gray old walls of the fortress of Czenstokow and each moss-covered stone and silent gun chamber becomes vocal with heroic praise. Speaking for himself and of himself, he says:

I regarded every moment as lost which was not employed in repelling the enemies of my country. I have endeavored to mark my course by an invincible fortitude. Neither the blood of one of my brothers, which was shed by the enemy before my eyes, nor the cruel servitude of another, nor the sad fate of so many of my relations and compatriots has shaken my patriotism. I declare before God and before all the powers of Europe that my heart is an utter stranger to crime. My thoughts and actions have had no other end than the good of my country.

Casimir Pulaski truly exemplified that love of liberty that has in every age characterized the Polish people and in other days made Poland the last refuge of Western civilization against the unrelenting destruction of the Turks. With the loss of his home, his fortunes, his family, with liberty crushed under the feet of a cruel invader, Pulaski looked from his own land across the seas and observed in the young republic of the West a new field for vindicating with his sword the same undying principles for which he had wielded it in his own fair land. Learning of his desire to follow the cause of Washington, Benjamin Franklin, who was then in Paris favored him with a letter to Washington, in which he said:

Count Pulaski, of Poland, an officer famous throughout Europe for his bravery and conduct in defense of the liberties of his country against the three invading powers of Russia, Austria, and Prussia, will have the honor of delivering this into your hands. The court here have encouraged and promoted his voyage from an opinion that he may be highly useful in our service.

Arriving in Philadelphia in the summer of 1777, he soon found service with Washington, Greene, Sullivan, and Lafayette at the Battle of the Brandywine.

To General Pulaski we owe the formation of our American Cavalry and the success of the American forces upon many a hard-fought field was in greatest measure due to his ability and his admired leadership. He was universally recognized as the most expert horseman in the American Army, and not the least among his contributions to the efficiency of Washington's cavalry was the knowledge of equestrianship that he imparted to it.

Mortally wounded at the siege of Savannah on October 9, 1779, the brave Pole died 2 days later on the ship, the Wasp, and his body was consigned with military honors to a watery grave, and today he sleeps where the ebbing tide of the Savannah commingles with the waves of the vast Atlantic. The best beloved of Mars, he sleeps in the arms of Neptune.

Such, Mr. Speaker, was the noble soul for whom we today plead for remembrance and honor. In the passage of this resolution it is little that we do, compared with that chivalry which led him, in the spirit of the crusader, to give to our country the last full measure of his devotion. As long as America lives, American hearts will thrill to the name and the fame of Poland's immortal son. As long as the sun shines on the waters of the Savannah, the spirit of Poland embodied in the memory of Casimir Pulaski shall stand on guard at the portals of the Republic he so devotedly loved.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks concerning House Joint Resolution 107, a joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11 of each year General Pulaski's Memorial Day, for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, which resolution I introduced and which was passed today, substituted by Senate Joint Resolution 21, I am happy to state that it is a distinct honor to this hero of our Revolutionary War that the resolution passed without a dissenting vote.

I am particularly pleased that we have authorized the President to proclaim October 11 of each year a memorial day, because it is a fitting tribute to one who gave up his life in the service of our country, as General Pulaski did.

The many citizens of our country who came to our shores from Poland, or whose ancestors came from that country, may well feel pride in knowing that their gallant countryman has been so signally honored by this Nation.

General Pulaski was not an adventurer; he was a true lover of freedom. He took part in early youth in the struggles for the liberation of Poland against the tyrannical governments who suppressed its liberties. Upon the failure of the efforts to free his native land from the yoke of a foreign country, General Pulaski left his native country and traveled on the Continent. At Paris he made the acquaintance of Benjamin Franklin, who narrated to him the struggles of our own Colonies for freedom. General Pulaski came to this country to assist in that struggle and to make it his homeland, just as many others have come to our shores ready and willing to make the sacrifices necessary while establishing themselves permanently in our land.

He reached America some time in 1777, and without waiting to be commissioned an officer in our Army, he joined the ranks as a private soldier. His bravery and ability were soon recognized. In Europe he had been reputed one of the greatest cavalry officers of his time, and it was not long after his entry into our forces that he showed he was entitled to this reputation. Students of history know his brilliant military record. Washington relied upon him in cavalry problems and soon recommended him to Congress for appointment as brigadier general in the following words:

> This gentleman has been, like us, engaged in defending the liberty and independence of his country and has sacrificed his fortune and his zeal for these objects. He derives from hence a title to our respect that ought to operate in his favor as far as the good of the service will permit.

It was shortly after his arrival that he was given this honor. He took charge of our cavalry, shared in its financial expenses, and raised its standard. It became one of the efficient arms of our military. The Pulaski Legion, named in his honor, was led by him with distinction in the southern sector. Heretofore our cavalry had been neglected, but under his leadership its value was apparent. It materially aided our troops through the remainder of the war.

On October 9, 1779, at the siege of Savannah, General Pulaski was leading a charge of his cavalry. He was mortally wounded and was taken aboard ship for transport to Charleston but died in transport. His burial was at sea near the shores of the country for which he made the supreme sacrifice.

A stranger and alien—his example is a chapter in the story of this Nation's struggle for independence and a lesson to mankind of sacrifice for an ideal. It is, therefore, only a just tribute to his name and memory that Congress should now declare October 11 as Pulaski's Memorial Day.

And when the flag of our country is flown on October 11, in honor of the deeds of such a man, may we not recognize in this country that its heroes came from all races and countries, that we live here in a spirit of friendship and brotherhood, all serving the common good and each doing his part for the public weal.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I have actively supported and am happy to have the privilege of voting for the passage of Senate Joint Resolution 21, authorizing the President to proclaim October 11 of each year Gen. Casimir Pulaski's Memorial Day.

It was on October 11, 1779, that the great Polish hero and patriot passed away from wounds received 2 days previously, on October 9, at the siege of Savannah, Ga.

General Pulaski, after having fought for Polish liberty in his native land, came to our country and tendered his services to George Washington in our contest for American liberty in the Revolutionary War, and rendered distinguished services in the Battle of Brandywine and in numerous engagements in South Carolina.

The Polish people have made a valuable contribution to the development and progress of the United States, and many of them are among the most-respected citizens we have in my district in the State of Washington. They are industrious, thrifty, and law-abiding, and a credit to the nation of their birth.

LEIF ERICSON DAY

Mr. Speaker, I urge that we also take up at an early day for consideration and passage House Joint Resolution 26, to fittingly observe and commemorate October 9 as Leif Ericson Day, in honor of the discovery of America in the year 1000 by that intrepid Norseman.

In the words of Prof. R. B. Anderson, of Madison, Wis., of the Leif Ericson Memorial Association, briefly the story of Leif Ericson's explorations follow:

> Then it happened that the oldest of Erik the Red's three sons, Leif by name, made a voyage to Norway in the year 999. There he became acquainted with Norway's famous King, Olaf Tryggvason. Olaf Tryggvason was himself a Christian, and had begun converting the people of Norway to Christianity. He had also persuaded the Parliament of Iceland to adopt Christianity as the religion of all Iceland. He persuaded Leif Ericson to accept the creed of the Galilean, and, when Leif was baptized, King Olaf was his godfather. Then King Olaf requested Leif to go as a missionary to Greenland to convert his father's colonists to Christianity. Leif accepted this mission; but he decided that he, on his way to Greenland, would look up and explore those lands which had been seen by his kinsman, Bjarne Herjulfson, in 986.
> With his party of 36 men he reached first the land that Bjarne had seen last, that is Newfoundland. He went ashore, made some explorations, found that the country was covered with rocks, and named it Helluland. He then proceeded to the southwest and found the second land seen by Bjarne, found that it was heavily wooded, and named it Markland. Then he continued on his voyage and on discovering the first land seen by Bjarne he sailed in a bay, out of this bay into a river, out of this river into a lake, out of this lake into another river which he ascended as far as it was deep enough to float his ship. Then he and his men went ashore, built a large house and decided to spend the winter there. This description fits admirably Boston Bay, the Charles River between Boston and Cambridge, the Boston Back Bay, also between Boston and Cambridge, and the Charles River emptying into the Back Bay. It seems that then Leif Ericson and his party must have built their house at what is now called Gerry's Landing, not far from where Harvard University is now located. On account of the abundance of grapes found in this new land Leif decided to call the country Vinland.
> After spending the winter in Vinland, Leif loaded his ship with Vinland products and arrived in Greenland in the spring of 1001, when the Parliament was in session, and prevailed upon it to pass a resolution declaring the country Christian. We know positively that he reached this continent in the year 1000 because it was the same year in which he was baptized in Norway, and the same year in which Christianity was adopted by the Iceland Parliament. There is much more to this interesting subject. There were several other expeditions from Greenland to Vinland. One by Leif's brother Thorvald, in 1002 (Thorvald was killed by an arrow from one of the natives in Vinland and was buried there); one by Leif's brother Thorstein in 1005 (he did not reach Vinland but died on the way); one by Thorfinn Karlsefne, in 1007, and his wife Gudrid, the widow of Thorstein. Thorfinn and Gudrid went with 3 ships and 161 men for the purpose of organizing a colony in Vinland. They remained there 3 years, but found the aborigines too numerous to maintain themselves against them and so abandoned the colony and returned to Greenland. In the year 1008 Gudrid gave birth to a son. They named him Snorre, and he was the first white child to see the light of day in the New World.
> Voyages to Vinland, especially for the purpose of bringing timber to Greenland and Iceland, continued down to the middle of the fourteenth century. The sagas give a report of a ship that came from Markland to Iceland in the year 1347. This was just before the breaking out of the black plague, which crippled all Europe for a century. It reduced the population of Norway, for instance, from 2,000,000 to 300,000. About this time the Greenland colony disappeared probably as a result of the black plague.

Mr. Speaker, the Norwegian people who have come to our shores have proved their worth as thrifty, intelligent, law-abiding citizens, and have been a real factor in the building of the Pacific Northwest, and we should grant to their great forbear, Leif Ericson the discoverer of the North American Continent, this recognition and honor.

EMBASSY IN FINLAND

Mr. Speaker, for similar reasons I favor the enactment of H. R. 4448, to provide funds for the acquisition of a site, erection of buildings, and the furnishing thereof for the use of the diplomatic and consular establishments of the United States at Helsingfors, Finland.

Finland, the new Republic of the north, has in the past contributed richly to the culture, progress, and civilization of mankind; and many of her sons and daughters have been eminent in art, science, and literature. However, today she lifts aloft for the whole world the standard of "honesty, integrity, and good faith among nations", and is the only nation which has honorably discharged its obligations to the United States. I therefore favor the appropriation to provide adequate and dignified housing for our representation at Helsingfors so as to reflect credit upon the United States in Finland and serve to maintain the cordial relations which so happily exist between the American and Finnish people.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, Gen. Casimir Pulaski, although he spent scarcely more than a year on American soil, merits by his energetic and patriotic leadership the admiration and honor of the American people. The victory of the colonists, the founders of this great Nation, was partially due to his physical prowess, mental alertness, and fearless activity.

Reared under the shadow of a threatening war which became a reality in his youth, he became a guard of Duke Charles, and at the age of 25 his fiery ambition, his trained abilities, and his constant effort in behalf of the salvation of his fatherland made him the recognized leader of Poland. So great were the odds against him that his efforts and those of his countrymen were fruitless, and he was banished from his beloved land.

While traveling in Paris he met Benjamin Franklin, and through this acquaintance came to America, where, in 1777, he, a soldier famed throughout Europe, became a volunteer in the ranks of the pioneer army of George Washington. Here it was that his knowledge gained by practical experience in warfare made him a valuable man. Just as he had been a tireless worker in the Polish Army, so now he transferred his energy to the American cause. It was greatly through his effort that the rear attack by the British on the Colonial Army at Brandywine was not a success, and in recognition of his ability and his service after 2 months with the Army he was raised to the rank of brigadier commander of the cavalry. Perhaps his greatest work was the organizing of the Polish Legion, an independent corps under his command, which greatly aided in the success of the Revolution. General Pulaski had fought with daring fearlessness in the ranks of the Polish Army, and now, in like manner, amid the chaotic forces of the French and Americans facing the Redcoats at Savannah, Ga., he bounded forward, an inspiring figure, attempting to rally the American forces. It was in this attempt that he received a fatal wound. General Pulaski, renowned defender and leader of Poland; General Pulaski, stanch, patriotic, Colonial soldier of the New World; General Pulaski, an American hero, is truly deserving of the admiration and honor of the American people.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, on April 1, 1935, the House of Representatives adopted Senate Joint Resolution 21, authorizing the President of the United States to proclaim October 11 of each year General Pulaski Memorial Day, for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

I am glad to join with my colleagues of the Seventy-fourth Congress of the United States in making possible delayed tribute of respect and honor to a great soldier and a great Polish-American.

There is no more splendid element among the various nationality groups that make up the great melting pot we call the United States of America than the citizens of Polish extraction. The Polish immigrants and their early descendants were not only "the hewers of wood and the drawers of water", but rapidly took and are still taking their just and entitled places in the administrative, legislative, and industrial affairs of the Nation. The reputation of our Polish-American citizens as an industrious, law-abiding, and patriotic people cannot be assailed. In the religious, political, professional, and business fields Polish-American men and women are making worthwhile contributions to the welfare of our land.

Oppressed by alien oppressors in the homeland, they have given to the world a splendid example of family life, with its cultural and social background, together with their passionate devotion to the principles of religious and political liberty.

Gen. Casimir Pulaski was born in Poland of patriotic, liberty-loving parents. Many of his ancestors, his father, and his brother fought and died for Polish liberty. At an early age, after conferring with Benjamin Franklin in Paris, young Pulaski came to our shores and volunteered his services to our own immortal Washington in the Revolutionary War of 1777. Excellently trained in military tactics, he offered his services as a plain ordinary soldier, deeply in sympathy with the cause of the Revolution. His services were of such a high character that in the Battle of Brandywine he so impressed his military superiors that he was promoted by Congress to an important cavalry commander. In every battle, and especially during the siege of Savannah, Ga., he distinguished himself with valor. He was mortally wounded in action at Savannah, Ga., on October 9, and died October 11, 1779.

Gen. Casimir Pulaski belongs not only to the United States of America, but to every land where human beings are held in subjection and denied the inalienable right to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Many cities and towns of the United States have been named in his honor. Boulevards and streets have been dedicated to his memory. In the State of New Jersey a splendid highway extending from the city of Newark to Jersey City, the gateway to New York, was erected and dedicated in his honor, and is known all over the world as the General Pulaski Skyway. Monuments have been erected by civic, fraternal, and religious organizations to the memory of this great soldier. It is only fitting that the Republic he aided in creating should set aside one day in the year when by official proclamation the President of the United States of America is authorized to call upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all Government buildings on October 11 of each year, and invite the people of the United States to observe the day in schools, churches, and other suitable places, in appropriate services commemorating the death of Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

After observing him in action upon the battlefields of the Revolutionary War, General Washington, in recommending him to Congress for appointment as brigadier general, said of him:

> This gentleman has been like us, engaged in defending the liberty and independence of his country, and sacrificed his fortune and his zeal for these objectives. He deserves from hence a title to our respect that ought to operate in his favor as far as the good of the service will permit.

On each succeeding Pulaski Memorial Day generations yet unborn will learn the story of General Pulaski's bravery and sacrifice given in behalf of the cause of liberty and will cherish the esteem in which he was held by the Father of his Country.

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak for a resolution which has for its purpose the honoring of a man who lost his life in a brave effort to bring liberty to the American colonies. Gen. Casimir Pulaski's service in the cause of freedom should not be recognized by Presidential proclamation this year only, as is provided by the amended House Joint Resolution 107, but as a reminder of the sacrifices and devotion to the cause of liberty by those who made this Nation possible, the death of the great Pulaski should be observed and commemorated by such proclamation each year. I, therefore, favor the substitution of Senate Resolution 21, which will make possible this annual observance.

America has been referred to as "the land of freedom" and "the home of the homeless among the nations of the world." We find glory in such references but too seldom do we give consideration to the sacrifices of the men who laid the foundation for such sacrifices. Love of liberty and freedom was stamped on the very soul of America by men like General Pulaski who had the true spirit of liberty indelibly impressed upon their hearts through the form of oppression which they suffered in the land of their nativity. In a letter to Col. R. H. Lee, August 13, 1778, General Pulaski expressed his deep-seated convictions, "Honor and a true desire of distinguishing myself in the defense of liberty was the only motive which fired my breast for the cause of the United States."

Even before his arrival in this country, General Pulaski was renowned throughout Europe for his services in defense of his native Poland. Through the intercession of his French friends, he was enlisted in the cause of the American Colonies by Benjamin Franklin, then in Paris, arriving in this country in August 1777. He early distinguished himself as a volunteer by his courage and exemplary conduct in the operations about my native Philadelphia. His distinguished service was soon recognized by Washington, who wrote as follows to Congress in commendation of his plan to raise a separate corps, "Count's valor and active zeal on all occasions have done him great honor."

On March 19, 1778, Congress sanctioned the formation of the corps, which has been known in history as the "Pulaski Legion." The operations and success of the celebrated corps are well known. When the Continental forces were hard pressed in their campaigns throughout New Jersey, particularly in the Egg Harbor section, and at Charleston, S. C., it was General Pulaski and his cavalry which snatched victory out of apparent defeat. Despite personal illness, General Pulaski, always displaying the courage, energy, and fortitude of a great soldier, rose to the defense of Savannah, and during the assault upon that city October 9, 1779, he received the wound which later caused his death.

General Pulaski lost his life embracing the cause of liberty, defending the principles so deeply rooted in his very nature. His services to a nation struggling for liberty demands the gratitude of a people who enjoy the freedom for which he gave his life.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DUNN of Mississippi, at the request of Mr. COLMER, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. THOMAS, at the request of Mr. GOODWIN, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. GRISWOLD, indefinitely, on account of illness.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Seventy-five Members are present.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

RIO GRANDE RIVER

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I desire, if necessary, to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 6453) to amend the act of May 13, 1924, entitled "An act providing for a study regarding the equitable use of the waters of the Rio Grande", and so forth, as amended by the public resolution of March 3, 1927; but I think it will not be necessary; I think the matter can be disposed of by unanimous consent. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] desires to offer an amendment, which is agreeable.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman will consent to this amendment?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Absolutely; the gentleman's amendment is all right, as I understand it.

Mr. CULKIN. Limiting the scope of the bill?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. With that understanding, I have no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 6453) to amend the act of May 13, 1924, entitled "An act providing for a study regarding the equitable use of the waters of the Rio Grande", and so forth, as amended by the public resolution of March 3, 1927.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of May 13, 1924, entitled "An act providing for a study regarding the equitable use of the waters of the Rio Grande below Fort Quitman, Tex., in cooperation with the United States of Mexico", as amended by the public resolution of March 3, 1927, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"The Secretary of State, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized to designate the American Commissioner on the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, to cooperate with a representative or representatives of the Government of Mexico in a study regarding the equitable use of the waters of the lower Rio Grande and the lower Colorado and Tia Juana Rivers, for the purpose of obtaining information on which to base a treaty with the Government of Mexico relative to the use of the waters of these rivers and to matters closely related thereto. On completion of such study the results shall be reported to the Secretary of State.

"SEC. 2. The Secretary of State, acting through the American Commissioner, International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, is further authorized (a) to conduct technical and other investigations relating to the defining, demarcation, fencing, or monumentation of the land and water boundary between the United States and Mexico, to flood control, water resources, conservation, and utilization of water, sanitation and prevention of pollution, channel rectification, and stabilization and other related matters upon the international boundary between the United States and Mexico or upon a stream or water course constituting or crossing the boundary between the two countries and upon the tributaries of any such stream or water course where international matters are involved; (b) to construct any project or works which may be provided for in a treaty entered into with Mexico as contemplated in section 1 of this act, or which it may be appropriate to construct independently of a treaty with Mexico; and (c) to operate and maintain any project or works so constructed or, subject to such rules and regulations for continuing supervision by the said American Commissioner as the Secretary of State may promulgate, to turn over the operation and maintenance of such project or works to any Federal agency, or any State, county, municipality, district, or other political subdivision within which such project or works may be in whole or in part situated, upon such terms, conditions, and requirements as the Secretary of State may deem appropriate.

"SEC. 3. In order to carry out the provisions of this act, the Secretary of State is authorized, (a) in his discretion, to enter into agreements with any one or more of said political subdivisions, in connection with the construction of any project or works provided for in section 2 hereof, under the terms of which agreements there shall be furnished to the United States, gratuitously, except for the examination and approval of titles, the lands or easements in lands necessary for the construction, operation, and maintenance, in whole or in part, of any such project or works, or for the assumption by one or more of any such political subdivisions making such agreement, of the operation and maintenance of such project or works, in whole or in part, upon the completion thereof: Provided, however, That when an agreement is reached that necessary lands or easements shall be provided by any such political subdivision and for the future operation and maintenance by it of a project or works or a part thereof, in the discretion of the Secretary of State, the title to such lands and easements for such projects or works need not be required to be conveyed to the United States but may be required only to be vested in and remain in such political subdivision; (b) to acquire by purchase, exercise of the power of eminent domain, or by donation, any real or personal property which may be necessary; (c) to request the withdrawal from sale, public entry or disposal of such public lands of the United States as the Secretary of State may find to be necessary, and upon receipt of any such request the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the lands so designated to be withdrawn from any public entry whatsoever, and from sale, disposal, location, or settlement under the mining laws or any other law relating to the public domain, and shall cause such withdrawal to appear upon the records in the appropriate land office having jurisdiction over such lands, and such lands may be used for carrying out the purposes of this act: Provided, That any such withdrawal may subsequently be revoked by the Secretary of the Interior with the approval of the Secretary of State; and (d) to make or approve all necessary rules and regulations and, in his discretion, to delegate to the American Commissioner, International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, any of his functions and powers provided for herein.

"SEC. 4. Any moneys contributed by or received from the United Mexican States for the purpose of cooperating or assisting in carrying out the provisions of section 1 of this act shall be available for expenditure in connection with any appropriation which may be made for the purposes of this act."

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CULKIN: Strike out the semicolon after the word "Mexico" in line 5, page 3, and add the words: "and for the repair, protection, maintenance, or completion of works now existing or now under construction, or that may be constructed under the treaty provisions aforesaid, and to construct any project or works designed to facilitate compliance with the provisions of treaties between the United States of America and Mexico."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RESEARCH VESSEL FOR PACIFIC OCEAN FISHERIES

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the bill H. R. 3013 and to include a report of the Honorable Frank T. Bell, Commissioner of the Bureau of Fisheries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, concerning H. R. 3013, a bill introduced by myself and entitled "To provide for the construction and operation of a vessel for use in research work with respect to Pacific Ocean fisheries", I desire to submit to the Members of Congress a report upon said bill written by the Honorable Frank T. Bell, Commissioner Bureau of Fisheries, and transmitted by the Department of Commerce to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives.

The comments of Mr. Bell upon the importance of the fisheries resources of the high seas, and particularly those of the Pacific coast, are instructive and illuminating. The following are the comments of Mr. Bell on H. R. 3013:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF FISHERIES,
Washington, February 6, 1935.

Subject: Recommendation on H. R. 3013, being a bill "To provide for the construction and operation of a vessel for use in research work with respect to Pacific Ocean fisheries"

MEMORANDUM FOR THE SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

For the period from 1879 to 1932 the United States Bureau of Fisheries employed one or more specially constructed marine fishery research vessels capable of conducting studies of our important fishery resources on the high seas. At the present time the Bureau has no such research vessel, and the United States is now the only first-class maritime nation lacking such facilities.

The fisheries provide one of the basic food resources of the Nation, for foods come only from the land or from the sea. In 1932 the fisheries of the United States and Alaska provided 2,613,000,000 pounds of protein food, which modern researches have shown to be essential to the healthful diet of the Nation. The fisheries of the Pacific coast in that year yielded 1,038,802,000 pounds, or 45.8 percent of the total fish production, exclusive of shellfish, of the United States and Alaska. In addition to more than a score of minor fisheries, the yield of the three major fisheries of the Pacific coast—the salmons, the pilchard, and the tunas—approximated 40 percent of the entire United States production.

The salmon fisheries of the Pacific coast and Alaska are the greatest in the world, producing in 1932, 528,626,000 pounds, for which the fishermen received $8,160,000, ranking first in quantity and first in value among the Nation's fisheries. Second in national rank in quantity of production is the pilchard fishery, yielding 312,171,000 pounds, for which the fishermen received $825,000. Next in rank on the Pacific coast and sixth in rank for the entire country is the tuna fishery, producing 63,431,000 pounds, for which the fishermen received $2,406,000.

The financial return to the fishermen themselves represents but a small portion of the total valuation of these three great fisheries, for all of them support a vast shore industry, producing a staple food commodity of canned fish and great quantities of meal and oil used in human and animal feeding and in a wide variety of technological processes.

In 1932 the salmon industry produced 5,909,000 standard cases of canned fish, 1,389 tons of meal, and 154,000 gallons of oil, having a total evaluation of $26,512,000. Manufactured products of the pilchard fishery amounted to 954,000 standard cases of canned fish, 25,445 tons of meal, and 5,529,000 gallons of oil, having a manufactured value of $3,642,000. The tuna fishery produced 1,206,000 cases of canned fish, 4,123 tons of meal, and 31 gallons of oil, having a manufactured value of $6,280,000.

The total sales values of the products of these three fisheries, excluding the sales of fresh, frozen, and mild-cured salmon, which would considerably augment the total, amount to $47,825,000 in 1932, and this, of course, is considerably below the normal values of these products in previous years. It is apparent, therefore, that these three great Pacific fisheries are of considerable importance to the economic structure of the Nation and should be managed so as to be continually productive.

The fisheries, however, like the forests, are an exhaustible resource. The past 50 years has witnessed the commercial destruction of one valuable food fish species after another. The salmon fisheries in various of its branches are at present menaced by depletion. Competent scientists of the California Fish and Game Commission, after 10 years of exacting research, are seriously concerned over the possibility of depletion of both the pilchard and various species of tunas. The fishing industry in California is likewise aroused to the danger, for the pilchard fishery in that State has expanded so rapidly during the past 10 years that exploitation is now believed to have passed reasonable and safe limits. The most valuable species of tuna, the Albacore, has virtually disappeared, and the next most valuable species of tuna, the blue-fin tuna, has declined from 15,000,000 pounds in 1919 to 1,000,000 pounds in 1932. The yield of canned tuna has only been maintained by an increased utilization of less desirable species and by the extension of the fishery from the in-shore waters of southern California to beyond the Equator on the south and to the Hawaiian Islands on the west.

The experience of the International Halibut Commission demonstrates that high-seas fisheries suffering from depletion can be so regulated as to check the decline and to maintain the productivity of the resource. Governmental control, however, can only be based on sound and extensive scientific knowledge of the biology of the species concerned and the effects of the fishery upon its reproduction and survival. No single State is able to acquire such information for the salmon ranges from California to Alaska, the pilchard from Mexico to British Columbia, and the tunas over the eastern half of the Pacific Ocean from Puget Sound to the Equator. Research as a basis for control must therefore be conducted by the Federal Government.

A research vessel capable of going to sea and remaining for long periods of time is essential to such a program of research. It should be specially constructed so as to employ effective fishing gear of standard commercial size, as well as scientific equipment required for studies of currents, temperatures, and other conditions affecting the reproduction, survival, and movements of fish. As a result of a previous survey of existing facilities, the Bureau is convinced that no vessel suitable for this work exists that can be transferred from other Government services or purchased from commercial service. Based upon experience in the operation of the Alabatross II, a steam vessel engaged until its retirement in 1932 in a similar type of fisheries research on the Atlantic coast, and on plans and specifications developed for a new research vessel of the same type as the one herein contemplated, the operating cost, including vessel crews, repairs, and operations, will amount to about $54,000 per annum. In addition, the vessel will require a scientific staff of four fishery investigators and hydrographers at a total salary cost of $11,400 per annum, with subsistence and traveling and operating expense of $5,000, or a total operating cost for the projected fishery investigations utilizing the vessel amounting to $70,400 per year.

The amount authorized in the bill is regarded as adequate for the construction of such a vessel, and in view of the demonstrated need, the Bureau recommends the favorable report and passage of the bill.

FRANK T. BELL, Commissioner.

SOIL EROSION

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 7054) to provide for the protection of land resources against soil erosion, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it is hereby recognized that the wastage of soil and moisture resources on farm, grazing, and forest lands of the Nation, resulting from soil erosion, is a menace to the national welfare and that it is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to provide for the control and prevention of soil erosion and thereby to preserve natural resources, control floods, prevent impairment of reservoirs, and maintain the navigability of rivers and harbors, protect public lands and relieve unemployment, and the Secretary of Agriculture, from now on, shall coordinate and direct all activities with relation to soil erosion and in order to effectuate this policy is hereby authorized, from time to time—

(1) To conduct surveys, investigations, and research relating to the character of soil erosion and the preventive measures needed, to publish the results of any such surveys, investigations, or research, to disseminate information concerning such methods, and to conduct demonstrational projects in areas subject to erosion by wind or water;

(2) To carry out preventive measures, including, but not limited to, engineering operations, methods of cultivation, the growing of vegetation, and changes in use of land;

(3) To cooperate or enter into agreements with, or to furnish financial or other aid to, any agency, governmental or otherwise, or any person, subject to such conditions as he may deem necessary, for the purposes of this Act; and

(4) To acquire lands, or rights or interests therein, by purchase, gift, condemnation, or otherwise, whenever necessary for the purposes of this act.

SEC. 2. The acts authorized in section 1 (1) and (2) may be performed—

(a) On lands owned or controlled by the United States or any of its agencies, with the cooperation of the agency having jurisdiction thereof; and

(b) On any other lands, upon obtaining proper consent or the necessary rights or interests in such lands.

SEC. 3. As a condition to the extending of any benefits under this act to any lands not owned or controlled by the United States or any of its agencies, the Secretary of Agriculture may, insofar as he may deem necessary for the purposes of this act, require—

(1) The enactment and enforcement of local laws imposing suitable permanent restrictions on the use of such lands and otherwise providing for the prevention of soil erosion;

(2) Agreements and/or covenants as to the permanent use of such lands; and/or

(3) Contributions in money, services, materials, or otherwise to any operations conferring such benefits.

SEC. 4. For the purposes of this act the Secretary of Agriculture may—

(1) Secure the cooperation of any governmental agency;

(2) Subject to the provisions of the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, appoint and fix the compensation of such officers and employees as he may deem necessary, except that employees of the organization heretofore established for the purpose of administering those provisions of sections 202 and 203 of the National Industrial Recovery Act which relate to the prevention of soil erosion may be continued without regard to the civil-service laws or regulations and the Classification Act for a period not to exceed 4 months from the date of this enactment; and any persons with technical and expert knowledge, connected with any educational or research institution, may be jointly employed and compensated under this act and by such institution on a basis to be determined by the Civil Service Commission; and

(3) Make expenditures for personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, for the purchase of law books and books of reference, for printing and binding, for the purchase, operation, and maintenance of passenger-carrying vehicles, and perform such acts, and prescribe such regulations, as he may deem proper to carry out the provisions of this act; and any violation of any such regulation shall be punishable by a fine of not to exceed $100.

SEC. 5. The Secretary of Agriculture shall establish an agency to exercise the powers conferred on him by this act and may utilize the organization heretofore established for the purpose of administering those provisions of sections 202 and 203 of the National Industrial Recovery Act which relate to the prevention of soil erosion, together with such personnel thereof as the Secretary of Agriculture may determine, and all unexpended balances of funds heretofore allotted to said organization which shall be available until June 30, 1937, and shall assume all obligations incurred by said organization prior to transfer to the Department of Agriculture. Funds provided in H. J. Res. 117, "An act making appropration for relief purposes" (for soil erosion), shall be available for expenditure under the provisions of this act; and in order that there may be proper coordination of erosion-control activities the Secretary of Agriculture may transfer to the agency created under this act such functions, funds, personnel, and property of other agencies in the Department of Agriculture as he may from time to time determine.

SEC. 6. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of this act such sums as Congress may from time to time determine to be necessary.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill on which I think there will be practically no division of opinion. It provides for a soil-erosion service.

One of the big problems of this country is the conservation of soil. In recent months, as you all know, there has been a tremendous amount of soil erosion in the West and there has also been soil erosion by water in other sections of the country. This involves what, it seems to me, is a great national problem that calls for solution.

The Public Lands Committee had full hearings on this measure. The Committee on Agriculture has had brief hearings. Unanimous reports have been submitted by both committees. The bill is simple and easily understood. I am going to ask the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] to explain the terms of the measure.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill, H. R. 7054, is a conservation measure and probably one of the most important bills that has come before the House during the present session. It conserves the very life of our country—our soil and our moisture.

Studies have been made by several of the Government departments, namely, the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior.

The Department of the Interior has at the head of this most important bureau Dr. Hugh H. Bennett, who is recognized as an authority on erosion in this country. About $14,000,000 were expended on approximately 40 projects. Those projects were largely in the arid regions, although the expenditure covered a survey of practically every county in the United States. If there has been any doubt of the necessity for a soil-erosion program, certainly the past 10 days or 2 weeks would eliminate any doubt in the mind of anybody.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman tell the Members of the House how much money is involved in this bill?

Mr. DEMPSEY. This bill carries no appropriation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How much is the gentleman contemplating getting? I notice there is a clause that you are going to get some money out of the bill that we recommitted today. Has any amount been set aside for this purpose?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I have no knowledge of any amount that has been set aside, except there was originally $20,000,000 set aside, of which $14,000,000 has been expended. The other $6,000,000 I think has been temporarily loaned to relief agencies, such as the F. E. R. A. That money will be returned, I am advised, and will become a part of the funds necessary to carry out this erosion program.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman anticipates, then, it will not cost more than $6,000,000 to carry out the provisions of this bill?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that it will cost much more than that amount of money. How much more the entire program will cost I have no idea. Under this bill there is no appropriation called for or set aside.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question propounded by the gentleman from Massachusetts, I want to explain the part of the bill insofar as the appropriation is concerned. This bill will not cost a nickel extra money.

The only reason this bill is being passed at this time is to give the Soil Erosion Service permanency of life. There are no funds provided in the bill, and the money that will be spent through this service would have been spent anyway through the Soil Erosion Service temporarily as it is now set up in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is simply a transfer of authority?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes; in making the department permanent.

The reason it is necessary to make the department permanent is this: Many of you will remember that the first speech I made on the floor of the House pointed to this very proposition to create a permanent department of government and coordinate all of the soil-erosion activities through that one department for the purpose of saving money and making count the money that is spent. We have been spending this money through about 14 departments. I have not very much time, but if you will listen to these figures I will show you how important it is that this measure pass immediately. There is not a single Member of Congress whose constituents will not be affected by the passage of this legislation; 125,000,000 acres have now been taken partially, at least, out of cultivation, because of erosion. The erosion is not caused by wind only. As a matter of fact, the wind erosion is the smallest part of the proposition. The erosion that is really stripping the country of its productive soil is water erosion.

It must be remembered that we have only from 7 to 8 inches of productive fertile soil on top in most of our cultivated areas. That is being washed away at the rate of about 100,000 acres annually. In other words, they have lost their fertility.

The bill now under consideration is H. R. 7054, and bears as its author the name of Mr. DEMPSEY, who is my friend, and a soil-erosion enthusiast, but I wish to submit in all fairness that this piece of legislation, which I am wholeheartedly supporting, should have borne my name as its author.

A perusal of the RECORD will show that on January 24, 1935, I offered an amendment to the $4,800,000,000 appropriation bill, providing that all moneys spent on soil erosion, out of that bill, should be spent through the Soil Erosion Service, then in the Department of the Interior. In that speech I pointed out that this department should be created as a permanent department and that all soil-erosion activities should be coordinated through it, instead of through the some five or six various departments who are spending soil-erosion money.

I believe a check of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will show that this was the first intimation made by any Member of the House, at least on the floor of Congress, advocating that all soil-erosion service be coordinated into this one department, and that the department be given permanent status.

Subsequent to that, on March 1, 1935, I prepared and introduced in the House, H. R. 6319, which was a bill to create a separate division in the Department of Agriculture, to be known as the "Soil Erosion Service." The purpose of this bill was to make of the Soil Erosion Service, a permanent department of Government, so that it might continue to operate and conserve the soils of the United States long after the present emergencies had expired.

Because this Service was at that time under the Department of the Interior, it was felt by some that the introduction of this bill, to put it under the Department of Agriculture, might cause a controversy between the two Departments.

On March 5, 1935, I prepared and introduced H. R. 6432, which provided that the Service be set up, with a permanent status, coordinating all soil-erosion activities in it, in the Department of the Interior.

My purpose in doing this was simply to show the world that I had no choice as to the department that took charge of this Service; that the thing that I was primarily interested in was that the Service have a permanent status and become a creature of Congress, so that it might continue to function as long as it was necessary in order to cope with the devastating results of erosion caused by both wind and water.

I believe that a check of the bills introduced in this Congress will show that these two bills were the first ones introduced attempting to accomplish this purpose.

You will notice that the present bill is H. R. 7054. I am not complaining that the present bill is not a good one. I simply wish to make the above observation, that the Congress and the people of the United States generally might know that I am entitled to at least a measure of the credit for the creation of this important department.

The bill that we are about to pass, H. R. 7054, is not adequate, in my judgment, and I shall attempt to have adopted, in the Senate committee, two amendments, which, in my opinion, will greatly benefit this legislation.

The first will be an amendment to subsection 2 of section 4 of the original bill, which amendment will provide that the personnel of this department shall be built up without regard to civil-service laws or regulations, and that civil-service laws and regulations will not apply to the personnel of said department until 6 months after the passage of the act.

It is my further opinion that the bill, in its present form, does not set up the Soil Erosion Service in the Department of Agriculture as a permanent division of the Department of Agriculture but simply provides that as long as the Secretary of Agriculture wants to keep it alive he may do so. Therefore, I propose to offer an amendment and attempt to have it adopted in the Senate committee, which will say in simple language that the Congress is hereby creating a separate division in the Department of Agriculture to be known as the "Soil Erosion Service."

I feel confident that as long as the present administration is in power it will be a policy of this administration to carry on the function of the Soil Erosion Service, but I am mindful of the fact that coming administrations may not feel so kindly toward the preservation of the soil of this Nation as does this administration.

Therefore, I think it imperative that we not leave it to the discretion of the Secretaries of Agriculture to follow as to whether or not this will be a permanent department of the Government, and the only way, in my judgment, this can be done is to amend the present bill. Both of my original bills took care of this contingency.

I want to now give a few reasons for supporting the present legislation.

In the first place, I am anxious to see it pass the House of Representatives and get speedily on its way to becoming enacted into law, and I feel confident that it can be as easily amended in the Senate as in the House.

The following figures will give some idea of how necessary it is that this all-important undertaking, which is being carried on under the able guidance and leadership of Dr. Bennett, be not hampered by the whims of some future Secretary of Agriculture, and that the department be given an unquestionably permanent status.

There are, normally, in the United States 350,000,000 acres which normally produced crops, and 75 percent of this amount is sloping enough to suffer seriously from water erosion. Two hundred and thirteen million acres are normally planted to clean, cultivated crops. In other words, to crops which are most susceptible to water and wind erosion. It is estimated that most of the top soil has now disappeared from 125,000,000 acres in the United States and 35,000,000 acres have now been abandoned as not being fit for cultivation, primarily because of wind and water erosion, and there are 100,000 acres being abandoned as being not fit for cultivation each year. It is again estimated that wind and water erosion costs the farmers of this Nation $400,000,000 annually.

Three billion tons of soil annually wash from our fields and pastures. It is estimated that 400 million tons of soil pass out through the mouth of the Mississippi River annually, which is enough to build 6 inches of soil on 2,500 Oklahoma farms of 160 acres each. On the basis of a Nationwide survey recently completed by the Soil Erosion Service, it is found that the area of formerly cultivated land essentially ruined by erosion is approximately 100 million acres. This is the equivalent of 625,000 farms of 160 acres each or an area nearly equal to the combined extent of Ohio, Illinois, Maryland, and North Carolina. In addition, and this is the most alarming aspect of the whole problem, an area of approximately 125 million acres of land now in cultivation, has lost all, or the greater part of the more productive topsoil, and as a result is from 2 to 10 times, and in some instances, 40 times less productive than was the virgin soil. And this is still not all. Still another 100 million acres are beginning to lose their priceless topsoil, which is the vital substance of the land.

Thus we have been living in a fool's paradise, with respect to the security of our most basic asset.

We have permitted hundreds of thousands of farmers to become tillers of subsoil, which usually amounts to bankrupt farming on bankrupt land.

Moreover, this virtual ruin of the soil is of a permanent character, jeopardizing the well-being of generations to follow by impoverishing the heritage of those who can do nothing about a present evil that is sweeping across the country like a prairie fire.

It is vitally necessary that the Government, at this juncture, do something to preserve the soil and to stop its eroding, because to build back the soil, after it has been eroded, is a task of well nigh impossible proportions, for under natural conditions of surface stabilization with vegetation, it takes from approximately 400 to more than 1,000 years to build a single inch of virgin topsoil.

Every year erosion removes from our fields around twenty times as much plant food as is taken off by crops. Plant food removed in crops can be restored in the form of fertilizer and soil-improving plants, but erosion takes not only the plant food constituents but the whole physical body of the soil, plant food, and all; and this soil cannot be hauled back into the fields. It is just as much lost, most of it, as if completely consumed with fire.

On the 11th of May 1934 a shadow of coming events swept across eastern United States in the form of a dust storm that originated in the plains of the trans-Mississippi.

For the first time in our history thousands of square miles of land and water along the eastern seaboard were showered with dust particles, blown from unprotected bare fields lying at the heart of the Nation; 300,000,000 tons of productive soil having been swept out of the fields of the stricken area. But that was not the last, because within the last 3 weeks we have seen the same thing, in increased proportions, again occur, increasing to such an extent that dust from the prairies of the Middle West hovered over the city of Washington, actually darkening the sun, causing the inhabitants of Washington to prepare themselves for rain, which they expected to fall out of the gathering clouds. Farmers of Oklahoma and Kansas were forced to abandon their homes. Travel was impaired, and in some instances traffic was paralyzed. The top soil of that great agricultural area was by the wind moved to other sections of the country in such proportion that in many instances growing crops, which were just peeping through the ground, were entirely submerged in dust and dirt. Many of the cattlemen of that section were forced to move their herds of thousands of head, hundreds of miles to new pastures, because the dust and dirt and productive top soil had completely covered the grass which provided sustenance for their cattle.

This is only the beginning, and unless the people of this Nation become awakened to the degree in which we are punishing our greatest resource, the soil, I warn you that ere long we will find ourselves in the condition that many of the old countries of Asia are now in, to wit, a country thickly populated, with not enough productive soil left to furnish foodstuff for its people.

This bill will undoubtedly pass today without hardly a dissenting vote, and I am truly hopeful that it will, with the amendments above suggested, pass the Senate in the same manner; and then I am truly hopeful that this administration will put enough of the funds appropriated by this Congress for relief into this service, that the men who have given a lifetime to the scientific study of means to prevent this devastating erosion may actively combat its destruction and thus keep for the present generation our millions of acres of fertile, productive land, to the end that we may pass down to a coming posterity a land in which they may continue to live, grow, and prosper.

I appeal to you ladies and gentlemen of the House to give this bill your support, and to lend to this department, after it is created, your hearty cooperation; and I sincerely trust that when this department sends its field men out into the field to work with and aid the farmers of this Nation that the farmers themselves will wholeheartedly cooperate with the problem as laid out by the Soil Erosion Service, so ably headed by Dr. Bennett in Washington, and so efficiently administered by Dr. Winters, in my own State of Oklahoma.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I arise to pay a tribute to two men who for years have been largely responsible for the growth of sentiment with respect to soil erosion in the United States. I refer to H. H. Bennett and Samuel W. Phillips. These two men about 10 years ago engaged themselves in working on this proposition, with the result that today we see their work being recognized nationally and the soil-erosion work being transferred over to the Department of Agriculture, thereby recognizing this division as one of the most useful organizations in the entire Government service. Of these two men, I can say that one of them, Dr. H. H. Bennett, is the head of the soil-erosion department. He is the outstanding expert on this subject in America. He has studied this question in the various countries of the world. His writings are accepted as authority everywhere. Besides being an expert in a literary sense, he is a practical man and a man of good judgment. So long as he continues at the head of this work we have every reasonable assurance that the work will be done well. The other man, Samuel W. Phillips, was also a recognized leader in this field. Together these two men collaborated intelligently and industriously in their efforts to show the terribly destructive effect of erosion. Mr. Phillips was a man of great dynamic power. He had been well prepared scholastically, and but for his untimely death he would have achieved greater renown in the work in which his whole life was centered. Although a young man, his skill as an engineer as well as his thorough knowledge of the theory and practice of erosion work made him an invaluable man in field work. He it was who built the first Government erosion experiment station. He built all of the experiment stations built by the Government up until his death in 1934, which occurred while he was engaged in planning and erecting the modern station at Zanesville, Ohio.

The Government service lost a faithful and efficient servant when Mr. Phillip died, and the cause of erosion lost one of its two foremost exponents and advocates. The great sandstorms which are attracting the attention of the country now are true but tragic testimonials to the foresight of these two gentlemen. I hope that Dr. Bennett may live long to carry on the torch of progress flung to him by Mr. Phillips, and that their work may be a blessing to our country and our people as it now appears certain to be.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will not the gentleman look into the splendid services that have been performed by R. A. Winston in connection with this same problem. He will find that he is also entitled to be mentioned.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman for his kind suggestion and I hope that Mr. Winston may continue the good work that he is doing. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this brief time to indulge in the reflection as to whether or not this bill is really supernumerary. A few weeks ago there was an upheaval in the A. A. A. and all the pink gentlemen were ejected with the exception of Professor Tugwell. Now we learn that Tugwell is to be kicked upstairs and is to have $900,000,000 for the purpose of performing such functions as this bill provides. I am wondering if it is fair on the part of the House to interfere with the jurisdiction of this distinguished gentleman by passing this legislation. I am wondering why you gentlemen of the West do not welcome him with open arms and be content with his handling of this vast sum for this erosion purpose. I am also wondering how your people will feel when they learn into whose hands they have fallen.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the gentlemen having to do with the utilization of surplus labor in this country that perhaps the best field into which it can be directed is the preservation of the ability of the generations that are to come to live. I want to congratulate the Committee on Agriculture and the other agencies for bringing in this item of legislation.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the pending measure proposing to give the Soil Erosion Service, which has already been set up and functioning in a satisfactory manner, a permanent status is, in my judgment, one of the most important bills that the House has considered during the present session.

I desire to congratulate the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY], who has been sponsoring this legislation.

Members of the Oklahoma delegation have also been active in sponsoring soil-erosion legislation, and are all enthusiastically supporting the pending measure. It is only natural for those of us in Western States, and especially citizens living in Oklahoma, to be extremely interested in the conservation of our soil.

Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to see such enthusiastic support for this legislation. I regret that there seems to be some little contention among certain Members of Congress who evidently feel they should be entitled to be named as authors of the pending bill. Although I introduced the first soil-erosion measure ever introduced in this House and have been sponsoring and advocating the conservation of soil for the past several years, I have no desire to claim the authorship of this bill. That is not important, but it is of vital importance that a comprehensive soil-erosion program be undertaken and carried out in my State at the earliest possible moment. Our people have finally become "soil erosion conscious", and they realize that it is impossible for the State, county, or local governments to cope with the situation without assistance from the Federal Government.

Today as we consider this bill as the first great step toward the prevention of soil erosion, we have reports of dust storms raging in several Western and Southwestern States. Oklahoma has not escaped this plague in the form of clouds of dust.

But as distressing as wind erosion is proving to be, it is not wasting our soil to the extent that water erosion does. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] a few moments ago gave us some of the figures, showing the thousands of acres of good tillable land that has been laid waste by erosion of the soil. When we take into consideration that 85 percent of the cultivated lands in the State of Oklahoma are suffering serious losses of soil and that nearly 2,000,000 acres of what was formerly good tillable fields have actually been abandoned, due entirely to the loss of topsoil and the washing of gullies, one is made to wonder why this Congress has so long delayed doing something about it.

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that 440,000,000 tons of soil in the State of Oklahoma alone are annually being washed from cultivated fields and pastures into the streams of this country? Do you know that more soil went down the Mississippi River last year from the fields of 30 States of this Union than was excavated in the construction of the Panama Canal? Do you know that it would take a fleet of 4,200 trucks of 4,000 pounds capacity loading and unloading every 10 minutes and working 24 hours in each day for 365 days to haul back to those once productive Oklahoma fields the tremendous volume of soil that they lost last year by erosion?

The State of Oklahoma has been hit hardest, perhaps, than any other State of its size and population in the United States. Secretary Ickes, after an investigation, has reported that Oklahoma is the worst eroded State in the American Union. It is estimated that the total annual cost of soil erosion to Oklahoma, including the choking of stream channels, the filling up of reservoirs with silt, the damage to highways and railroads, and the contribution to the cost of flood control on the Mississippi, is at least $115,000,000 per year. Only the State of Texas, approximately three times the size of Oklahoma, has a greater annual loss, which is estimated in that State at $125,000,000 per year. Yet Oklahoma was one of the last States in the American Union opened for settlement. When I tell you that of the 16,000,000 acres of land under cultivation in Oklahoma that more than 13,000,000 acres have suffered serious losses of topsoil, and in a few years much of this land will become practically worthless, you will begin to understand the seriousness of the soil erosion in Oklahoma.

Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago I was pleased that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] paid a splendid tribute to the head of the Soil Erosion Service here in Washington. I agree with him fully. Mr. Bennett is no doubt the greatest expert in America on soil erosion, and I feel is equal to the gigantic task that his organization has undertaken. I also appreciate the deserved compliment that the same gentleman, I believe, paid to Mr. Winston, one of his technical experts. In this connection, it is a genuine pleasure for me to pay a humble tribute to Dr. N. E. Winters, regional director of the Soil Erosion Service in Oklahoma. Dr. Winters is not only a real expert on the subject of soil erosion, but he knows how to get the job done. There is no question but what he has done more than any other dozen men in Oklahoma to arouse the citizens of my State to the need of combatting this giant enemy of the farmers of our State.

May I add here that in the past few weeks I have had two conferences with the President of the United States on the importance of this administration recognizing the necessity to combat soil erosion now. I feel that the country is fortunate, and that the State of Oklahoma is fortunate, that this problem of preserving our top soil has been turned over to such men as we have in our Soil Erosion Service.

I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that there is so little opposition to this bill. I had hoped there would be no opposition at all. Frankly, I am surprised at the statement just made a few moments ago by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN], who, because of his evident dislike for Dr. Tugwell, would actually go so far as to oppose this meritorious measure. At least that was the feeble excuse he offered.

Let us not quibble at this late hour over personalities. Let us not delay or camouflage the issue. There is no question as to the importance of this legislation. Let us do our duty now. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE].

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, I can only reiterate in 2 minutes what my colleague from Oklahoma has said in regard to this bill, and the importance of it to Oklahoma.

I wish I had the time to give you a pen picture of what has happened in my part of Oklahoma, which is the central western part of the State.

That country has been in settlement for 43 years. We never had any trouble with this kind of wind erosion until within the last 2 years, when there has been such a scarcity of rainfall.

For instance, our annual rainfall is about 28 inches, and that is abundant to produce a great harvest. In my district, and it is an average district in size, we produce one-half of the total cotton of the State of Oklahoma. We have produced 15,000,000 bushels of wheat, but last year, due to the extreme drought, and a rainfall not exceeding 7 inches for 15 months, that district probably produced only 75,000 bales of cotton, and you will find that is so all over the country.

I think I can give the reason for the wind erosion. I have lived there long enough so that I know something about the soil.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG].

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I rise to voice the assertion that I do not think this bill goes far enough. I am in hearty sympathy with the set-up. It is my belief that many other land problems should be taken away from the Department of the Interior and placed in the Department of Agriculture—in particular, all phases of land use involving production from the soil, tilled or untilled.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—SOIL-EROSION CONTROL

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, permit me to make a few observations.

A great deal has been said and written about soil erosion and its control in recent weeks. Spectacular dust storms in the Great Plains region focused the attention of the Nation upon this problem and the pressing need of action to combat it. We have heard much of the intensified program of erosion control to be undertaken by the Department of Agriculture, with the Soil Erosion Service as the basic agency.

But little has been said or written about the part already played by the Department of the Interior in this important field of erosion control. As a matter of fact it was the Department of the Interior that pioneered this work; it was in the Department of the Interior that the Soil Erosion Service was established 18 months ago to carry out the first organized campaign against soil erosion ever undertaken in this country. To the Department of the Interior should go whatever credit there may be—and I believe it is considerable—for the inception of the program which has now attracted the attention of the Nation.

It was Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes—an ardent conservationist—who caused the Soil Erosion Service to be created in September 1933. And it was Public Works Administrator Harold L. Ickes—the same ardent conservationist—who approved the allocation of $5,000,000 of public-works funds for prosecution of a Nation-wide erosion-control program, and who authorized additional allotments totaling $15,000,000 as the work progressed. Upon his recognition of the erosion problem and his initiative in taking entire steps to cope with it, I desire to congratulate the Secretary of the Interior.

During its 18 months under the Department of the Interior, the Soil Erosion Service set up a network of demonstration areas covering representative watersheds in the most important agricultural regions of the country. Within these projects, farmers are cooperating with the Service in a complete program of soil-erosion control under which every parcel of land is treated in accordance with its peculiar needs and adaptabilities.

Forty of these projects are under way in 32 States. Thirty-seven of them are essentially demonstrational in character and average about 200,000 acres in size; the remaining three are much larger, ranging from eight to sixteen million acres, and involve complete land rehabilitation programs on a large scale.

Since each of the demonstration projects is located in an area of acute erosion, and since conditions within the project are typical of those obtaining in the entire surrounding region, the erosion control work directed by the Service within the limits of each project constitutes a practical demonstration of the most effective measures of land conservation adaptable to the general locality. In the Piedmont region, for instance, measures applied to the land within each demonstration area are applicable in the Piedmont belt as a whole.

The 37 demonstration projects now in operation cover an aggregate of approximately 4,000,000 acres in the most severely eroded sections of the country. Each of the 37 projects, however, is representative of at least one million, and in some cases as much as ten million acres of surrounding territory, so that conservatively figured, the demonstration work being done by the Service has an influence for at least 37,000,000 acres outside of its demonstration areas.

To this vast acreage must be added, of course, the 35,700,000 acres actually covered by the three large land utilization projects being carried on by the Service in the Southwest.

In aggregate, therefore, the erosion-control work actually under way under the direction of the Soil Erosion Service is an influence on upwards of 75,000,000 acres, an appreciable segment of this Nation's agricultural land.

This impressive program has been in operation only 18 months and has cost to date less than $8,000,000. Although a total of $20,000,000 was allocated to the Service by the Public Works Administration, $6,000,000 was later impounded. Of the remaining $14,000,000 less than $8,000,000 has been actually expended or obligated, leaving slightly more than $6,000,000 available for completion of work in the 40 demonstration areas.

In the matter of employment the program has furnished constructive work for upward of 11,000 C. C. C. workers in the 51 E. C. W. camps assigned to the Soil Erosion Service. These youths have been given an opportunity not only to earn a living in the out-of-doors, but to learn the highly technical work of erosion control. Many of them, taken from city streets, have come for the first time in their lives into healthy contact with the land.

In addition to the C. C. C. workers, however, the Service has furnished employment to some 5,000 laborers and to some 1,000 so-called "white-collar workers" in supervisory and administrative capacities. When the C. W. A. program was in operation a considerable number of these workers were employed and some F. E. R. A. labor has also been used from time to time.

Moreover, the Service has inaugurated one of the most constructive employment plans in the Federal service. Cognizant of the need for highly trained personnel if the national program of erosion control was to be properly supervised and directed, the Service several months ago originated a unique work-training system for recent college graduates.

Under this plan some 800 young men just out of college and confronted with discouraging impossibility of obtaining employment, have been hired by the Service on a temporary basis at the prevailing P. W. A. wage for labor, ranging from 40 to 50 cents an hour. They were selected from lists of eligibles recommended by the agricultural and technical schools in each State. As a part of their jobs they are required to attend lecture courses after office hours several evenings a week, the object being to apply to the specific and highly technical problems of erosion control, the academic training the young men have received in agronomy, agricultural engineering, soils, and other subjects involved in erosion-prevention work. Indications are that the number of trainees eventually may reach 1,500.

In setting forth the actual accomplishments in land treatment achieved thus far by the Service, it should be pointed out that the primary objective of the program has been one of demonstration. The amount of work done on the land is relatively unimportant; what matters is the nature of the work and its availability for profitable inspection by a large number of farmers having erosion problems comparable to those being treated by the Service in each major farm and grazing region.

Every indication points to the fact that the work of the Service on its 40 widely scattered projects probably has been the most important factor in awakening farmers of this country to the imminent menace of accelerated soil erosion. Conservative estimates place the number of visitors to the various projects during the past year and a half at close to a million. Editorial comment in the local and national press reflecting the attitude of the people has been uniformly commendatory.

In point of actual work done, moreover, the Service has obtained significant results during its comparatively brief period of existence. Nearly 7,000 miles of terraces have been constructed on lands suited to this type of control. These structures have been carefully engineered, in contrast to the haphazard terracing done by farmers themselves in certain localities in the past, and have demonstrated their reliability and sturdiness under conditions of severe stress. Some 5,000 terrace outlets have also been built in connection with the terracing. Nearly 200,000 check dams have been built to check the yawning gullies that have scarred and ruined millions of acres of crop and pasture lands. About 4,000,000 feet of gully bank has been sloped and prepared for the planting of erosion-control vegetation, and nearly 10,000,000 square yards of bank—roadside banks and gully banks—have been planted with soil-holding trees, shrubs, and grasses.

Of even more importance, probably, is the work called for under cooperative contracts between farmers and the Service. Some 200,000 acres, under these agreements, are to be strip cropped by their owners in accordance with the recommendations of the Soil Erosion Service experts. Some 325,000 acres are to be contour tilled, by agreement with the Service; 300,000 will be terraced; 416,000 acres will be planted in erosion-resisting crop rotations; and more than 100,000 acres will be permanently retired to pasture or forest.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, I can only reiterate in 2 minutes what my colleague from Oklahoma has said in regard to this bill and the importance of it to Oklahoma. I wish I had time to give you a pen picture of what has happened in my part of Oklahoma, which is the central western part of the State.

That country has been in settlement for 43 years. We have never had any trouble with this kind of wind erosion until the last 2 years, when there has been such a scarcity of rainfall.

For instance, our annual rainfall is about 28 inches, and that is abundant to produce a great harvest. In my district, and it is an average district in size, we produce one-half of the total cotton of the State of Oklahoma. We have produced 15,000,000 bushels of wheat, but last year, due to the extreme drought and a rainfall not exceeding 7 inches for 15 months, that district probably produced only 75,000 bales of cotton; and you will find that is so all over the country.

Western Oklahoma is an undulating prairie country, drained by the Canadian, Northfork, and Washita Rivers. Naturally, there are many small streams tributary to these rivers. The country has an unusually large area of arable land; and due to the rolling nature of the land, when heavy rainfalls occur, these smaller streams quickly overflow and the flood water is carried in great volume and with speed to the rivers. The banks of these streams are steep, and the only lowlands of consequence are in the river bottoms. When the waters from the tributaries are precipitated into the rivers they are soon filled and the overflows occur.

The rainfall in this country is not uniform, and is not evenly distributed throughout the seasons. It is a country where we have terrific downpours of rain, and it is not unusual for from 12 to 15 inches of rainfall to occur in a period of 24 hours. This may be expected to happen once within every year or so.

In order to conserve the moisture that we get from these rains, the farmers have adopted a system of mulching, by which I mean the ground is plowed frequently and to a shallow depth, thus creating a mulch of dust on the surface to prevent the escape of the moisture underneath this covering. It will readily be seen that if there is not sufficient rainfall to soak through this dust mulch or covering to unite it with the solid ground below, this mulch will be taken up by the winds and blown away. On the other hand, if there is a seasonable distribution of the rainfall and there is sufficient of it to wet the ground thoroughly, there would be no loose top soil of any consequence to be blown away.

Various kinds of experimentations have been made by the farmers for the protection of their land against wind erosion in ordinary times, such as listing the lands and, of course, planting the various coverage crops. There has also been a great deal of terracing done by the farmers themselves as well as small dams built by them for the protection of their lands and to assure them a supply of stock water.

From these experimental undertakings by the farmers they have learned that there is much value in terracing as well as in the building of dams or reservoirs as a protection against wind and water erosion of their farms.

Very naturally when sudden heavy rainfalls occur the water carries thousands of tons of loose topsoil down the small streams into the rivers, and as a consequence many thousands of acres of the very choicest farms have been rendered practically worthless by water erosion alone. There is not only the loss to the fertility of the land by reason of the washing away of this topsoil in times of storm, but each year thousands of dollars worth of property loss is sustained by reason of the floods.

The unprecedented drought, extending over the last 3 or 4 years, has brought an additional and very noticeable and material destructive agency to light so far as the soil is concerned, and that agency is the matter of wind action on the loose topsoil or mulch which I mentioned a while ago. Perhaps the damage from wind erosion had been of consequence for years, but it never became noticeably alarming until this unprecedented drought.

This section of the State of which I speak is adjacent to the level plains country of the Texas Panhandle on the west and is south of the Kansas plains, and there is very little protection from the devastating winds that have brought so much havoc to that part of the country since the beginning of this great drought period.

The irregular and spasmodic rainfalls, which are characteristic of the country, have been a problem for those interested in soil conservation for many years; and as I have stated heretofore, many undertakings have been made by the farmers to protect their lands against erosion from these heavy rainfalls. But this added menace gives to the people of my district the double problem of protecting their lands both from water and wind erosion, and with this goes the further question of protection from flood damage.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that I may confidently say that my congressional district is the most productive one in the State of Oklahoma, and I doubt if there is any farm area of like dimensions in the United States that is capable of producing more crop values in normal times than the Seventh District of Oklahoma; in fact, just a few years ago the Department of Agriculture gave out the information that my home county, Washita, ranked first in the United States in the value of its farm products. That happened at a time when farmers received something like an adequate price for the crops they raised; and while I specifically mention my home county, the other counties of my district are very similar in their agricultural value to my home county.

There is no doubt, with such an agricultural country as I have described, the Congress could do no better than to give its most serious consideration to take steps to aid those people in saving those fertile lands from the continued and aggravated menaces that threaten their destruction; and I think it is absolutely necessary to put into effect immediately a vast program of land conservation, including terracing, reservoir construction, a sensible program of forestation by planting trees where trees can be grown, and coupled with this there should be inaugurated a great educational program of farm cultivation so that in future years the people of America will have this reservoir of agricultural wealth to help support the Nation.

The experimentations made by numerous farmers so far have been of practical value, and have also been of incalculable value to the people of that section of the country. For instance, it is now well known that contour listing, terracing, planting of proper cover crops, and building water reservoirs have all greatly added to the conservation and productivity of the soil, and have furnished a large measure of protection against wind erosion.

There is no need to present any argument as to the importance of the educational program mentioned along the lines of proper farm cultivation, taking into consideration the natural wind and rain conditions that prevail in that section of the United States.

I have heard it stated that Oklahoma is the veritable battleground of the elements; that it is a country of great extremes in temperature and water fall and of extreme calms and fierce wind storms.

The authorities of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Oklahoma have done a tremendous amount of very valuable work in connection with soil erosion and improved farming methods, and in this work they have taken into consideration the very weather conditions that I have mentioned, and with which, of course, those people are familiar. Dr. Winters, of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Oklahoma, has been intensely interested in and has most intelligently directed the minds of the people of that State to the great importance of caring for the soil, and I believe under his further guidance and direction a sane, practical solution of this great problem will be brought about.

In the discussion of this bill on the floor of the House some startling figures have been submitted which show conclusively the importance of immediate enactment of legislation to put an end to the ravages of water and wind erosion throughout the Nation.

It is shown in these figures that approximately 125,000,000 acres of farm land have been stripped of their top soil, and, for practical uses, this land has disappeared from the Nation's assets. It is further shown that 35,000,000 acres have been abandoned, and this land is no longer fit for cultivation, because of the ravages of wind and water, and that approximately 100,000 acres are being abandoned each year. It is estimated that wind and water erosion is costing the Nation's farmers $400,000,000 a year, that 3,000,000,000 tons of soil are washed annually from our lands, that 400,000,000 tons of soil pass out through the mouth of the Mississippi River each year.

I do not know how accurate these estimates are, but they are alarming, to say the least of it; and to those of us who are interested in farm life and who know nothing else but farm life, the subject looms as of paramount importance from a national aspect.

In my opinion, the Congress cannot go too far in its efforts to remedy this terrible condition which threatens the foundation of agriculture.

The figures mentioned above are estimates of our national loss. I do not know whether or not estimates for our section of Oklahoma would be more alarming than for the Nation at large, but, knowing as I do the nature of the soil, and from a residence of nearly 40 years in that country and from daily observation of conditions there, I am constrained to the belief that there is a more imperative demand for speedy, lasting, and permanent legislation looking to the protection of that soil than in any other section of the country.

What I have said in regard to the Seventh District of Oklahoma is, I am informed, equally applicable to the entire State, as well as to southeastern Colorado, western Kansas, Nebraska, North and South Dakota, and the Texas Panhandle. I am sure that there is not any difference in the character of people that live in this vast farm area. They have all the courage, endurance, and perseverance of the American pioneer. They are home-loving people. They have their entire investments there. Their families live there and they are asking of the Congress to assist them in preserving their holdings and maintaining their homes until normal conditions in rainfall shall return.

The damage wrought in this area in the last few months from wind erosion cannot at this time even be approximately reckoned, but it is enormous, and an unfortunate aspect is that it has caused physical and mental suffering beyond the ability of any person not familiar with conditions to conceive.

I am impressed with the fact that if any effective aid is to be given in meeting and helping to solve this problem immediate action is of the utmost importance, and that any delay will not only cost another year's damage from soil losses and dust storms but will entail further physical distress to the thousands of people residing in that section of the United States.

ALLEVIATION OF THE HAZARDS OF OLD AGE, UNEMPLOYMENT, ILLNESS, ETC.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Printing I send to the desk for immediate consideration House Concurrent Resolution 19.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 19 (Rept. 573)

Resolved, etc., That in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, empowered to have printed for its use 2,000 copies of the hearings held before said committee relative to the bill (H. R. 4120) to alleviate the hazards of old age, unemployment, illness, and dependency, to establish a social-insurance board in the Department of Labor to raise revenue, and for other purposes, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session.

The resolution was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES, REPAIR OF NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4760) to increase the statutory limit of expenditure for repairs or changes to naval vessels, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS AND THE RECOVERY PROGRAM

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein a speech made by Mr. Cordell Hull, the Secretary of State, and also a speech by Mr. Robert L. O'Brien, of the Tariff Commission, made over the radio a few days ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio addresses of Hon. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, and Hon. Robert L. O'Brien, Chairman of the Tariff Commission, March 23, 1935:

ADDRESS OF HON. CORDELL HULL, SECRETARY OF STATE

The Chairman of the Tariff Commission, Mr. O'Brien, will explain to you the difference between the old and the new methods of tariff revision in this country. I hope, in the next few minutes, to show you how the trade-agreements program ties in with the administration's plan for domestic recovery and the promotion of friendly relations with other countries.

The international exchange of goods is of immediate and vital concern to every individual among us. An exchange of goods makes business move, and without this exchange there is stagnation and unemployment. Trade stimulates productivity at both ends of the transaction. In addition to the production of the goods themselves, work is created in the transportation of the export and in the transportation, distribution, and marketing of the import.

By the trade-agreements program, now well under way, we are seeking to persuade other countries to join us in breaking down excessive barriers to trade so that its movements may be less hampered and its volume increased. Agreements already concluded with Cuba, Brazil, and Belgium, and others which are in prospect, indicate that many other nations are willing to cooperate. The agreement with Cuba—in force 6 months—has resulted in a marked stimulation of trade and it is reasonable to expect that other agreements will have like consequences.

At the high mark of 1929, our exports were valued at over $5,000,000,000. Every State in the Union shared in this business, some to the extent of hundreds of millions. And do not imagine that these huge exports were confined to coastal States. Interior States also participated heavily in our export trade in 1929. The export products of Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Iowa, and Missouri were valued at over $1,000,000,000.

All States suffered severe losses in exports between the years 1929 and 1932. New York lost $708,000,000, Michigan $306,000,000, Texas $357,000,000, California $231,000,000, Illinois $172,000,000, and Pennsylvania, $240,000,000. Can anyone reasonably doubt that this drastic decline in our foreign trade from $5,000,000,000 in 1929 to only $1,600,000,000 in 1932 has swelled the tragic ranks of the unemployed and has meant a very definite lowering of the standard of living in this country? But the indirect losses are far greater. For example, the decline of exports of automobiles from Michigan resulted in a decline in urban employment and buying power, and thereby caused a loss of domestic markets for our agricultural population.

The improved business condition of the past year and a half has been intimately related to a revival of our export trade. From 1932 to 1934 the exports of the United States increased from $1,611,000,000 to $2,133,000,000, an increase of 32 percent. The exports of automobiles and machinery increased from $222,000,000 to $435,000,000. The export of copper increased threefold, and iron and steel semimanufactures fourfold.

These increases in exports have unquestionably contributed substantially to the measure of recovery of business and employment thus far achieved. And the effects are not to be limited to the direct increase in employment in the export industries. The expansion of the export industries has, in turn, had a cumulative effect upon related industries, resulting in an ever-widening expansion of economic activity and employment in the domestic sphere. For example, the increase of automobile exports and other metal manufactures including machinery and electrical equipment, constitutes an important part of the increased demand for iron and steel products, plate glass, lumber, and at least 20 other commodities, and the increased purchasing power of the additional workers in these fields in turn has created a larger demand for consumption goods of all sorts, including the demand for agricultural products.

I cite these facts with no easy optimism. We are confronting a crisis in our foreign trade. The recent expansion of foreign trade does not yet rest on secure foundations. And because of the close relationship of our foreign trade with fundamental and full domestic recovery this crisis concerns every one of us vitally interested in the continued development of domestic business revival and the expansion of employment.

In 1934 this country enjoyed an export merchandise surplus of $478,000,000. The service items, including tourist expenditures, immigrant remittances, interest, and dividend payments, were substantially in balance. It is clear that the merchandise export surplus rested upon the insecure, uncertain foundation of a vast inflow of gold.

Events of the last year should make every American realize the precarious situation of our export trade, particularly on the continent of Europe. Trade-control measures are becoming day by day increasingly complicated and restrictive. These measures are designed to protect the balance of payments of foreign countries, to prevent an abnormal outflow of gold. Of one thing we may be sure—so long as our merchandise export surplus is balanced by gold imports the signal is given to our foreign customers to impose ever-increasing restrictive measures against our exports. Day after day and week after week throughout the year nations caught in this serious dilemma are trying by desperate means on the one side to check imports and on the other side to force exports. An outstanding development of the past year has been the use of bargaining quotas allotted to various countries in return for forced expansion of exports. In many parts of the world, especially in central Europe, clearing-exchange agreements and trade-compensation arrangements have put international trade very nearly back to a state of outright barter. This means a decrease rather than an increase in the sum total. Some countries have allocated exchange on the basis of other countries' purchases of their products. In some countries export trade is wholly or in large part controlled by import monopolies or centralized trade-control boards.

The effect of all these measures has been to restrict and to canalize trade into abnormal channels and to force a diversion of trade. These measures tend toward bilateral balancing of trade, which for the United States would mean that our exports would be cut down to the low level of our merchandise imports. Economic nationalism has never inflicted upon nations more serious and lasting injuries, affecting the well-being of peoples, the stability of governments, and civilization itself, than during recent years.

It is, therefore, urgent in the interest of American trade and world recovery to exert a determined leadership in the direction of liberal commercial policies in order to restore the equality of treatment upon which alone our foreign commerce can thrive. It is for this reason that the administration is basing its trade-agreements program upon the principle of equality of treatment, or nondiscrimination, in opposition to special bargaining and preferential arrangements. It is for this reason that we stand for a revival and strengthening of the most-favored-nation principle and against the exclusive policies of strict and narrow quid pro quo arrangements. The very economic lives of more than 30 countries depend upon foreign trade, and their collapse has disastrous effects upon us, as we have seen since 1929.

We believe that foreign countries are already beginning to learn that all these various devices bring, in the final analysis, no relief to their trade position. Trade is diverted, but it is not increased. It is a striking fact that international trade has been most stagnant and suffered the severest reverses during the past year in those very areas where the rigorous control devices to which I have referred have been most extensively developed.

The United States stands at the crossways. Of all the countries in the world, it is in the freest position to assume a world leadership in the adoption of saner commercial policies.

What do the supporters of an excessive and prohibitive tariff have to say in favor of such excesses? One of the most used arguments is that such tariffs protect American workers against the "pauper labor of Europe and Asia" and the American people generally from a low standard of living. But does it? I may first remark that all agree to the maintenance of reasonable or moderate tariffs that will not allow excessive or unreasonable importations of competitive products. A study made of 36 typical industries which are on an export basis or not aided by the tariff and 36 industries whose products are highly protected shows that in 1929 the average remuneration of wage earners in the highly protected industries was $595 less than that of the worker in the industries which received no tariff benefits. The average annual income in the unprotected industries was $1,704, while that in the highly protected industries was $1,109.

Those who contend that a virtually prohibitive tariff is absolutely essential overlook or ignore certain basic facts. According to the census of 1930 there was approximately 50,000,000 gainful workers in the country. More than half of this number, employed in service industries, transportation, wholesale and retail business, public utilities, and building trades, are not only not helped by the tariff but, as consumers, actually hurt thereby. Ten million farmers, a large part of whose products are exported and sell at world market prices, are obliged to buy in a protected market. Of the remainder, a large proportion are engaged in industries that are on an export basis, such as the automobile industry, electric apparatus, industrial and agricultural machinery, and other mass-production industries, which get no assistance from the tariffs, and are, indeed, injured by it. Many others are engaged in industries of a distinctly domestic character not subject to foreign competition.

There is not a country which does not have one or more specialities in which it is peculiarly proficient and which contributes to the necessities and amenities of world society. International trade helps to stimulate and spread throughout the world scientific discoveries and inventions, to broaden the national horizon of every nation and every people, and to enrich life everywhere.

For 6 years nations have vainly striven separately to restore prosperity. But I would emphasize as strongly as I can the fact that these efforts at national recovery have not fully succeeded because of the destruction of international trade. It follows that a vigorous effort to rebuild that trade is essential if we do not wish the struggle back toward prosperity to be too long delayed.

It would be inexcusable if we did not make a vigorous effort to ameliorate the frictions and animosities which tend to produce wars and impede the progress of civilization, by attempting to remove one of the chief causes. In these days no nation can live wholly to itself without imposing upon its own people and the peoples of other countries unjustifiable deprivations and hardships. Therefore, despite all difficulties, and despite the artful propaganda of selfish interests, we intend to continue to strive for an economic cooperation among nations that will make the vast riches of the world more readily accessible to all, remove as far as possible the causes of envy and aggression, and so take a determined first step in the direction of greater economic well-being and universal peace.

ADDRESS OF HON. ROBERT LINCOLN O'BRIEN, CHAIRMAN UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION

The United States has for generations been a leader among the trading nations. In colonial days it was an exporter of fine wooden ships, of spars for the King's navy, of tobacco, and ship stores. In the last century King Cotton, safe in his southern stronghold, shipped the fiber that filled the spindles of the world's looms; the bread basket of the Mississippi Valley fed all Europe; and scores of cattle ships carried the cargoes that put beef on the tables of Europe. The twentieth century saw a change. Still cotton, still wheat, and pork, and tobacco helped fill the ships that linked the resources of the United States with the markets of the world. But now newer products, from new industries, announced the rising industrial strength of the United States. Copper, petroleum, fruit, canned goods, automobiles, machinery, and electrical equipment—these are the latter-day goods with which America holds her own in world markets. Every American tourist wandering around foreign cities has felt a homely pleasure in the familiar names of familiar products in shop windows.

In 1929 the nations of the world exchanged over $33,000,000,000 worth of goods. Our share in that gigantic export trade was over $5,000,000,000—15 percent of all international commerce.

Five billion dollars is a lot of money—more than the President is requesting for the whole works-relief program for the next year. Yet, being told that those $5,000,000,000 in exports were not quite 10 percent of the total production of the United States in 1929, some people have hastily concluded that the whole parcel of export trade is hardly worth the worry, and that in domestic concerns lie the beginning and the end of all our prosperity. To the southerner, who knows that without cotton exports half the cotton acres of the South will lie fallow, refutation of that doctrine is needless. The raiser of hogs, the grower of oranges and apples, the canner of fruit, the tobacco plantationist, the oil driller, the automobile manufacturer—all these and many more need no reminder of the importance of foreign markets.

By 1933 world exports were scarcely a third of their total in 1929. The United States had held its own; it still accounted for about 15 percent of that trade. But now, instead of $5,000,000,000, the export trade contributed only $1,674,000,000 to the national trade and income. What that shrinkage has meant to the South, to California, to the Pacific Northwest, to Detroit, and to all the other communities and regions whose prosperity is dependent in large measure upon a flourishing export trade is evident to us all.

A nation that has left few devices untried in the sad game of adding bricks to the top of tariff walls must not be surprised if the first result is strangled trade and the second result is new millions on the relief roles.

No one has ever assumed that the present restriction of output is anything more than a desperate and temporary expediency. No one has ever claimed that there is any solution for depression in a mass-production economy such as ours except mass production at a profit to worker and employer. That means markets, markets at home and abroad, extensive and intensive. The recapture of old and the creation of new foreign markets is the goal of the trade-agreements program, a goal whose achievement carries a promise of increased employment for every State in the Union.

The stalemate in world trade is not to be ended by good wishes or pious resolutions. It was created by the raising of trade barriers to insurmountable heights. It will be dissipated by skillful, patient negotiations to reduce some of those barriers to levels at which trade can be resumed. No one country can do the job alone and unaided. But in the belief that a great country can show the way to the council table, the United States has determined to assume the leadership.

Tariff making as Americans have known it is not a process which can be expected to increase foreign trade. Its aim has usually been to restrict imports; and if imports are restricted beyond a certain point, foreigners, starved for the dollars with which to buy, drop out of American markets as buyers. Tariff making in the past has been a congressional job. It is not a job Congress has relished. A session in which tariff revision was taking place was always a Roman holiday for lobbyists and petitioners. It was a time when every producer, every manufacturer, no matter how poor his claim, how high his costs, how wasteful his methods, or how small his industry, begged, cajoled, or demanded the added tariff which, he maintained, was necessary to keep his shop open. It mattered not if the process was ill-suited to American labor. It mattered not if the whole Nation was heavily taxed for the sake of a neighborhood. It mattered not if the exclusion of the foreign product lost us better customers abroad than ever the protected industry could offer. Nor could an overworked Congress be expected to give to tariff making that broad guardianship of national as against regional and special interests which the country has a right to demand.

A countless procession of special pleaders crowded the Committee on Ways and Means. Scarce a Congressman escaped pressure from some producer in his constituency. Every temptation existed for logrolling. Once thrown into the House the bill inevitably received scores of amendments which could not, under the circumstances, receive even the hurried consideration which the committee had given the rates in the bill it proposed. In the Senate unlimited amendment still further hammered at the proposed rates. It is a matter of small wonder that the resulting tariff act, instead of giving reasonable protection yet preserving the main channels of foreign trade, represented all too often a complex schedule of ill-considered subsidies.

The reciprocal tariff act with the trade program it has made possible proposes a sounder method of tariff making. It substitutes the national welfare for special favors. It offers fair hearing to every interest but permits no single one to be guiding. It provides, in an atmosphere removed from the inescapable turmoil of the political arena, for a study, by commodity experts and economists, of every tariff rate in whose preservation or change there is a promise of general gain.

The trade-agreements program seeks an increase in the trade of the United States. But it recognizes that trade is a business of both buying and selling, and that if we do not buy we cannot sell. The program begins, then, with the proposal to negotiate a series of commercial trade agreements with friendly countries. With three countries: Cuba, Brazil, and Belgium, agreements have already been concluded. With many others negotiations are in progress. It is altogether worth while for the American people to understand exactly how the American negotiators are equipped best to serve American interests at the council tables around which the terms of agreement are settled. This process has been called "Yankee horse trading." But if in that phrase there is any hint of hasty bargaining, it is proof that the whole program is misunderstood. Follow through, from beginning to end, this new making of tariffs.

It is decided to investigate the desirability of entering negotiations with, let us say, Belgium. The new interdepartmental trade-agreements committee organizes a Belgium committee, on which sit members of the Departments of State, Agriculture, Commerce, the Treasury, of the Tariff Commission, and of the office of the special adviser to the President on foreign trade. All the fact-finding resources of the Department of Commerce, Department of Agriculture, and of the Tariff Commission are put to work on an analysis of our exports to Belgium to determine which of our exports have been most important to American agriculture and industry in years past and which ones have been most grievously handicapped by Belgium tariffs, embargoes, or exchange restrictions. In the Tariff Commission, meanwhile, our imports from Belgium are subjected to an equally close scrutiny. Many things must be determined: How large have imports been in relation to domestic production both in Belgium and in the United States? What is the margin of protection accorded the American industry? How much of this protection is actually needed? Is the American industry strong, virile, successfully filling its place in American economy? For each American industry a patient, accurate survey is made by experts who have for many years studied that particular industry.

Equipped with these studies, the interdepartmental committee is able to determine which rates might be reduced with the clearest margin of gain to American industry, to American workers, and to American consumers, in return for reductions in Belgian duties on exports from the United States.

Meanwhile it has been publicly announced that preparations are in progress to begin negotiations with Belgium, and that all interested persons are invited to present briefs and to appear at public hearings. Two groups now come forward to offer their oral and written testimony. One group consists of those producers of products of farm, forest, and shop who, having lost foreign sales, petition the negotiators to obtain from Belgium the concessions by which they might be won back. The other is composed of all those producers and representatives of communities who fear that concessions to Belgium, which may increase our imports, will affect their interests adversely. It is the purpose of intelligent tariff making to reconcile these two points of view in the general interest. No important industry can be sacrificed for the sake of a few dollars' worth of exports. Nor, on the contrary, can the predictions of doom of an industry, fearing the threat of increased imports, be allowed to block a trade agreement which promises a clear margin of national gain through a revivified export trade. There is as much room for intelligently selective reciprocity between the United States and, say, Canada as between New York and California. There is as great a chance of gain to both regions in the one case as in the other.

Out of this mass of orderly data the contributing agencies of Government can now select two groups of items: One consisting of the concessions which, if granted by Belgium, promise the largest gain for American exports to that country; the other consisting of the concessions which the United States can safely make on the rates of duty on those imports which are supplied chiefly by Belgium.

There have been accusations that this is tariff making by star-chamber proceedings behind closed doors. Much of it is carried on in private, to be sure. Economic analysis of the patient, time-consuming sort which has been described, is not very amusing. It is not newsworthy. It is not done well in open committee under the watchful eye of the well-fed lobbyist. Nor are negotiations with foreign powers successfully started or completed under free-for-all conditions.

There are certain tests by which the American people must determine the validity of a tariff policy—the commercial policy—which their Government offers them. The American people must demand that the leaders of American policy be not swayed by political pressure; that they be not misled by the partial testimony of biased persons. They must be able to expect that no effort has been spared in the search for an accurate solution of the entire problem. They must be able to believe that the policy as it stands is a policy written in the interest of the whole people. The trade-agreements program has that ideal; it is being carried out in that spirit.

Certain irresponsible interests in this country have persisted in portraying the reciprocal trade-agreements program as a process in which a few light-hearted Government officials sit down with representatives of foreign governments and proceed to hand over American business to the foreigner, thus throwing American laborers out of work and destroying American investments. These statements, these implications, these innuendos, are flagrant untruths. I want to make it perfectly clear that the chief objectives of the reciprocal trade-agreement program are to create employment, to protect the interests of American industry and agriculture, to increase rather than decrease the worker's wage and standard of living. And you may rest assured that no proposed trade agreement ever reaches anywhere near adoption unless the best-qualified experts of the Tariff Commission, the Department of Commerce, the Department of Agriculture, the Treasury, and the Department of State, after months of detailed study, are in substantial agreement that those objectives of greater employment and greater return for labor, industry, agriculture, and commerce will be attained.

But there is a larger and a deeper reason for this attempt to liberalize the world's trade than even the material advantages which may reasonably be expected to follow. This larger reason lies in the contribution of widening trade and widening human relations to a better understanding of one another among the peoples of the world. After all, this is fundamental. I remember the morning nearly half a century ago when our class was graduated from Harvard College. We had been invited to breakfast at the home of the president, Charles William Eliot. The breakfast did not amount to much. That was not his long suit. But the words that he spoke to us have always seemed to me, as I have reflected on them in the years that followed, of the bread of the eternal life. He said that from that day forth our paths would fall in countless directions. We would be in different political parties and in different religious bodies and of different vocations, interests, even hobbies; but in one thing we could remain united, and that was in our purpose to belong to the liberal and progressive elements of each and all of these groups in which we found ourselves, and through them and in them to exert our influence for a better world order, a better understanding of the nations to one another, and so strive for the ultimate triumph of those ideals which we believed basic to liberality and progress. My belief is that the trade-bargaining plan upon which the administration is now at work is in line with this great and inspiring mandate.

LIMIT OF EXPENDITURE, REPAIRS OF NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 4760. The gentleman from New York withdraws his objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill to increase the statutory limit of expenditure for repairs or changes to naval vessels.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. There seems to be some confusion because this is a bill on the Consent Calendar. It is a departmental bill. It is made clear by the gentleman from Georgia what it is, and those who challenge bills on this side of the House agree with him that it would be proper to have it brought up at this time. I offer this explanation because there are others here who would like to have their bills in the same category but it cannot be done. This bill is a special bill with a special recommendation.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Will the gentleman explain the effect of the bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Under the statute today, when a ship goes to a navy yard there can be expended only $300,000 in 1 year on repairs. The bill would permit a ship to go to a navy yard and permit an expenditure of $600,000 over a period of 2 years. It is in the interest of economy, because when a ship is in drydock it may develop that more than $300,000 worth of repairs will have to be made. The ship will then have to go back to the fleet and then come back again to the drydock the next year.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Does this in any way affect the west coast ship repair work as compared with the east coast?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. This will probably help the Bremerton Navy Yard in the gentleman's district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to state that there is a difference between this gentleman's bill and the other, because there was an understanding that this bill would be called up. My objection to the bill relative to the appointment of a clerk to a judge was made because I do not believe we ought to have a lot of small bills come up at this late hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The gentleman spoke about a navy yard in the district of the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Oh, the same thing applies to the Boston Navy Yard.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the total appropriation expenditures for repairs or changes to a vessel of the Navy undertaken in a navy yard shall not exceed $600,000 for any two consecutive fiscal years: Provided, That if, during the overhaul of a vessel, the estimated cost for such overhaul having been approved as within the limits herein imposed, accomplishment of essential items will involve expenditures in excess of such limits, the Secretary of the Navy may, and he is hereby authorized, appropriation otherwise being available, to complete the work, and it shall thereupon be his duty to report to the Congress at the next regular session thereof the expenditures from each of the appropriations involving expenditures in excess of the authorized limit for such work: Provided further, That such parts of the act for March 2, 1907, March 3, 1909, and August 29, 1916, contained in section 468, title 5 of the United States Code, as relate to statutory limit of expenditure for repairs or changes on naval vessels, are hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MAKES PLEA FOR FEDERAL AID FOR SCHOOLS

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I attended hearings before the House Committee on Education, which committee has been considering bills proposing Federal aid for weak rural schools throughout the Nation. Among the bills proposing Federal aid for our schools was one introduced by me and is now pending before the Committee on Education. It is known as H. R. 1552.

Hon. Harry Hopkins, Administrator of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, appeared before the House Committee on Education Thursday, March 21, at which time he gave the committee some very valuable information. I was present and heard his statement. I have since read his testimony, and I find that in some instances his statement with reference to rural schools was altogether misleading.

Administrator Hopkins, after telling the committee that all the rural schools in America last year only received $14,583,659 Federal aid, said, and I quote from his testimony, a copy of a portion of which I now hold in my hand:

We believe we were successful in keeping every rural school in America open during that school term.

Feeling that his statement was grossly misleading, I called Mr. Hopkins' hand at that time.

I will read a portion of the stenographic report of the hearing in question:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. With reference to Mr. Hopkins' statement that no rural schools have closed in Oklahoma for lack of funds, I am advised that in one county of my congressional district there are more than 800 school children out of school now. These schools are closed. A number of rural schools have closed in every county in the district I represent in Congress.

Mr. HOPKINS. They are not closed because they do not have the money.

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman is certainly mistaken in that statement.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am sorry, but in Oklahoma we have guaranteed all of the money she needs to keep open every school in Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON. You may have guaranteed that no schools would close. But it is like the fellow in jail. There may not be any law to put him there but he is in jail just the same. I tell you, Mr. Hopkins, many rural schools in Oklahoma have already closed their doors, because they don't have the money to keep going.

Mr. HOPKINS. It is up to the State superintendent of education.

Mr. JOHNSON. In Stephens County, Okla., for example, I am advised that in one consolidated school district, several hundred children are out of school. In Grady County, some 18 rural schools are closed, so I am told, because they do not have the money and cannot get the money on which to operate. The same situation prevails in a majority of the counties in the State of Oklahoma.

I do not want to be unfair to Mr. Hopkins and it is not my purpose to quarrel with him. It is true that he qualified his statement several times before he finished his testimony. The following is one of his qualifications, taken from the official record.

Mr. HOPKINS. I know of my own knowledge of no rural school in America that has actually closed other than a few schools that have a very small number of pupils and in some cases where there are other reasons.

Mr. Speaker, in support of my statement that many rural schools have actually closed in Oklahoma because of insufficient funds on which to operate, I desire to read a telegram from our State superintendent of public instruction, Hon. John Vaughan, addressed to me under date of March 25, 1935. It is as follows:

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., March 25, 1935.

Hon. JED JOHNSON,
Congressman, Washington, D. C.:

One hundred and twenty-seven schools, having 8,600 pupils, actually closed. Four hundred and fifty schools taught 1 to 3 months, hoping to receive pay from some source. State emergency appropriation recently available for 7½ months. One thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight districts, having 6,700 teachers and 250,000 pupils, will close school short of normal term if Federal aid is not available. Applied for $1,600,000 Federal relief January 16. Was allocated $200,000, but none paid to date. This amount is not sufficient.

JOHN VAUGHAN,
State Superintendent.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that I have no disposition to engage in a controversy with Mr. Hopkins. I will go further and say that after hearing him testify I feel that he is reasonably friendly to the cause of education, but I am unwilling for the word to go out to the country that no rural schools have closed because of lack of sufficient funds on which to operate.

I desire also to say to this House and to the country that the tax-burdened, drought-stricken, but honest, patriotic citizens of Oklahoma have shouldered heavy loads of taxation in a desperate effort to keep our schools open. But they have gone their limit. Because of conditions over which they have no control, many of our good citizens are unable to pay their taxes. Many others have lost their homes, and I assume that similar conditions prevail in many other States of the Nation.

This Congress ought to do something about it. Too long have we delayed taking definite, affirmative action. The fact is, this Congress has been in session about 3 months and although schools have been closing almost daily throughout the land since last January, this Congress has made no serious effort to do anything about it.

This is one of the real problems facing the country. We must educate our children now or it will be too late. Many other things classed as emergency for which Congress has doled out millions could well afford to wait rather than our school boys and girls who will be the citizens of tomorrow.

Again I want to call your attention to my bill known as H. R. 4552, proposing what I believe to be a permanent solution of this problem. My bill was drawn in collaboration with the Schoolmasters Club of Grady County, Okla. It also has the endorsement of many of the leading educators as well as other prominent citizens and taxpayers of the State and Nation. I am hopeful that the Committee on Education will report out my bill, or some similar bill that will give immediate and permanent relief to this trying and perplexing problem.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in connection with my remarks a copy of my bill.

A bill to provide for the cooperation of the Federal Government with the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia in maintaining the public-school system, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the Congress hereby declares that the cooperation of the Federal Government with the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia is necessary to prevent the premature closing of elementary and common schools in many communities, thereby resulting in wide-spread unemployment of teachers and depriving millions of children of those educational opportunities necessary for the training of citizens in a democratic government.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized and directed to be made available, out of any funds appropriated for the Federal Emergency Relief Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, such funds as will enable the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia to maintain their regular school terms as maintained during the school year of 1931 and previous years.

SEC. 3. (a) Funds made available under section 2 of this act shall be disbursed in accordance with such rules as may be made by the Administrator of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration.

(b) For the further cooperation of the Federal Government in maintaining the public educational system, the President of the United States is authorized and empowered to include, in the annual Budget, estimates for an appropriation equal to not less than $10 per enumerated school child in the elementary and secondary schools.

(c) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount equal to not less than $10 per enumerated school child in the elementary and secondary schools, to be immediately available for expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior, such amounts to be allocated to each county treasurer in each State, or to some other official designated by the Governor, for the use of the schools.

(d) No school shall receive any of the assistance as provided in subsection (c) of this section unless such school is unable by taxation, or the use of other public funds that may be available, to maintain a standard school for a term of 9 months; and in case the Secretary finds that only part of the assistance provided in subsection (c) of this section is necessary to maintain a standard school for a term of 9 months, then only such part of such assistance shall be provided as is necessary to maintain a standard school for a term of 9 months.

SEC. 4. After the passage and approval of this act all school warrants or other certificates of indebtedness for payments of teachers' salaries or salaries of other employees in the public schools of the United States, regularly issued by the proper officials, and unpayable for the reason that necessary taxes, assessments, or other revenues have not been collected, shall be eligible, when properly endorsed by the payee, for purchase or loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Loans on all such warrants or certificates of indebtedness shall be made at their face value at rates of interest not to exceed 1 percent per annum.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which was ordered to lie on the table:

House Joint Memorial 3

To the President and the Congress of the United States of America:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the State of Arizona, respectfully represents—

The drainage basin, within the United States, of the Santa Cruz and Sonoita Rivers constitutes a large part of southern Arizona, including all or portions of the counties of Santa Cruz, Cochise, Pima, and Maricopa, and contains some of the largest and most important cities of the State.

The watershed of these rivers extends over a large scope of mountainous country on both sides of the international boundary between the United States and Mexico, and at irregular intervals produces floods of great intensity and destructiveness, which cause much loss of property, serious inconvenience to industry and travel, and suffering to families living within the affected area.

The valleys of the Santa Cruz and Sonoita Rivers comprise extensive and fertile agricultural districts, which are highly productive when underground waters are available at reasonable depths and torrential floods do not destroy the crops.

During the past 30 years the damage done by the flood waters of these streams over that portion of southern Arizona from the town of Calabasas, on the Santa Cruz, to where the Santa Cruz, in southern Maricopa County, loses its defined channel and its waters, spreading over the country, enter the Gila River, has been tremendous. This damage has included washed-out bridges, highways, railroads, telegraph, telephone, and power lines, interruption of traffic, loss of crops both by inundation and deposit of silt, and the erosion of thousands of acres of land.

Control of these rivers would be of benefit so great to southern Arizona that it can hardly be estimated, not only by preventing a repetition of costly floods and checking erosion of the rich valley lands but also by raising and stabilizing the underground waters upon which farmers must depend for irrigation.

Comprehensive data, prepared and checked by competent engineers, covering a project for the construction of a dam in the Santa Cruz River at Eagan intake, and another on Sonoita River 5 miles above its confluence with the Santa Cruz, for the purpose of flood control, soil conservation, and improvements of the water table in the Santa Cruz Valley, was prepared in 1933, and in July of that year submitted to the Federal Public Works Administration through the Public Works Advisory Board of Arizona.

This data conclusively shows the practicability and feasibility of the project; the material benefits that would flow from its achievement; and discloses its universal endorsement by political, industrial, professional, and civic groups throughout the area affected.

In addition thereto, it should be pointed out that construction of this project would provide employment over a period of a year and a half for approximately 600 men, while causing a similar number to be employed by private industry in a section where the unemployment situation is particularly acute. Furthermore, the lakes which would be created by the storage of the flood waters of the Santa Cruz and Sonoita Rivers would form a central feature for the establishment of attractive recreational areas.

Wherefore your memorialist prays—

1. That the Public Works Administration be requested to give its most earnest consideration to this constructive project as a worthwhile improvement of general benefit deserving a 100-percent allocation of public-works funds.

2. That any legislation which may hereafter be enacted looking to the continuation of the present public-works policy, or the broadening of its scope, shall be so framed as to include, either specifically or in terms which will render eligible for the allocation of 100-percent Federal funds, the Santa Cruz-Sonoita project for flood control, soil conservation, and water-table improvement.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to include the Territory of Hawaii in the unemployment-insurance legislation

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Territory of Hawaii, eighteenth legislative session of 1935 (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be respectfully urged to include the Territory of Hawaii in the benefits of any unemployment-insurance legislation that may be enacted by the Congress of the United States; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Clerk of the Senate of the Congress of the United States and the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States and the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, favoring the making of sufficient appropriation to establish a monument in memory of the miners of the State of Nevada, in the nature of a home for aged and indigent miners, at some suitable location within the limits of Virginia City, Nev., which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

(See joint resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. PITTMAN, p. 4829.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the City Council of Monterey Park, Calif., favoring the adoption of the Townsend old-age-pension plan, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a petition of a citizen of the State of Arkansas, praying for the enactment of old-age-pension legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Common Council of the City of Manitowoc, Wis., favoring the ratification of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Deep Waterway Treaty, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from Cumberland Council, No. 586, Knights of Columbus, of Cumberland, Md., embodying a resolution adopted by that council protesting against alleged religious persecutions in the Republic of Mexico, and favoring the adoption of the so-called "Borah resolution", being the resolution (S. Res. 70) protesting against religious persecutions by the Government of Mexico, and authorizing an investigation thereof by the Committee on Foreign Relations, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Associated Workers Club and the Cli-Grand Youth Club, both of New York City, N. Y., protesting against the enactment of proposed alien and sedition legislation, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. BARBOUR presented a resolution adopted by the mayor and Common Council of the Borough of Alpha, Warren County, N. J., opposing the enactment of the bill (S. 1807) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, or a similar House bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a petition of sundry citizens, being members of the Waverly Methodist Episcopal Church, of Baltimore, Md., favoring continuance of the investigation of the munitions industry, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from Post No. 1175, by Earl F. Draper, commander, of Atchison; Funston Post, No. 1980, by Charles E. Ireland, commander, of Emporia; Post No. 1225, by Milford C. Langley, commander, of Iola; L. L. Jones Post, No. 1594, by A. L. White, commander, of Junction City; Post No. 56, by Ira M. Wilson, commander, of Leavenworth; Post No. 1362, by William Francis, commander, of Pratt; and Phillip Billard Post, No. 1650, by H. N. Hensley, commander, of Topeka, all of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of the so-called "Patman bill" providing for the immediate cash payment of adjusted-service certificates of World War veterans, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by the American League Against War and Fascism, Jamaica, Long Island, N. Y., protesting against the enactment of proposed alien and sedition legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Lodge No. 325 of the Slovene National Benefit Society, Gowanda, N. Y., favoring the passage of the so-called "Lundeen bill", being the bill (H. R. 2827) to provide for the establishment of unemployment, old-age, and social insurance, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the executive committee of the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association, with offices in New York City, N. Y., protesting against the enactment of pending legislation to establish a 30-hour work week, so far as such legislation may be applied to the dairy industry, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH presented a memorial of officers of sundry packing and provision companies, of Fall River, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of the bill (S. 1807) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Local No. 11 of the Masters, Mates, and Pilots of America, of Boston, Mass., praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. 6591) to amend section 4426 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of Congress approved May 16, 1906, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented memorials of Joseph Leautt, a citizen of the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill 1958, the so-called "Wagner labor relations bill", and Senate bill 87, the so-called "Black 30-hour work week bill", which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by members of Local Union No. 43, United Textile Workers of America, Adams, Mass., favoring extension of the National Industrial Recovery Act, and also the enactment of certain pending labor legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the executive board of Branch No. 112, Workmen's Sick and Death Benefit Fund of the United States of America, Holyoke, Mass., favoring the passage of the so-called "Lundeen bill", being the bill (H. R. 2827) to provide for the establishment of unemployment, old-age, and social insurance, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by a conference of the Governor and Council, representatives of the fishing and allied interests, and citizens of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, favoring the imposition of such tariff duties and other limitations as will exclude the fish products of other countries where health, wage, and other standards are disregarded, thereby rendering it impossible for Americans to compete, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Wilbraham, Mass., remonstrating against enactment at the present session of Congress of legislation providing for the immediate cash payment of adjusted-service certificates of World War veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Board of Directors of the New Bedford (Mass.) Board of Commerce, favoring the enactment of legislation restricting the importation of any manufactured article from any country in a greater volume than the average annual volume of importation of that article from such country during the years 1930–34, inclusive, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Beverly, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation adopting the so-called "national insurance plan", which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Local Union No. 12, United Association of Journeymen Plumbers and Steamfitters, of Boston, Mass., praying for the passage of Senate bill 87, the so-called "Black 30-hour work week bill", which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from the Massachusetts Society of Master Painters and Decorators, Inc., Allston, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill 87, being the so-called "Black 30-hour work week bill", which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. REYNOLDS presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Carolina, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

A joint resolution requesting Congress to enact legislation to further regulate the importation of foreign-made textile fabrics

Whereas the textile industry in the United States is subjected to ruinous competition by reason of increasing importation of foreign-made textile fabrics: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That—

SECTION 1. That the Congress of the United States be urged to enact legislation which will restrict the importation into this country of any textile article from any country in a greater volume than the average annual volume of importation of that article from such country during the 5 years, 1930–34, inclusive.

SEC. 2. That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives in Congress from the State of North Carolina with the request that they support such legislation.

SEC. 3. That this resolution shall be in force from and after its ratification.

Mr. PITTMAN presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Assembly joint resolution memorializing Congress to enlarge the Dixie National Forest and create a game preserve therein

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of Nevada, That the Congress of the United States make provisions for the enlargement of the Dixie National Forest, situated in Clark County, Nev., by including therein additional lands adjacent thereto for the purpose of creating a game preservation for the propagation and preservation of deer, elk, and other game animals, or game birds therein, and for the purpose of establishing a public park and playground therein; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be required to transmit duly certified copies of this resolution to each of our Senators in the United States Senate and to our Representative in Congress.

Mr. PITTMAN also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on the Library:

Senate joint resolution memorializing Congress to erect a suitable memorial to the memory of the pioneer miners of Virginia City in the nature of a home for aged miners

Whereas it has been indicated that the Congress of the United States is contemplating the erection of a monument to the memory of the pioneer miners of Nevada, at Virginia City, at a cost of $70,000; and

Whereas the thought of remembrance to those men is a worthy one; and

Whereas it is understood that the proposed memorial is to be a massive monument, intended to withstand the ravages of time for centuries to come; and

Whereas we feel that the most appropriate and enduring monument that could be erected to the memory of those thousands of men who sacrificed their health delving in the bowels of the earth, reaping an incurable disease and shortening their lives, that wealth might be poured into the Nation's lap in aid of the preservation of the United States Government when it was threatened with disruption, would be the erection of a suitable home for those miners who labored and lost: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the State of Nevada, That Congress be memorialized to make an appropriation sufficient for the purpose of establishing a suitable monument in memory of the miners of the State of Nevada (who gave so much and received so little) in the nature of a home for aged and indigent miners at some suitable location within the limits of Virginia City; and be it further

Resolved, That duly certified copies of these resolutions be transmitted by the secretary of state to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each of our Senators, and our Representative in Congress.

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 19) authorizing the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives to have printed for its use additional copies of the hearings on the bill (H. R. 4120) to alleviate the hazards of old age, unemployment, illness, and dependency, to establish a social insurance board in the Department of Labor to raise revenue, and for other purposes, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BURKE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1589) authorizing the purchase of United States Supreme Court Decisions and Digest, reported it without amendment.

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5577) to provide for aviation cadets in the Naval Reserve and Marine Corps Reserve, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 402) thereon.

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, to which was referred the bill (S. 946) to amend sections 3 and 4 of the act of July 3, 1930, entitled "An act for the rehabilitation of the Bitter Root irrigation project, Montana", reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 403) thereon.

HEARINGS ON SOCIAL-SECURITY BILL

Mr. HAYDEN. From the Committee on Printing I report back favorably, without amendment, House Concurrent Resolution 19, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 19) was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, empowered to have printed for its use 2,000 copies of the hearings held before said committee relative to the bill (H. R. 4120) to alleviate the hazards of old age, unemployment, illness, and dependency, to establish a social insurance board in the Department of Labor to raise revenue, and for other purposes, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mr. LONERGAN (for Mrs. CARAWAY), from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on today, April 2, 1935, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 404. An act to provide for the acquisition of land in the District of Columbia in excess of that required for public projects and improvements, and for other purposes;

S. 488. An act for the relief of Michael Ilitz;

S. 747. An act for the relief of Joe G. Baker; and

S. 1856. An act for the relief of Arthur Smith.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 2470) to amend section 36 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

A bill (S. 2471) to amend section 80 of chapter 9 of an act to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(Mr. LONG introduced Senate bill 2472, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. REYNOLDS:

A bill (S. 2473) for the relief of Capt. Percy Wright Foote, United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. McGILL:

A bill (S. 2474) granting a pension to Dave Perry; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 2475) authorizing the appointment and retirement of David A. Henkes as a captain, United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TRUMAN:

A bill (S. 2476) granting a pension to G. E. Sandbach;

A bill (S. 2477) granting a pension to Mary Hart (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 2478) granting a pension to Ada Hooker (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 2479) to place George K. Shuler on the retired list of the United States Marine Corps; and

A bill (S. 2480) for the relief of Mrs. Hugh J. Finn (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. GUFFEY:

A bill (S. 2481) to stabilize the bituminous-coal-mining industry and promote its interstate commerce; to provide for cooperative marketing of bituminous coal; to levy a tax on bituminous coal and provide for a draw-back under certain conditions; to declare the production, distribution, and use of bituminous coal to be affected with a national public interest; to conserve the bituminous-coal resources of the United States and to establish a national bituminous-coal reserve; to provide for the general welfare; and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma (by request):

A bill (S. 2482) relating to the tribal and individual affairs of the Osage Indians of Oklahoma; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 2483) to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes", approved May 22, 1920; to the Committee on Civil Service.

A bill (S. 2484) to amend the military record of William E. Bennett, Jr.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

A bill (S. 2485) amending section 112 of the United States Code, Annotated (book 28, subtitle "Civil suits; where to be brought"); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WHEELER:

A bill (S. 2486) for the relief of Moses White Horse; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BAILEY:

A bill (S. 2487) for the relief of the Western Electric Co., Inc.; and

A bill (S. 2488) for the relief of the widows of an inspector and certain special agents of the Division of Investigation, Department of Justice, killed in line of duty; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. COSTIGAN:

A bill (S. 2489) to amend the laws relating to the Postal Savings Depository System; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

A bill (S. 2490) to improve the health of the people of Puerto Rico by providing for an adequate meat supply; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. WHEELER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 96) to carry out the intention of Congress with reference to the claims of the Crow Tribe of Indians of Montana and any band thereof against the United States; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

FRANCES AGRAMONTE

Mr. LONG. I have in my hand a bill which I desire to introduce. A similar bill has passed the Senate twice unanimously after having been considered by the committee, but somehow or other we cannot get it passed by the House. It is a bill to give the widow of Dr. Aristides Agramonte, a member of the Yellow Fever, or Reed, Commission, the pension which was granted to him. Similar action has been taken in the case of widows of the other deceased members of that commission. I desire to introduce the bill, and I should like to ask unanimous consent of the Senate to waive the usual parliamentary procedure, although, if necessary, I have no objection to the bill going to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think perhaps the Senator had better introduce the bill—I have no objection to its introduction—and then let it take its regular course.

Mr. LONG. Very well, I introduce the bill and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and referred as indicated by the Senator from Louisiana.

The bill (S. 2472) to pay an annuity to Frances Agramonte, the widow of Dr. Aristides Agramonte, member of the Yellow Fever Commission, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles and referred, as indicated below:

H. R. 59. An act to create a national memorial military park at and in the vicinity of Kennesaw Mountain in the State of Georgia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 2045. An act to set aside certain lands for the Leech Lake Band of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. R. 2739. An act to extend further time for naturalization to alien veterans of the World War under the act approved May 25, 1932 (47 Stat. 165), to extend the same privileges to certain veterans of countries allied with the United States during the World War, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Immigration.

H. R. 4760. An act to increase the statutory limit of expenditure for repairs or changes to naval vessels; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

H. R. 3612. An act to provide for adjusting the compensation of post-office inspectors and inspectors in charge to correspond to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; and

H. R. 5540. An act extending the period during which no demurrage is charged on collect-on-delivery parcels and excepting the imposition of demurrage charged on collect-on-delivery parcels exchanged between the continental and island possessions; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

H. R. 6290. An act to authorize acquisition of land to provide appropriate means of access to the post-office building at Jonesboro, Ark.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

H. R. 6323. An act to provide for the custody of Federal proclamations, orders, regulations, notices, and other documents, and for the prompt and uniform printing and distribution thereof; and

H. J. Res. 146. Joint resolution to authorize the several States to negotiate compacts or agreements to promote greater uniformity in the laws of such States affecting labor and industries; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 7054. An act to provide for the protection of land resources against soil erosion, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

H. J. Res. 147. Joint resolution authorizing the erection of a monument to Grover Cleveland in Washington, D. C.; to the Committee on the Library.

MONOPOLY—ARTICLE BY WALTER LIPPMANN

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article on Monopoly, by Mr. Walter Lippmann, and a letter from Mr. Matthew Woll, having reference to the article of Mr. Lippmann.

There being no objection, the article and letter were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune]

TODAY AND TOMORROW

By Walter Lippmann

MONOPOLY

Having disposed of the work-relief bill, much the most important business before Congress is to determine the future of N. R. A. The temper of Congress was made plain last week when, on a motion by Senator BORAH to restore the antitrust laws, there was a certain majority in sight to attack the monopolistic tendency of N. R. A.

As originally conceived by the administration, the N. R. A. was to have been an experiment in semivoluntary cooperation. The theory was that the majority of business men in an industry should speak for all the business men in the industry, that the majority among employees should speak for all the employees, that the Government should speak for the "public"—that is to say, for everyone else. It was hoped that these three representatives would make laws for the conduct of each industry that would promote recovery, end many ancient social evils, and stabilize industry for the future.

It was a pretty idea and at first almost everyone subscribed to it.

Today the N. R. A. has lost its hold on the popular imagination. It is fiercely challenged from many quarters. It is defended with diffidence by its remaining supporters. The main reason for this change of public feeling is not to be found, I believe, in the horrible examples of petty tyranny and bureaucratic blundering which are cited by the critics. The people would forgive them readily if they believed that the chief promises of N. R. A. were being fulfilled. But while the claim has been made by N. R. A. spokesmen that it is responsible for reemploying several million men, there are few if any impartial observers who think there is any justification for this claim. It would be easier, in fact, to make a plausible argument that the recovery of employment came before N. R. A. took hold and has proceeded a little in spite of it and haltingly because of it.

It is interesting to ask ourselves why the experiment in self-government for industry has worked so badly. The essential reason, it seems to me, is that the men who represent industry, labor, and the administration, in carrying out the experiment were all of them beguiled and bamboozled by the same fallacy. The N. R. A. control of industry has gone wrong because the business executives, the labor leaders, and the officials had a fundamentally wrong conception of what to do with their power. Unintentionally, of course, but none the less effectively, they have used their power to depress trade and to prevent employment.

Among the business executives the basic fallacy took the form of attempting to deal with cut-throat competition by holding up prices. Using many different schemes, the codes, which the business men wrote, have been based in most instances on the principle that it is better to sell fewer goods at a high price than more goods at a lower price. Among the labor leaders who had a hand in the N. R. A. this same basic fallacy took the form of attempting to increase purchasing power by raising the hourly price of labor. Like the N. R. A. business executives, the A. F. of L. executives have preferred a small volume of employment at a high hourly rate to more employment, and therefore more income, at a lower hourly rate.

As for the officials, they consented to and even encouraged both fallacies. They approved wage policies which raised hourly rates, and therefore restricted employment. They imagined that they were fighting cut-throat competition and the sweating of labor when, in fact, they were making it as difficult as possible for business to sell its products and to reemploy labor to produce its products.

The industrial plant that could not find a market at the high prices is a dead weight which obstructs the revival of investment. The labor which cannot be employed because unit prices of goods and hourly rates of wages are too high is living on its savings or is on the relief roll.

The fixing of a price which restricts the sale of goods or of labor is the essence of monopoly. In attacking monopoly the Senators have at least located the evil. It must be said, however, that men like Senator BORAH and Senator MCCARRAN, who attack monopolistic price fixing and yet vote to sustain monopolistic wage fixing, are blind in one eye. Those who attack monopolistic wage fixing but are silent about price fixing in, let us say, for example, steel and cement, are blind in the other eye. The basic evil of N. R. A. has been not that it controlled industry but that it controlled it on the monopolistic principle of restricting production and employment in order to support high unit prices and high hourly rates.

The decision of the President to refuse the "prevailing wage" for the unemployed was a recognition on his part that an excessively high hourly rate of wages makes unemployment inevitable. The feeling in Congress that the antitrust laws must be restored in order to break up monopoly prices is a recognition on their part that excessively high unit prices prolong the depression. But until it is generally recognized that the monopoly principle, both in prices and in wages, is the essential evil, the understanding will not exist to legislate wisely about the N. R. A.

Apart from mere stop-gap legislation which might evade and postpone the issue, the real question is whether a system of representative industrial control can be established and administered to do the very opposite of what N. R. A. has done; that is, to promote trade and employment by adapting prices and wages to the market instead of restricting the market by maintaining prices and wages at a high monopolistic level. The traditional view from the time of Adam Smith has been that combinations of producers will inevitably act as monopolists. The experience of N. R. A. confirms that view. Since, however, there are undoubted advantages in combination, the question is whether modern statesmen have the wit and wisdom to devise a method of control which will permit combinations and yet prevent them from acting as monopolists. No one in authority has yet, I believe, come forward with a policy of that sort. But unless one is produced, the movement to restore the antitrust laws will become irresistible.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
New York, N. Y., March 28, 1935.

Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BORAH: You have doubtless seen Walter Lippmann's article in the New York Herald Tribune in which he invites you to join in the campaign for lower wages, of which he is a leading spokesman. It is scarcely possible that this campaign will succeed—provided liberals and progressives give it the attention it deserves—for it is formidable and dangerous, supported not only by Lippmann and Mark Sullivan but by Professor Moley in Today and by leading industrialists, like President Sloan, of General Motors, and many others.

Fortunately, both the Democratic and Republican platforms came out explicitly for high wages so that Lippmann's effort to line up the political opposition and the critics of the N. R. A. and the new deal against high wages should be doomed to failure. But the attempt is bold and clever and, it seems to me, merits your attention.

Lippmann says that "men like Senator BORAH and Senator MCCARRAN, who attack monopolistic price fixing and yet vote to sustain monopolistic wage fixing are blind in one eye."

Lippmann then proceeds to the claim that the lower wages campaign has already won its first battle. He says that the clause demanding the "prevailing rate of wages" on Government relief was defeated because of the recognition that "excessively high hourly wage rates make unemployment inevitable."

As you are aware, there was no argument on the Senate floor that wage rates in private industry were too high. On the contrary, both sides argued that wages in private industry should not be reduced, and the whole question was whether lower pay in Government relief work would or would not have that effect. You and Senator MCCARRAN and others contended that it would, President Roosevelt and his supporters that it would not.

Lippmann is plausible, and doubtless many will agree that the first battle for lower wages has been won. In any event, the big fight is still ahead. And I trust you will make it clear that there is nothing in common between the raising of real wages, as one of the foundations of recovery which you favor, and monopolistic price fixing, which you oppose.

Lippmann speaks of "the sale of goods or labor", harking back to the theory that "labor is a commodity", which was publicly abandoned 20 years ago in the Clayton Act. This commodity theory of labor goes back to the days of Adam Smith, in 1776, and has long since outlived its usefulness, if ever it possessed any such attributes. Even in this Lippmann cannot lay claim to originality, but rather to an antiquarian habit of economic thinking.

"The fixing of a price which restricts the sale of goods or labor", says Lippmann, "is the essence of monopoly." This may be true of prices. To apply it to labor is to furnish a weapon to the opponents of every increase of wages by collective bargain or by law—or even by the voluntary action of employers. For Lippmann contends that when officials "raised hourly wage rates" they "therefore restricted employment." That is, any interference whatever with the so-called "natural law" of supply and demand as to labor spells retrogression.

I am not so much concerned with Lippmann's reversion to laissez faire as I am with his specific pronouncement that higher wages mean less employment. In a letter to me, which I recently published, Henry Ford shows that higher wages should not mean less employment, even in the industry offering them. But even assuming that there are certain markets which could not be held, some employment that would not be forthcoming, except at low wages, such wages are uneconomic from the national standpoint, for they mean a decrease of purchasing power.

What is so often forgotten is that what the advocates of the high-wage principle propose is wages raised to the practicable maximum not in a single industry, but in all industries. So that each single industry must put down on its balance sheet the vastly increased demand coming from the higher wages in other industries.

The low-wage campaign is formidable because of its wide-spread support. It is dangerous because of the new and plausible slogan under which it is conducted. Labor, we are told, should ask not for higher hourly or daily wages, as hitherto throughout all history, but only for a higher annual income. If labor is to obtain a higher income, they say, there must be more employment, and to secure more employment labor must accept a lower wage. But this would not be a popular way to put it. A plea for lower wages would get little hearing in a country accustomed for generations to the high-wage doctrine. So they say they are for a lower hourly wage rate only, but for a higher annual wage. This is the first time we have heard of this "annual wage" and it will bear a little analysis.

Certainly labor is interested in a high annual wage, in steady employment, as well as high hourly or daily wages. But it has never before been told it must choose between a higher hourly wage or more employment.

As to the desirability of more employment, there is no disagreement in any quarter. The only question has been, Are the highest practicable wages, by which has always been meant wage rates per hour or day, desirable or not? And nearly all our leading statesmen, like Hoover and Roosevelt, and many of our leading industrialists, like Ford, have said that such high wages were desirable and are entirely possible.

So that when Lippmann and others speak for a yearly wage, they are simply using a new and misunderstood phrase to cover their proposal that labor should be forced to accept lower wages in return for increased employment.

No low-wage advocate has thus far descended to the Lippmann position that labor must again be placed on the auction block and its services sold to the lowest bidder. But that is the logical deduction of his antiquated theory.

Furthermore, it is apparent that Mr. Lippmann would seek to place you in a contradictory position because of your advocacy of the "prevailing wage" maintained by law and your opposition to monopolistic price fixing of commodities. His criticism can find validity only on the assumption that he favors "monopolistic price fixing", but does not believe in the prevailing wage and would lower the wage rates and wages of all wage earners in private as well as public employment.

Certainly it is well that he has so clearly and definitely indicated his attitude on this important question. It is also clearly evident that this movement for low wages, in which Lippmann has joined, has nothing whatever in common with your effort against monopoly prices by keeping competition alive wherever that is practicable and by assuring effective governmental regulation where it is not.

As this movement for lower wages is assuming threatening proportions, I hope you will let me know as soon as convenient whether I am correct in my assumptions as to your attitude toward it.

Sincerely yours,

MATTHEW WOLL.

SUPREME COURT TEST OF CONSTITUTIONALITY OF N. I. R. A.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Philadelphia Inquirer entitled "Let the Supreme Court Try N. R. A."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer, Apr. 2, 1935]

LET THE SUPREME COURT TRY N. R. A.

When Senator PAT HARRISON, in a surprise movement, introduced his N. R. A. bill the other day he must have known his action would immediately invite hostile criticism. It wasn't a finished measure approved by a majority of the Finance Committee, but one that contained the views of the President. He was wise in announcing that it would be subject to changes. It will be. But why attempt serious legislation until the committee and Congress know just where they stand? For they don't know now. Neither does the President nor the Department of Justice. And the Department declines to put to a test the question of constitutionality.

The Attorney General had prepared to go before the Supreme Court with the Belcher lumber case, which had received the attention of a Federal judge in the northern district of Alabama. The lumber code had been declared by him unconstitutional. From among several decisions the Department of Justice had picked this one as comprehensively presenting the direct issue. Yet on the eve of the argument it served notice of withdrawal.

It is useless to attempt to explain this amazing retreat. It is quite generally regarded as a confession of weakness. It inspired Senator HASTINGS, Republican, of Delaware, and Senator CLARK, Democrat, of Missouri, to frame a resolution urging the Department to press forward to a definite test. It drew the fire of Senator BORAH, who takes it for granted that the Attorney General has arrived at the conclusion that N. R. A. is not constitutional and that the Harrison bill admits it, in that it attempts to avoid some of the defects by the use of new phrases. Nevertheless, "the matter of the delegation of power and the question of Federal interference with State and intrastate trade are both present in the new bill."

They are. And so is price fixing. There are price-control devices intended to get around the antitrust laws. "If", avers the Liberty League, "liberties of citizens have been infringed upon in violation of the Constitution, they are entitled to such protection as may be afforded by a decision of our highest court." And C. L. Bardo, president of the Manufacturers' Association, asserts that the Department's policy of delay must be embarrassing to conscientious legislators.

In addition to the 18 Federal court decisions cited by Mr. Bardo as denying the power of Congress to regulate local operations, only a day or two ago a ruling in Grand Rapids, Mich., declared illegal the application of N. R. A. to a local coal dealer, and Circuit Court Judge Hall at Bloomington, Ill., pronounced inoperative the N. R. A. automobile code as applied in that State and ruled invalid the State recovery act. On Saturday Federal District Judge Symes, in Colorado, ruled that the Federal Government had no right to interfere with the business of a motion-picture exhibitor.

But opinions have gone beyond State boundaries. This same Judge Symes expressed the opinion that the whole proposition of N. R. A. codes is unconstitutional. Federal Judge Nields, in the Weirton Steel case, decreed that the manufacturing operations of the company in its various plants do not constitute interstate commerce. Judge Dawson, in Kentucky, declared that the citizens of this country have a right to conduct their business without unconstitutional interference or regulation by governmental authority. Judge Fake, at Newark, N. J., held that the constitutional provision giving Congress authority over interstate commerce does not apply to manufacture, even if the manufactured articles find their way into interstate commerce.

Decisions in plenitude. Yet the Government declines to go before the Supreme Court and ascertain of what its powers consist. What is its object? To force a revised N. R. A. on the country in the hope that in some way it will get by? Doesn't it realize that by pursuing such a course it is adding to uncertainty and demoralizing, instead of encouraging, business and industry?

BUREAUCRACY IN GOVERNMENT—ADDRESS BY JONATHAN BOURNE, JR.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, my attention has been called to a very remarkable address delivered in 1916 by the Honorable Jonathan Bourne, Jr., formerly a distinguished Member of this body. His address was delivered before the Traffic Club of New York and so truly prophesied the present-day drift toward concentration of power in the executive branch of the Government, so clearly pictured the spirit of unrestrained bureaucracy which then had its beginning, and which subsequently has been enormously developed, and so ably sets forth a formula for combating abuses of bureaucracy and the tendency toward concentration of powers of government in the Executive that it is worthy of publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Senator Bourne's views will be widely approved. I ask unanimous consent that the address may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Traffic Club of New York, in all organized society there are three great forces, each struggling for supremacy—the police force (the Government), the religious force, and the commercial force, consisting of labor and capital. Successful government must secure a correlation in the operation of these three forces, but with directorial supremacy of the police force.

In the past it has been deemed popular by a few self-constituted leaders to attack what is known as "big business." Efforts have been made to array small business men and people not engaged in what is commonly called "business" against big business. In all respect and courtesy I believe that big business men themselves are primarily to blame for this because of their failure to perform their duty as citizens and to take a direct personal interest in government and politics. The greater the amount of wealth an individual represents, the greater his responsibility as a citizen, the greater his duty as a citizen, and the greater his need to take an active part in government and politics.

The time has come in my opinion when it is absolutely necessary for you to take an active part in Government and politics, if we are to prevent the ship of state from drifting on the rocks, which in my judgment threaten her.

The growth of bureaucracy incident to concentration of power in the Chief Executive and the administrative departments is a grave menace to the future welfare of this Republic. The desideratum of all government should be the protection of its citizens and only such restraint of individual action as is necessary to insure the desired protection of all its citizens. The limitation of the individual restraint should be clearly expressed by law and not left to the whim or fancy of an executive, a commission, a department, or a bureau. A government of rule and regulation, a bureaucratic government such as ours is rapidly trending toward, cannot long endure.

Government should protect not harass, encourage not discourage honest initiative and industry in every citizen.

Centralization of population, business, and government is an inevitable result of civilization, but realization of that change in conditions should bring recognition of the desirability of succinctly prescribing by law, rather than leaving to bureaucratic rule, the scope of individual activities. Best results accrue where the law states specifically what the individuals making up society can, cannot, and must do, with certain punishment of those who fail to comply with legal requirements.

Distribution, as distinguished from centralization of power, is an essential of true and lasting popular and representative government. Centralization leads to dictatorship, with occasional changes in personnel, it is true, but dictatorship nevertheless. Centralization of power, in a Federal Government such as ours, means bureaucracy—constantly increasing acquisition of power by national officers and corresponding diminution of power in State and local authorities. Centralization places the government further and further from the people—makes it less and less responsive to popular will. Eventually centralization results in government by a very limited number, consequent misuse, either from intention or ignorance, of power thus acquired, and ultimately a governmental upheaval which overthrows the dictator, with all the evils that precede and follow the reconstruction.

For some years we have been drifting rapidly toward centralization of governing power. The States have given more and more scope to National Government. Congress has yielded more and more of its legislative power to administrative departments. Thus government has drifted further and further from the governed and is gradually slipping from the hands of Members of the legislative branch—the only branch chosen directly by the people.

In early stages of a movement of this kind, the dangers incident to the change are not readily apparent. In fact, public opinion is likely to favor the transformation, for those officials who are securing and desire to secure more power take pains to set forth the advantages of centralization without calling attention to evils and dangers. They attribute most of the present ills of government to the lack of centralization, and people are led to believe that the nearest approach to Utopia lies through concentration of power in a centralized National Government.

Influenced by that vanity, egotism, and ambition which are inherent in human nature, administrative officers believe, many honestly, no doubt, that the evils of our social organization can be cured most certainly and most quickly by investing them with more power over the acts and interests of the people. They are all active in spreading the doctrine of centralized power, while few private citizens take time or go to the trouble to observe resultant present evils or future dangers and warn the people of the certain outcome if the movement goes unchecked.

Those who believe in centralized government are able to gain publicity for their ideas through all avenues of official activity. They boast of achievements of bureaucracy but conceal its failures and defects. The private citizen has neither the extended information necessary to a satisfactory reply to officialdom's pronouncements nor the means of securing a hearing before the entire American public.

We have a Government divided by the Constitution into three coordinate branches—legislative, executive, and judicial. The Constitution authorizes the President to participate in legislative affairs in two respects—to communicate to Congress information and suggestions regarding the public welfare and to veto any bill passed by Congress. That plan of division of power was adopted after the most careful study, and its wisdom has been established by experience. It was designed to prevent development of such centralized power as would amount to dictatorship and endanger the liberty of the people.

I believe our form of government the best thus far evolved. My desire is to vitalize and secure the best possible cooperation among the three constitutionally provided branches. Congress, consisting of over 500 individuals, selected from every portion of our country and from every walk of life, is better qualified to represent correctly the general welfare of the Nation as a whole than any President, court, department, or bureau, both because it is composed of more individuals and because of legislative training and practical business experience. Hence Congress should be the dominant branch and all legislation should originate in and be enacted, in reality as well as in name, by that branch of our Government.

But we have seen a steady increase in Executive and administrative power and constant diminution of power in the two Houses of Congress.

Control over Federal appointments is the chief means by which Executive power has grown. One man, sitting in the White House, has the initial voice in making 11,000 appointments in the Government civil service. This is exclusive of appointments in the Army and Navy.

How these appointments can be and are used to influence Congress will be readily apparent. The 48 States are represented in Congress by 96 Senators and 435 Representatives. Each of these 531 Members of the legislative body wishes to secure the appointment of some of his constituents—his personal and political friends—to positions in the Government service. Those friends feel that as citizens of the Republic they have a right to consideration as applicants for positions in the Government service and that their Senators and Congressmen, who are personally acquainted with them and know their qualifications, may properly present their claims for the favorable action of the appointing power. This is particularly true in the case of Senators, for the Constitution expressly provides that unless otherwise provided by law official appointments shall be made upon the advice and with the consent of the Senate.

The fact that one man in the White House has the initiative in making appointments, while participation in selections is divided among 531 Members of Congress, is what gives the President his enormous power. Since he deals with each Member of Congress separately, he has 531 times as much power as any one of them, and, therefore, approximately 531 times as much power as all, unless the Members should determine to act in unison.

The Senator or Representative not only feels that it is his duty and right to present and urge the applications of his constituents but he naturally feels a desire to reward his political friends and demonstrate that he has influence at the National Capital. By such means he gains or holds prestige at home.

That the use of patronage as a means of distributing political rewards is an evil, whether used by either the President or Members of Congress, cannot be denied; but it may be reasonably asserted that if the 11,000 Federal positions are to be used for the maintenance of political organizations or machines, it is better for the country that they be used to maintain 531 small organizations of comparatively little power than for the maintenance of 1 enormous national political machine with power beyond the comprehension of the framers of our Constitution.

But politics is a very practical affair, and most men choose to "play the game" in the easiest way rather than subject themselves to the more disagreeable and difficult method of defying the Executive and appealing to their constituents entirely upon broad principles of governmental policy. Drifting along the line of least resistance, men are inclined to acquiesce quietly in the wishes of the Executive on legislative matters rather than engage in contests sure to cost them participation in patronage, which is of practical value to them at home.

The present system of making Federal appointments discourages independent thought, speech, and action and tends to make Congress subservient. It punishes the Member of Congress who thinks for himself and dares to assert opinions differing from those entertained by the President. It rewards the man who serves chiefly as an echo of the White House.

The first essential of a free people is absolute freedom of thought, speech, and action. No legislative body can be truly deliberative, if some of its members are influenced by considerations other than the welfare of the Nation. When ulterior influences are at work, Congress, to a corresponding degree, is deprived of its desired character as a deliberative body.

It is better that men be encouraged to assert their real opinions, even though wrong, than that individual expression be suppressed. Any instrumentality which has the effect of suppressing speech, because believed by one individual to be erroneous, will eventually do great harm by silencing the voice of truth.

It should always be the insistent policy of the American people that every man who has ideas for the promotion of the common welfare, shall have freedom to express his views. Particularly should this be true of those chosen to make laws for the people of the United States. It is no more important to prevent common bribery and physical force than to prevent the more sinister and insidious evil of that form of influence exerted through distribution of Federal patronage.

Ordinarily the exchange of Federal appointments for legislative support does not reach a condition of open barter and trade. There is maintained a sort of gentlemen's understanding—a friendly relation that continues so long as the Senator or Congressman does not effectively oppose or seriously endanger any measure the Executive earnestly desires him to support. Failure of the Member of the legislative branch of Government to acquiesce in the wishes of the Executive in any important particular results in unfriendliness and a consequent discontinuance of favors in the distribution of Federal patronage.

The Senator or Congressman who dares to incur the displeasure of an Executive soon finds he has increased his labors and diminished his effectiveness as a representative of the people of his State. While justice may not be denied his constituents because they appeal through him, yet he will not be accorded special attention and favors that would await him if he were in entire accord with the administration.

But this matter of exchange of Federal patronage for votes in Congress has not always been a mere matter of unexpressed understanding. The American people will not and should not forget the famous letter written by the private secretary of President Taft, in which it was stated that "the President felt it to be his duty to the party and to the country to withhold Federal patronage from certain Senators and Congressmen who seemed to be in opposition to the administration's efforts to carry out the promises of the party platform."

Nothing was left to the judgment of the Member of Congress. What constituted a fulfillment of party pledges was determined by the President. Members of the legislative branch of government who differed in their views as to what constituted performance of promises were punished by refusal of participation in the distribution of the rewards of politics. Those who could or did agree with the President were given their reward. There was absolute frankness about it. What other Presidents have done silently was expressly admitted in a letter which President Taft's Secretary said the President had directed him to write.

But however frank President Taft may have been, the evidence of Executive dictatorship over legislation was little more obvious than during the present administration, when we saw members of the majority party in both Houses reverse their attitude on such an important question as Panama Canal tolls in response to orders from the White House and in direct violation of pledges. It seems something more than a coincidence that the few independent Democrats who exercise their right to vote their own opinions find their recommendations as to Federal appointments either held in abeyance or entirely ignored.

It is unpleasant to reflect upon incidents of this sordid sort. It is disagreeable to know that what is designed to be representative government can be conducted in any such manner. It injures the pride of an American citizen to admit that a supposedly coordinate branch of government will passively submit to the continuance of such a power as this.

But we deceive no one but ourselves by shutting our eyes to facts. To refuse to look upon the disgraceful record does not remove the stain. To remain silent while the means and incentive for repetition of this method of conducting legislative business continues, injures all citizens of the United States. Though realizing that I shall be criticized and condemned for recalling tangible evidence of a system of legislative dictatorship that has existed to a greater or less extent for many years, I am willing, nevertheless, to suffer the displeasure of those of my fellow citizens who disapprove my course, if I can thereby hasten the time when the possibility of such methods shall be removed.

But control over legislation by the Executive is not the only evil of centralization of power incident to patronage. By virtue of his appointing power, the President builds an enormous personal and political organization through which he dominates the national convention of his party. If I were addressing an audience of politicians, it would be unnecessary to point out the manner in which this political machine is constructed, but to a group of business men who pay too little attention to the affairs of their Government a brief review of methods employed by a national administration may be worth while. The methods are practically the same, regardless of the party in power, but since the only demonstrations in recent years have been by Republican administrations, I direct your attention to them. In 1908, through his power of appointment of Federal officeholders, the President gained control of the party organizations in the Southern States, where Republicans are never elected, and in the Territories, Districts, and insular possessions, where no national election is had but from which delegates are sent to the national convention. Because of the lack of local political interest, the party organization and management is left to the Federal officeholders, who are the only persons who take an active interest in party affairs.

The Republican National Committee consists of 53 members, 1 from each State, Territory, District, and insular possession. The Territory of Alaska, with no electoral vote and but 2 delegates in the convention, has the same representation and power in the national committee as the great State of New York, with 39 electoral votes and 78 delegates. The committee elects its own chairman and perfects its organization. It decides on place and time of convention. It recommends how many delegates shall be admitted from each State and Territory, how the delegates and alternates shall be chosen in the various States, how the delegates from Territories shall be selected, and recommends who shall serve as temporary chairman of the national convention. The chairman of the national committee calls the convention to order and generally directs the campaign.

In the Republican National Convention committees on credentials, permanent organization, and resolutions are composed of one delegate from each State and Territory. Each State selects its own representative on these committees and offers them to the convention. The committee on permanent organization recommends the permanent chairman and confirms the other officers who are recommended by the national committee. Control of the national committee by the administration gives tremendous power, which is made absolute if combined with control of the committee on credentials. If the operators of the machine find that, even with the advantage of control of delegations from the Democratic States and the Territories, they will not have enough votes in the convention to control its action, contesting delegations will appear from a number of States, by seating some of which the necessary additional strength may be secured.

National conventions are not representative of the wishes of the members of the party who are depended upon to cast the votes to elect the ticket. In the 1908 Republican National Convention 980 delegates were admitted under the terms of the national committee's call; 491, or a majority, were necessary for a nomination. The Southern States and Territories, giving no electoral votes, with the exception of Maryland, which gave Taft and Sherman 2 out of 8, had 338 votes, leaving 153 to be secured to give a majority. Thus, it will be seen that under such circumstances any candidate controlling the delegations from southern Democratic States and the Territories would have to secure only 153 votes, while any other candidate would have to secure 491 votes for those States which give electoral votes as well as delegates.

Under the referee system in the South and the patronage system in the Territories and insular possessions, a President, through his nominating power and the Federal machine, can, if he desires, practically control the votes of these delegations in the convention. Then with his power in other States, and the tremendous influence of the Federal machine, it requires but little other influence to give him the 153 additional votes necessary for his renomination or the nomination of the man he selects. The Southern States and Territories, giving no electoral votes to the Republican Party, are under the domination of the machine through the referee system, and have greater influence in naming the Republican nominee for President and Vice President than have the combined States of New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, Massachusetts, Indiana, and Iowa, which collectively have 334 delegates.

Conditions such as described made it possible for President Roosevelt to dictate the nomination of Mr. Taft in 1908 and enable President Taft to force his own renomination in 1912. By the same methods, President Harrison secured his renomination in 1892.

Possession of such power as I have outlined, the existence of which cannot be disputed, violates the fundamental principles of government of, for, and by the people. Dictatorship in either politics or legislation is repugnant to popular and truly representative government. Use of patronage to control votes in Congress or to control conventions is as great an evil as those acts which we have made criminal by laws against bribery and corrupt practices in elections. While the trading of patronage for votes in Congress is not a technical violation of law, it is a violation of the spirit of the statutes. Let me quote section 5450 of the United States Revised Statutes:

"Every person who promises, offers, gives, or causes, or procures to be promised, offered, or given, any money or any other thing of value, or makes or tenders any contract, undertaking, obligation, gratuity, or security for the payment of money, or for the delivery or conveyance of anything of value, to any Member of either House of Congress, either before or after such Member has been qualified or has taken his seat, with intent to influence his vote or decision on any question, matter, cause, or proceeding which may be at any time pending in either House of Congress, or before any committee thereof, shall be fined not more than three times the amount of money or value of the thing so offered, promised, given, made, or tendered, or caused or procured to be so offered, promised, given, made, or tendered, and shall be, moreover, imprisoned not more than 3 years."

Under that statute, bribery consists in giving or offering "anything of value" and "with intent to influence his vote." Skilled lawyers, trained to "divide a hair 'twixt south and southwest side" may prove by unquestionable logic that Federal patronage is not a thing of value, notwithstanding it is so highly prized by operators in the field of politics. I am not a splitter of hairs where fundamental principles of equality and justice are involved.

Our Government was founded upon the proposition that all men are equal before the law, civil or criminal. I would have as much respect for a common ward heeler who buys votes at the polls as for a President of the United States who uses his appointing power as a means of forcing or persuading Members of Congress to determine or change their course of action. One transaction is as dishonest, as corrupt, and as depraving as the other, but the latter is more dangerous, more insidious, more pernicious than the former, because it strikes at the very foundation of free institutions, sets a precedent for corrupt methods in all official life, and marks the beginning of dictatorship and decadence of the Nation.

Every President of the United States takes an oath to preserve, protect and defend the Constitution, which, among other things, declares that "all legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives."

No President can interfere with the exercise of legislative power by Congress without violating his oath of office, a violation as direct and as complete as any other unlawful act by any other officer of the Government. To bribe a Member of Congress by means of Federal patronage is not different in principle from bribery by means of cash or other valuable consideration. Intimidation by threats of loss of prestige incident to withdrawal of patronage is not different in principle from intimidation by threats of violence or business injury. But this species of bribery and intimidation is more vicious than any other, because it assumes a character of gentility, due to the patriotic reverence for the office of President.

No one will condemn more severely than I the man who harps upon evils without suggesting a remedy. I believe I am not subject to this criticism. Three years ago, in an address in the United States Senate, I pointed out the evils I have here discussed and advocated three remedies: A Presidential primary law, destroying the power of the President to build a political machine with power to control nominations; a corrupt-practice act, making it unlawful to exchange Federal patronage for votes in Congress; a constitutional amendment divesting the President of his power of nomination of Federal appointees.

The more I study the subject the more firmly I believe that the chief remedy lies in a constitutional amendment taking away the power of appointment and leaving the President no more power over legislation than exists by reason of his authority to communicate his views to Congress and to veto any measure of which he does not approve. These powers carry with them opportunity to appeal to public opinion in a very effective manner. Greater power than this no President should have.

The following is a tentative form of constitutional amendment I have drawn, providing for popular election of certain Federal officers in the several States:

"Congress shall provide by law for the election of United States district attorneys, United States marshals, collectors of customs, appraisers of merchandise, collectors of internal revenue, registers and receivers of local land offices, and postmasters in incorporated cities by the qualified voters within the limits of election districts established in pursuance of law. Such elections shall be held at the same times and places as the election for electors of President and Vice President. The term of such offices shall be 4 years. Provision shall also be made for removal of such officers for cause, and for filling vacancies by temporary appointment."

* * * * * * *

I deem it appropriate and desirable in this connection to direct public attention more particularly to the rapid growth of bureaucracy in our Government—a development which is the natural consequence of increased power of the Executive and decreased power of Congress. Each department or bureau, responsive to the Executive, acquires the dictatorial spirit and becomes ambitious for more power. Members of Congress, accustomed to cringing at the White House, easily assume the same attitude in relations with the administrative departments.

Year after year the departments ask more and more authority. When any law is to be enacted relating to their work, they ask that more and more be left to their discretion. Rather than demand information upon which to base a law specifying definitely the extent of administrative power and the limitation upon individual liberty, Congress, too often, delegates to the departments broad authority under which they can make "rules and regulations" with all the effectiveness of law. The rules and regulations change with the passing of department and bureau heads so that no citizen can know his rights and duties until he has consulted the latest expression of the judgment, whim, or fancy of the official to whom the legislative power was delegated.

To the original presumption that every man knows the law, and the consequent principle that ignorance of the law excuses no one, we have in practice added the presumption that every man knows all the latest rules and regulations of an ever-increasing number of departments and bureaus.

In the multitude of smaller transactions in which the citizen suddenly finds to his surprise that he is a criminal, because he has violated some bureaucratic rule, the victim merely pays his fine and keeps silent for fear of disgrace or further prosecution. Whether or not he ought to have known the rule and however honest his intentions, he is wise enough to realize that the smallness of his income, coupled with the necessity of earning a living, forbids his entering into litigation with a bureau that has practically unlimited resources in the form of special agents, detectives, attorneys, and expense allowances.

The man who wanted to cut one tree on a forest reserve and, in order to supply his needs without becoming a criminal, waited for written permission until four special agents had been sent on four separate occasions to measure the tree and determine its size, feels that he has lost enough without trying to become a public benefactor by making public protest against the evils of bureaucracy and thus incurring the animosity of forest officials with whom he may have to deal on some future occasion.

As I have already explained, bureaucracy boasts of its achievements and secures wide publicity for its propaganda, but the American people have no means of learning of the evils and defects of centralized government. Only in large matters of widespread interest when a bureau makes rules that grossly violate justice, does public attention become attracted to the specific instance.

Every discretionary power conferred makes the officer to that extent a dictator, tempts him to use that power to promote selfish personal or political interests, and is a corresponding limitation upon and menace to the personal liberty and property rights of the individual. The very existence of popular government is a declaration of the conclusion formed from the experience of the ages that no man is so wise or so good that he can be trusted to rule over his fellow man. Government of the people and by the people must be a government by law. So long as human infirmity lasts, government by exercise of individual discretion must be not only of and by an individual but also for that individual.

In the earlier periods of our history, when social and industrial relations were less complex, the enactment of law was a comparatively simple undertaking. But the new problems of intricate business affairs growing out of the relation of public-service corporations to the public generally, and the many subjects requiring legislation for the promotion of the best interests of all the people by limitations upon the liberty of individuals, as in rate regulations, pure-food, hours-of-labor, and industrial-accident legislation, has made law-drafting a difficult task. The easiest and hence the tempting policy is to enact one general, sweeping authorization of control and then establish a bureau, commission, or department which shall "make rules and regulations" for carrying out the purposes of the act.

That form of law-making is easy. Moreover, it is rapid. Congress can quickly relieve itself of the task. In handling a new problem it has limited information. If it deliberates first and acts afterward it is censured for delay. The easiest and quickest way out is to enact a general law bestowing power, and leave the executive department or bureau to do the deliberating as to the real and effective provisions of law, called rules and regulations.

It is the constant effort of the departments to secure legislation of this kind. They resent any effort on the part of Congress to place limitations upon their power. They want power conferred, and, when conferred, they want it without limit. The annual reports of department heads supply innumerable instances in which this attitude on the part of the executive branch of government is manifested.

One of the latest expressions on this subject is found in the 1914 report of the Secretary of Labor, page 95, where the Secretary recommends that his Department and that of the Postmaster General be authorized to conduct a national employment bureau.

"For best results", says the report, "the two Departments should not be hampered by statutory rules. They should be given freedom to work out the problem between themselves through interdepartmental cooperation."

In other words, the Secretary says that he and the Postmaster General don't know just what they may desire to do. They are now hampered by an old Constitution that places legislative power in the hands of Congress. All they ask is that Congress shall delegate a large portion of that legislative power to them, and, in doing so, they want Congress to put no limit upon it. This idea of doing things according to law is irritating to them. What's the use of having law when we have a Secretary of Labor and a Postmaster General who are not only ready but anxious to draw up a set of rules and regulations that will have all the force of law? Why have a government by law when we have department heads who can do the governing if "not hampered by statutory rules"? Indeed, if it were not for that irritating old Constitution, which galls the official hands it binds, we should have a government by men and not by law.

Another illustration of the desire of departments to secure enormous power for themselves was shown in the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury for 1916. The Secretary recommended that certain unexpended balances of public-building appropriations, amounting to some $14,000,000, be turned into a lump appropriation available for expenditure by him on such sites, buildings, or extensions as he may deem advisable. The adoption of this recommendation would give the Treasury Department absolute control over $14,000,000, and every Member of Congress whose constituents are interested in construction of a public building would be compelled to appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury for an allotment of money. There is no need to explain the enormous political power that would be given the Secretary of the Treasury by the adoption of such a plan. It may be said to the credit of the House Committee on Appropriations that the recommendation of the Treasury Department was rejected.

These two incidents are but illustrative of the policy and tendency in practice by the departments, as will be learned by perusal of their annual reports.

Probably the most numerous instances of this kind will be found in the Post Office Department, which comes into closer relationship with all the people of the United States and with all their business activities than does any other department of the public service. I will cite a few illustrations.

Practically all the railroad men who are members of this organization are entirely familiar with the contents of what is known as House Document 105, Sixty-second Congress, and also the recommendations in the Annual Report of the Postmaster General for 1911 on the subject of railway mail pay. I need not recount the provisions of the plan recommended by the Postmaster General further than to say for the benefit of those who are not familiar with its provisions that it proposed a plan of compensation which would afford the railroads no return whatever upon capital invested, and would practically give the Postmaster General the power to determine arbitrarily the compensation the railroads should receive for the transportation of mail.

In his letter recommending this measure the Postmaster General characterized it as "scientific and businesslike." I am not aware of any other authority occupying a position of trust and responsibility who has ever fathered the suggestion that a business enterprise can be successfully conducted upon such principles. The very fact that such a recommendation was made by a Postmaster General and six of his subordinates is sufficient evidence that it would be worse than folly to delegate large discretionary powers to a department likely to be conducted by men entertaining such views.

I shall not take up your time with a discussion of the details of that plan to compel the railroads to carry mail at a loss, but deem this an opportune time to remark that if the Government expects its citizens to deal justly with each other it must deal justly with them, whether they be corporations or individuals.

The effort to secure bureaucratic power is not confined to any one administration or the members of any one political party. The Hitchcock recommendation as to railway mail pay was made under a Republican administration. The present Democratic administration of the Post Office Department submitted to Congress in 1914 a bill on this same subject, one provision of which read as follows:

"The Postmaster General shall, from time to time, request information from the Interstate Commerce Commission as to the revenue received by railroad companies from express companies for services in the transportation of express matter, and may, in his discretion, arrange for the transportation of mail matter other than of the first class at rates not exceeding those so ascertained and reported to him, and it shall be the duty of the railroad companies to carry such mail matter at such rates fixed by the Postmaster General."

A reading of this paragraph shows that the Department considers itself better fitted than the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix transportation rates. That section requires the Interstate Commerce Commission to inform the Postmaster General what revenues are received by railroad companies for express service and then authorizes the Postmaster General to fix rates for the transportation of matter other than first class at not exceeding those so ascertained, and makes it the "duty of railroad companies to carry such mail matter at such rates, fixed by the Postmaster General."

This provision would apply to matter of second, third, and fourth classes, namely, newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals, printed matter, parcel-post matter, and also to free matter. All these classes of mail, constituting approximately 90 percent of the total weight of all mail matter, the railroads would be required to carry at rates which the Postmaster General could fix as low as he pleased, but not exceeding the average express rates.

No investigation would be required, no hearing need be granted; the railroads could have no opportunity for defense, the reasonableness of rates could not be attacked, there could be no appeal—the mere ipse dixit of the Postmaster General would determine the rates the railroads should receive for transporting all second-, third-, and fourth-class, and free matter.

The greed for power manifested by this recommendation is surpassed only by the concentrated egotism which prompted the belief that the Department could rightly exercise such power if granted.

Unless confronted by the record of its recommendations, one would be loath to believe that any administrative department could presume to ask such a delegation of power from an intelligent, self-respecting legislative body imbued with a fair appreciation of its own functions.

It is essential that Congress shall adopt the fixed policy of refusing to confer upon executive departments power to exercise discretion and insist that laws shall be so drawn that every citizen can point to the plain language of the statute that prescribes what he can, what he can't, and what he must do, and the penalty that will follow the violation of the law.

But in order that Congress may be able to enact laws in such definite and specific form as this, it is necessary that sources of information be placed at its command.

With the development of our resources and the increase in our population, it is impossible for Congress or its Members to get a broad grasp on the great number of bills introduced in each session. To illustrate: During the three sessions of the Sixty-first Congress there were over 39,000 bills and joint resolutions introduced. Necessarily, the great work of Congress must be done through committees. The individual Member gets a fair grasp of only those bills coming before the committees of which he is a member, and most of the bills coming before the committees are but perfunctorily considered, unless an individual Member or public opinion causes careful consideration of the subject matter. Bills introduced are referred to committees and by the chairman of the committee submitted to the administrative department having jurisdiction over the subject matter that would be affected by the proposed legislation. The department head refers the bill to some bureau head, who in turn refers it to some subordinate clerk in that bureau. The clerk examines it, writes a report, favorable or unfavorable, which is submitted to his immediate superior and indorsed by him and then on through the head of the bureau to the head of the department. An official letter of this kind is often perfunctorily signed by the Cabinet officer and sent to Congress. This letter, therefore, does not necessarily represent the ideas of the head of the department, but is simply a reflection of the idea initiating with the bureau clerk, who, with no experience other than that of years of grind in clerical work within a small office located in Washington, becomes, in effect, framer of a policy of perhaps great moment to the general welfare of the country as a whole and requiring high intellectual development, broad information, and familiarity with varying conditions in different sections of the country.

With the multitude of duties now placed upon Members of Congress, Congress and its committees are necessarily obliged to depend upon the departments and bureaus for special information. Hence, the natural result is that in legislation Congress becomes subservient to the departments and bureaus instead of the departments and bureaus being subordinate to Congress, and carrying out the will of the people as expressed through Congress. It is only in rare instances that a committee reports a bill or Congress enacts a law without the approval of the Department to the activities of which the law relates.

When a department adopts a certain policy or takes a position upon a public question, the natural inclination of the department is to supply information supporting that view. Having no other adequate source of information, Congress usually relies upon data thus secured. In the multiplicity of subjects requiring their attention, not only in legislative halls but in looking after the almost unlimited variety of requests for aid from their constituents, Senators and Congressmen have neither the time nor the expert assistance necessary to gather original data of their own.

The idea will doubtless occur to many that the executive departments, being in control of the administrative activities of the Government, familiar with all its practical problems and in possession of most of the information relative to Government affairs, should be better able to furnish Congress with information than any congressional commission could be. There are several reasons, however, why Congress cannot safely depend upon the departments for information. As I have already indicated, the departments naturally incline to the presentation of data that will support their policies. For various reasons the statistics supplied are not always correct, and frequently cannot be relied upon.

It is my purpose in this connection merely to point out that Congress cannot safely accept as accurate the information submitted to it by the executive departments and must devise a plan for securing information on its own account.

Many instances that have come to my notice could be cited illustrating the danger of accepting as accurate and basing legislation upon statistics presented by the departments. Between 1898 and 1901 a congressional commission studied the problem of railway mail pay, and upon the conclusion of the work of the commission, one of its members, Congressman Moody, of Massachusetts, afterward justice of the United States Supreme Court, declared in a speech in the House of Representatives that when the commission began its work it had before it statistics of the Post Office Department showing that the railroads were paid an average of 6.58 cents per pound for transporting mail, averaging 40 cents per ton mile, with an average haul of 328 miles, whereas a special weighing disclosed that the average payment was in fact 2.75 cents per pound, averaging 12.56 cents per ton-mile, with an average haul of 438 miles. "In other words", said Mr. Moody, "we were not paying one-third as much as the Post Office Department had led the people of the country to believe we had been paying."

Again, in 1911, when the commission of which Justice Hughes, of the Supreme Court, was chairman, was investigating the subject of postage rates on second-class matter, the Post Office Department submitted statistics concerning which the commission said in its report:

"It seems hardly worth while to include subsidiary tables from which those later results are taken or to criticize the details, as the commission has little confidence in their accuracy", and again:

"In view of the errors and inconsistencies in which the returns from the post office abound—we do not extend this report to review them—our examination has convinced us that the computation is not sufficiently accurate to base an apportionment of the cost of the general post-office services."

If Congress hopes to enact laws that will meet the demands of actual conditions it must have before it an accurate presentation of actual facts.

Unfortunately for the interest of the country, it is usually impossible to measure the efficiency of the public service. The work of the Government is ordinarily of such a nature that there is nothing in private enterprise with which comparison can be made.

As another illustration of costly administrative methods, I cite the recommendation of Postmaster General Hitchcock in 1911 that parcel-post legislation take the form of an appropriation of $100,000 to be expended by the Department in experimental service on rural routes in order to determine what legislation should be enacted. This recommendation was rejected and a resolution adopted authorizing a Senate committee of which I was chairman, to conduct an inquiry. The inquiry cost about $4,000, and resulted in the enactment of the present law.

It is not alone in the scope of administrative duties that the departments and the Executive assert and exercise power not contemplated by the constitutional provisions from which they derive their existence. It has become a common practice for the departments to draft bills, have them introduced in Congress, and then force them to enactment by every means that a resourceful administration can devise.

Invariably it is found that a bill so initiated provides for increased power for the department or bureau, asks for more money, and expressly leaves to rule and regulation the right to amend, enlarge, or suspend congressional action as expressed in the law itself. This is but natural because of the personal equation. The President or his subordinate may think that with more power and more money he could improve the general welfare, or vanity or the insidious disease of ambition for power may possess him. Congress having acquiesced in this method of procedure, the American people have come to look to the administrative departments for the constructive work of government. Having lost to a large extent its confidence in itself, Congress has forfeited the confidence of the country and has won the contempt of both the executive and judicial branches of the Government. Since Congress neither asserts nor exercises fully the powers and prerogatives with which it was vested by the people in the formation of the Government, it has lost popular respect. It is the object of jibes and jeers, and few there be "so poor to do it reverence."

If Congress is to regain its lost prestige and again occupy the position assigned to it in this Government, it must assert and exercise the prerogatives of a coordinate body. To do this it must have adequate sources of information acting under authority of Congress alone, responsible to Congress alone, and devoting attention exclusively to work in which Congress is engaged.

Such commissions, employing experts who are unbiased by departmental connections and unprejudiced by the rivalry, pride, or ambition of executive relations, could open to Congress original sources of information and emancipate Congress from subservience to the departments.

A permanent joint legislative committee or joint commission should be created, say of 6 men, 2 of them Chairmen of the Committees on Post Offices and Post Roads of the respective Houses of Congress 2 to be appointed by the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads from individuals who have had legislative experience, but not necessarily at the time of appointment as Members of Congress, and 2 appointed by the Chairman of the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads with the same qualification. The committee should have funds with which to make a study, compile, and tabulate information to be furnished to Congress.

Thus, in effect, would be created a subcommittee of Congress with no legislative powers, but with full powers for ascertainment and presentation of information to Congress for its use. Congress would then be relieved of the burden and irritation and delay incident to securing information through the departments and bureaus. Four members of such a committee could devote their entire time to the subject matter coming within its jurisdiction. The chairmen of the Senate and House committees, being ex-officio members of the joint committee, would be relieved of the burden of compilation and tabulation of information and be able to present on the floor of both Houses of Congress such information as they secured and such deductions as they made as a result of the committee's work. In no manner would this diminish the power of Congress or of its committees. The committees would always be subject to the direction and control of Congress. Bills, instead of being made up in the departments, would be framed in Congress. The departments would be obliged to cooperate with Congress through this instrumentality, and knowledge of this permanent instrumentality would have a salutary influence over them and undoubtedly would result in highly developing them and improving their own efficiency.

Due observance of the constitutional division of governmental functions is not merely a controversy over relative extent of authority. It is a fundamental question of government in which every citizen should feel a personal interest. We have before us the problem whether the drift toward bureaucracy shall continue, or shall be checked and the hands of Congress strengthened. It is a question between centralization and distribution of governing power.

For my part, I am thoroughly in favor of distribution of power, for I believe the history of the world proves that centralized power means infringement upon individual liberty, leads to favoritism and oppression, and must ultimately end in such an upheaval as will overthrow the ruling power, with all the wrongs and suffering and loss that are incidents of governmental reorganization.

It is safer to trust ultimate governing power to a Congress made up of over 500 men chosen by direct vote of the people from all walks of life and from all parts of the country than to trust that power to any one man who ever lived or ever will live. Hence I assert that it is the part of wisdom now to check the tendency toward bureaucracy by decisive action that will curtail the enormous authority now possessed by the President through his appointing power, provide for the election of postmasters, collectors of customs and appraisers of merchandise, collectors of internal revenue, United States district attorneys and marshals, and registers and receivers of land offices, make the President accountable directly to the people by the enactment of a Presidential primary law, emancipate Congress from subserviency to the departments by establishing joint legislative committees or commissions, and adopt and follow the policy of making all laws as comprehensive and explicit as possible, so that as little as may be shall be left to the discretion of administrative officials.

One reason why public opinion does not call a halt to political dictatorship, Executive control over legislation, and bureaucratic acquisition of power is that each individual feels the evil result of centralization of power in only a few particulars and realizes his utter inability to cope with the enormous power of officialdom. The humble private citizen, who has his living to make by daily effort, is scarcely to be criticized for failing to make vigorous and persistent protest; yet the preservation of human liberty has always been and always will be dependent upon eternal vigilance, individual courage, and self-sacrifice. Another reason is that business men take too little active personal interest in their Government and too often exclude politics from discussion at their meetings.

Two pronounced policies must be adopted by the American people, if they would stay the onward sweep of dictatorship—one a demand and the other a protest—a demand that the President be deprived of that patronage power which enables him to coerce Congress and control his party organization and conventions; a protest against every delegation of unnecessary discretionary power to departments and bureaus.

THE NATIONAL EMERGENCY COUNCIL—ADDRESS BY DONALD R. RICHBERG

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I ask that an address delivered on March 27, 1935, by Mr. Donald R. Richberg, executive director of the National Emergency Council and Chairman of the National Industrial Recovery Board, touching many definitions of matters which are now pending in a bill which we are aware is the object of legislation, be printed in the RECORD. The address was delivered at Rutgers College, New Brunswick, N. J.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RECONSTRUCTED INDIVIDUALISM

The reader of much current political discussion might get the impression that a dictionary of the English language did not exist. A puzzled world is informed that we are engaged in a process of preserving individualism, promoting socialism, and moving into communism, all at one time and as the objective of one program.

Some persons claim that confused interpretations are caused by confusion in the program. To avoid political partisanship on this occasion I will merely suggest that there may be a mingling of political strategy and honest doubt in this complaint. But, still assuming the difficult role of a detached observer, let me further suggest that much of the prevailing fogginess arises, not out of the program, but from the mental disorders of political criticism, which are frequently the product of intellectual malnutrition for which even a dictionary diet would be helpful.

Therefore, it may be well, even in this atmosphere of higher education, to begin an analysis of what may be described as the new-deal program with a few authoritative definitions of significant words. Recognizing, however, that political economists and political scientists are seldom in exact agreement in their definitions, it should be understood that in quoting one authority I do not wish to reflect in the slightest degree upon some other, perhaps greater authority, who might define the term somewhat differently.

Individualism as a political doctrine or policy indicates a primary regard for individual rights and specifically requires maintaining the political and economic independence of the individual. Its essential features include the right to accumulate, use, and transfer private property. According to this doctrine, the chief end of society and of moral law is the development of individual character; society existing for the sake of its individual members.

This political doctrine is allied with the philosophy that the self is the only knowable existence. There may be a composite entity, a conscious, self-perpetuating unity; but we know it not, except as by faith we may feel that we know God.

Socialism may be defined as a political doctrine aiming at a more equal distribution and better production of wealth by reason of governmental control of competitive activities. Its most essential feature is the annulment of rights of private property, at least to the extent necessary so that by governmental controls the opportunities of life and the distribution of the rewards of labor may be equitably apportioned. There are many varieties and degrees of socialism; but this definition is reasonably inclusive.

Communism may be defined as the extreme opposite of an individualism based on private property, and as comprehending the common ownership of all property used in production and the aim of equality as the definition of equity in the distribution of the products of industry.

None of these definitions is adequate for a scientific discussion and each requires some further refinement for even an intelligible political debate.

Rights of property are not absolute and unlimited under any political system; and governmental control moves inevitably in the direction of socialism when directed to protecting the general welfare, promoting cooperation, and eliminating unfair competition. There is a twilight zone wherein the individual may be required to accept many social responsibilities, but where individualism is still dominant so long as the fundamental right of the individual to acquire, use, and transfer property in a competitive system of private enterprise is preserved.

Socialism, as commonly advocated, makes the individual life dependent largely upon State controls; but it may retain self-realization and the advancement of the individual as the ultimate objective of the government.

Communism, although not always so defined, tends definitely to subordinate individual aspiration and development to the welfare of society, and to make the objective of the individual life the rendering of service to the State.

Of course, the political tactics of individualists, socialists, and communists play a large part in practically distinguishing their activities. Communism must be revolutionary since it aims at destroying the fundamental safeguards of individual security and freedom as provided in a system of private property. In its idealization of society, individual suffering, and ancient moralities lose their importance. Whatever its ultimate character, communism today is a destructive program.

The Socialist may be a political revolutionary, but so long as his objective is still the better life of the individual he is evolutionary in his aims, seeking to improve the service of society to the members. The irreconcilable conflict between him and the individualist lies in his rejection of private property as the instrument of safeguarding individual freedom and the opportunity of self-realization.

Although these somewhat dogmatic classifications may not meet general approval, they will serve as a basis for clarifying my interpretation of the process of reconstructing individualism in which the people of the United States are now particularly engaged.

There is no tendency whatsoever toward communism in the new-deal program. Nor is there any purpose to transform an individualistic, competitive system into a socialistic cooperation. There is the definite aim by cooperative means to eliminate the unfair methods and the intolerable results of an undisciplined competitive system.

There is a world of difference between imposing social responsibilities upon the owners of private property and socializing property. There is a world of difference between establishing a fair system of private profit making and establishing a system of production for use instead of for profit.

Those who insist that adequate social obligations cannot be imposed on private property and that a competitive system cannot be made fair, are a little hasty in their assumptions that such a political economic system as we envision has ever been tried and failed. The world we live in, our present industrial civilization, is hardly 50 years old. None of the political doctrines which we are debating has ever been applied to the economic conditions under which the people of the United States are now living.

It may be conceded that under an economy of scarcity it has been very difficult to regulate a competitive system so as to avoid those social injustices which eventually become unbearable, which set class against class and nation against nation, and produce a succession of civil and international wars.

If the world were still compelled to accept the alternative of universal frugality or small areas of comfortable living and large areas of sordid existence, many might agree that competition would always be ruthless and that the only hope of social justice would lie in a social control of production and distribution for the greatest good of the greatest number.

So long as there are 20 men for every 10 loaves of bread a competitive struggle under almost any terms would probably mean that a few men would get all the bread they needed and something more, while the majority would get less than they needed. That would result from differences in ability, in acquisitiveness, and selfishness.

But if there are today 30 loaves available for every 20 men, it should not be so difficult to convince even the stronger and more greedy few that they can well afford to make sure that every man has the loaf of bread he needs; and then they might engage in a decent rivalry over the division of the surplus. It is not so hard to write and enforce fair rules of a game when it is not played under the desperate urge of a necessity to win.

Men compete most vigorously, sometimes unfairly, in a struggle for the prizes of life; but most of them, when free from the pressure of necessity, are willing to abide by reasonable rules and prefer to demonstrate their superiority in a fair, open contest, rather than by sneaking around to stab someone in the back under cover of darkness.

Human beings enjoy fighting and winning. The instinct of competition is so deeply rooted in centuries of struggles for existence that I, for one, have no faith in any rapid transformation of the selfish animal into a cooperating altruist. But these same centuries have gradually converted the caveman into a semicivilized member of society, who enjoys those peaceful relations with his fellow men that are only possible by restraining his predatory yearnings and by proving himself to be a reasonably safe companion.

Accepting, therefore, a condition of society in which, by a proper organization of production and distribution, everyone can be assured of a decent livelihood, is it Utopian to assume that competitive individualists can produce such an organization? Is it not far more Utopian to believe that millions of competitive individualists can be transformed in a generation into cooperating socialists?

There is another phase of our industrial civilization that is worth considering in the answer to this question. It is not only a sense of social responsibility that is persuading competitors to rewrite the rules of competition. It is not only that lure of monopolistic control of prices about which we hear much political clamor.

There has been developing throughout trade and industry a very real fear of those excesses of competition whereby all the hard-won fruits of years of business building are swept away in the suicidal struggle of big and little enterprises to take business away from each other with wage-cutting and price-cutting weapons whereby in the end profits disappear, purchasing power fades away, and markets are glutted with unsalable goods.

In the effort to counteract these evils trade associations have been organized. They have sought to outlaw cutthroat methods. They have experimented with devices for the control of prices and production, with a worried watching of the overhanging sword of the antitrust laws. Sometimes they have managed to sustain an artificial price, thereby committing the folly of establishing a scarcity price in an economy of abundance—hastening the day of wrath when, having destroyed most of their customers, they would find they had destroyed themselves.

But during these years of haphazard, unscientific experimentation, a substantial part of American business has learned the need for some cooperation among competitors. Only a few have learned what to do with the power of cooperation. Far too many still imagine that natural economic forces will provide them with a market if they can simply maintain prices and avoid overproduction. All too few have recognized that only the widest possible distribution of the greatest possible volume of that wealth which is produced each month will provide them with an adequate market in domestic consumption during the following month.

The inclination of every industry has been to look to some other industry to provide the purchasing power for its products. If an enterprise paid good dividends and poor wages it was acclaimed a success, although in sober analysis it should have been recognized as an industrial parasite and an unfair competitor. It was living off the purchasing power supplied by other enterprises that paid fair wages; and it was failing to contribute its share of purchasing power for the support of others.

It is no answer to this criticism to point out that capital must earn a fair return if investments are to be made, or that if wages are increased too much and prices rise too high there may be no actual increase in purchasing power and markets may be actually contracted. The first requisite for security of capital and assurance of a fair return is the ability of a business to sell its products. A fair distribution of the rewards of labor is obviously the foundation of a sound purchasing power.

No one can fix a fair standard of wages or prices except as related to some original measuring rod. The one absolute measuring rod is the subsistence of a human being. In by-gone days this was a very low level of subsistence. But this had to be provided even for a slave or a valuable property would be lost.

Sometimes in economies of great scarcity, where even subsistence has not been available, labor has been unable to command even a bare living wage. But today it is practically undisputed that every mature, full-time worker in America can and should be paid more than the current cost of mere existence. From this lowest level of the minimum wage it should not be very difficult to build a wage structure which should be competitively fair, regardless of its ultimate social justice.

Thus it is now possible for employers of labor to eliminate by cooperative action the most unfair competition between them—a competition in overworking and underpaying labor; and by so doing they are not only lifting the level of our civilization, they are also protecting the security of private business from destructive competition in wage cutting and price cutting and from the resulting downward spiral of purchasing power due to an unfair distribution of the rewards of industry.

Against this general scheme of industrial cooperation what are the principal objections? We may dismiss at once resounding charges of the encouragement of monopolies and the oppression of small enterprises. In the first place, the actual effect of the N. R. A. has been to provide the only effective protections of small enterprises that have developed in 45 years of antitrust laws. Throughout trades and industries the major body of support for the N. R. A. has come and is coming from hundreds of thousands of small business men who for the first time have found barriers built and maintained against the unfair and coercive practices of their large competitors.

If, however, all the actual benefits conferred were disputed, if every charge against the administration of the law were sustained, the fact would remain towering above all argument that the law itself provides a new and invaluable method of restraining monopolistic practices and checking the growth of monopolies, while furnishing positive protection to small enterprises which could not be made effective under the antitrust laws.

Any valid criticism must therefore be directed not at the law but at its administration. To repeal the law would be to take away a shield and a sword because they had been clumsily used, depriving the Government of weapons sorely needed for the protection of fair competition and the livelihood of thousands of small producers and distributors.

The other principal objections to the industrial recovery program may be enveloped in the broad charge of its interference with individual freedom in the conduct of business. Few persons will candidly admit that they approve of sweatshop wages and a 10- or 12-hour day. Yet many will stoutly defend the maintenance of a free and unregulated competition which will result—not by the free choice of employer or employee, but by compulsion—in the overworking and underpaying of millions of wage earners.

The liberty of one man always exerts some compulsion upon other men. The absence of government—a state of anarchy—would permit stronger men or stronger groups of men to impose their will absolutely upon their weaker brethren. The liberty of one man to own a home denies to all others the liberty of living in that place. The liberty of one man to go where he pleased would deny to all others the liberty to be left alone. Indeed, that supreme liberty which men crave, the liberty to be left alone, imposes a restraint upon all the rest of the world.

Moving from these simple elements of the interrelation of liberty and political restraint, let us see the effect of untrammeled individual freedom in business. Complete freedom would permit every variety of fraud, dishonesty, and tyranny. Laws against misrepresentation, false weights, adulteration, monopoly, and conceded crime are all restraints upon individual liberty. Where can the line be drawn between one form of wrongdoing and another so as to say that the Government must prevent one evil but cannot prevent another without destroying individual initiative and interfering with property rights?

Is it not clear that the only line which can be drawn is where there is doubt as to whether an action is good or evil in its effect upon other men? Of course, we may debate as to whether the attempted cure will be worse than the disease; but that question arises with every legislative remedial act and does not change the fundamental proposition that, faced with the clearly evil effect upon many men of an exercise of individual liberty, a legislative restraint upon wrongdoing for the purpose of protecting the freedom of others to do right, cannot be challenged as an interference with constitutional liberty.

Consider a specific case of unfair labor competition. A large majority of coal operators, textile manufacturers, and other industrialists have always wanted to pay living wages. But if a small group under competitive pressures could only operate by paying starvation wages and thereby charging lower prices, they could force the entire industry to cut prices and wages.

As a result of years of such competition, when the N. R. A. began the establishment of codes of fair competition, it was found that wages for bituminous coal miners had been driven as low as $1.50 a day and wages for textile workers as low as a few cents per hour. These wages could not be raised unless such unfair labor competition could be outlawed. But when minimum wages and maximum hours were established by law, the entire problem was not solved. Both these industries had an excess productive capacity. A larger market could not be developed overnight. In the case of coal, probably an adequate market could never be developed. Clearly the pressure of a fierce competition would tend to break down the wage standards. The more efficient units could sell cheaper on the same labor costs. The less efficient would demand the liberty of cutting wages as their only means of meeting a competitor's price.

Facing this problem, the N. R. A. moved into another phase of fair competition, seeking again not to restrict a liberty to do what was right, but to protect men from being compelled to do what was wrong. In the bituminous coal industry, associations, operating under Government supervision, were permitted to establish minimum prices so that all operators meeting fair labor standards would have an opportunity to sell their coal. There was no monopoly created or sanctioned, because the various coal-producing areas were in active competition in the principal markets. The Supreme Court of the United States had previously upheld the legality of such price-fixing associations.

In the cotton-textile field the problem was one of deterring overproduction. When stocks of unsold goods accumulated mills were forced into two destructive practices. First, goods must be sold below actual cost and, in a falling market, buying naturally declined; but cash had to be obtained, particularly by small mills with little capital. Second, further losses must be prevented by stopping the payment of wages for the production of more goods to be sold at a loss.

Without an orderly handling of the entire industrial problem, individual freedom of action meant the maximum of individual hardship and injury to the public welfare. Mills would be shut down. Thousands of workers would be thrown on public relief. Surplus stocks would be gradually sold at ruinous prices. Eventually a new demand would arise. Then, again, there would be a feverish rush to produce for a rising market. Consumers would pay back in scarcity prices what they might have gained in the period of surplus. Then inventories would rise until again the bottom would drop out of the market and the disheartening cycle of boom and bust would be again completed.

There is no way to meet this problem except by the cooperative effort of the entire industry to regulate its production into a reasonable relationship to effective demand. Upon such regulation depends the ability of the industry to stabilize employment, to pay tolerable wages, and to work its employees for reasonable hours. Of course, any such industrial controls deny to an individual operator not only the liberty to overwork and underpay his employees but also the liberty either to ruin himself in one season or, perhaps, to make a lucky profit in the next.

Most people will not wish to deny to an individual the liberty of gambling with his own money, and there are few restraints on private gambling. But there is a prevailing sentiment that public gambling is a dangerous evil and that at least the necessary business of the Nation should not be conducted as a vast gambling operation. Yet, when we examine the actual conditions of many of our major industries, such as coal and textiles, we find in effect that 10 percent of those engaged, by a reckless exercise of individual freedom, can transform a serious essential business upon which the welfare of millions of people depends into a huge lottery, in which almost everyone, including the general public, loses.

We hear a great deal of emotional ranting about curtailing production and maintaining prices. Let us discuss the facts for a few moments. Of course, we should produce all the agricultural and industrial products that can be sold. We should distribute them to consumers at the lowest prices at which they can be profitably sold. But the limitations upon how much we can safely produce and upon how cheaply it can be safely sold must be recognized.

There is overproduction in fact if acres of potatoes are left to rot in the ground, or acres of apples to rot on the trees, because they cannot be marketed for the cost of harvesting and transporting them. There is overproduction if millions of yards of cotton cloth cannot be sold for the cost of making and distributing. There may be millions of people on relief who need potatoes and shirts. But if potatoes and shirts are not paid for by the Government, then the labor of farmers and textile workers and railroad workers and distributors must be either contributed for nothing, or else paid for by employers and owners out of capital.

When the Government buys and distributes products to the unemployed or furnishes money with which they can buy, the Government levies a tax, now or later, by which we all share the burden; and the Government keeps the industrial machinery going. But in such a time it is clearly the concern of the Government to see that the industrial machinery is not wasting capital and labor in surplus production and breaking down a system of private enterprise so that more unemployment and more common burdens will be created.

If the system of private enterprise is to be preserved, it should be abundantly clear that the excesses of competition and the excesses of profit-making must be prevented by social discipline. If this can be worked out by the cooperation of agriculture and trade and industry by associations of common interest and a coordinating supervision of public authority, we shall be able to preserve the maximum of private initiative and individual liberty which is possible in the complexities of modern industrial civilization.

Planning and organization are necessary. To the full extent of the ability of private business to do this job, there should be utilized the trained capacity of those experienced in production and distribution. But it should be amply demonstrated by this time that we cannot leave the job wholly to chance and private experimentation. The interplay of competition offers the best means of determining what wages can be paid, what prices can be charged, what volume of production can be absorbed. But an entirely unregulated, anarchistic competition in money making provides no incentives for any cooperative activities except the association of groups of special interest to maintain selfish controls of one section of trade or industry, so that a well-organized few may profit temporarily at the expense of the disorganized many.

In ancient days there was a crude effort to administer justice through devices known as a "trial by ordeal or combat." If a man could carry a red-hot iron, or walk barefoot over red-hot plowshares, he would be adjudged innocent of an offense charged, or the accuser and accused might be called upon to fight each other. Behind these forms of trial lay the superstition that somehow Divine Providence would set aside natural laws to protect the innocent. The hot iron would not harm him. The stronger combatant might succumb to the superhuman power given to his weaker, but righteous, adversary.

We have risen above these superstitions in our administration of political justice. But we still seem to cherish the superstition that somehow in the field of economic conflict we can subject the right-minded and public-spirited man to the ordeal of meeting a red-hot ruthless competition, and justice will triumph. We still seem to cherish the illusion that, in a mere trial by combat, regardless of the weapons and strength of the unrighteous, somehow the righteous will triumph and the good of society will be served.

We glorify today the independence of the man who in business will not submit to social discipline; and the public often credits the big sweatshop operator and the little merchant alike with fighting the battle of individualism; and so we have arguments over writing a code under which the sweatshop owner must pay decent wages, and under which the big competitor cannot put the little merchant out of business by underselling him with the cheap products of the sweatshop, or with destructive price cutting in sales of standard brands.

If there were a hundred crimes that could be committed in the name of political liberty, there are a thousand now being committed in the name of economic liberty. The individual who is a true lover of liberty in the twentieth century is not the man who insists on maintaining a theoretical freedom to ruin himself and his fellow men by unrestrained self-seeking. The true lover of liberty in this century is the man who is ready and willing to look beyond a temporary advantage, which he may have in the unrestrained use or control of property rights, and see that in the end he and his associates cannot prosper and find happiness by destroying the opportunities of the masses of the people to enjoy a secure and comfortable livelihood.

Those who would enjoy liberty must set themselves free from the miseries of their fellow men. They cannot escape them permanently by building country homes or secluding themselves in the upper stories of towering skyscrapers. They can only set themselves free from enslavement to the civilization they are building by making it a civilization of freedom for the masses of the people. Then they will be able to walk the streets with that comfort and happiness which is only found in those who know that their lives have been devoted to a genuine and recognized service to their fellow men.

These lovers of liberty will be essentially individualists, working for their own satisfaction in their own lives and for the contribution which they can make to the lives of other individuals. But, in their understanding of the wisdom of the One who said, "Whosoever will be great among you, shall be your minister", they will be reconstructed individualists.

ANALYSIS OF N. R. A. BILL BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an analysis of the N. R. A. bill by Arthur Sears Henning, which was published in the Chicago Tribune of April 1.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune of Apr. 1, 1935]

The bill fails to cure the defects of the present act, including delegation of legislative power to the President, invasion of the authority of the States over intrastate commerce, nullification of the antitrust laws through price fixing, production control, and oppression of small enterprise, and the burden of a mountainous bureaucracy to rule business.

CHARGE LEGALISTIC COVERING UP

The bill, it is asserted, not only would perpetuate these defects but by a plethora of legalistic phrases would protect them from examination and decision by the courts, legalize the present extralegal and illegal activities of the N. R. A., and circumvent the numerous court decisions holding the act unconstitutional. A summary of the analysis follows:

1. Delegation of legislative power to the President: The Supreme Court's decision in the oil cases the bill seeks to circumvent by enumerating 13 so-called "standards" under which the President is authorized to act in improving codes and agreements, in imposing enforced codes, and in making regulations. These standards are simply a rewording, with decorative elaboration, of almost the exact provisions of the section in the present statute, which was found insufficient by the Supreme Court in the oil cases. They are so broad and indefinite as to be meaningless. They offer so wide a range as to impose no limitation on the President's power. They are based on inconsistent and conflicting economic theories. If anything, they broaden the President's power.

MOCK CONSTITUTIONAL LIMITS

2. Invasion of the power of the States over intrastate commerce: In order to meet the many decisions of lower Federal courts that the N. I. R. A. and particular codes are unconstitutional because of their attempt to regulate intrastate commerce, the new draft contains a wordy definition as to what trades or industries are eligible for codes. On its face the definition seems to relate to interstate commerce. Buried in it, however, are phrases which make the constitutional limitations a mockery.

For example, it is not necessary that a trade or industry be carried on in interstate commerce to be subject to the imposition of a code under the new draft. It is enough if its volume of employment, or of sales, or its use of materials shipped in interstate commerce are such as substantially to affect interstate commerce. This is not a contraction of the present statute as construed by the courts. It is a vast enlargement of it. Under this definition there is not a retail trade or a local business which is not subject to the imposition of a code.

WOULD CURB COURTS' POWERS

That is not all. Under our constitutional system of government it is for the courts to decide whether or not Congress has exceeded its power to regulate interstate commerce. The new draft attempts to take this power from the courts and give it to the President. The President, through agencies which he may create and discontinue at will, is to have power to make findings as to whether a particular trade or industry affects interstate commerce so as to be eligible for a code.

"This device has a Machiavellian complexion," says the memorandum. "If it succeeds, the Federal courts cease to be the guardians of the Constitution, and the President will be the judge of his own power. All real barriers to a dictatorship will have been swept away."

PERMITS CONTROL OF PRICES

3. The nullification of the antitrust laws: The new draft contains "a pious provision" which seems to forbid the promotion or sanction of monopolies or practices destructive of fair competition, including price fixing and production control, but is followed by clauses which specifically permit control of prices, production, or distribution on mere findings by the President that they are necessary for certain purposes.

4. The new delegation of judicial powers: The present statute confers no judicial power on the President or on any agency created by him under the statute. None of the agencies set up under the N. I. R. A. has any power to try a man for alleged violation of a code, or to find him guilty, or to punish him. The only legal method of ending code violations under the present statute is by criminal or injunction proceedings in the Federal courts, or by proceedings before the Federal Trade Commission to obtain a cease and desist order.

GIVES POWER TO PRESIDENT

The new draft gives the President specific power (which the present statute does not) to make regulations "to secure compliance with codes and agreements approved"; "to make reasonable provision for the promotion and maintenance of codes and agreements * * * by means of distinctive insignia or labels" * * * or by other means. Since earlier provisions give the President unlimited power to set up agencies to effectuate the policy of the act, he is virtually authorized to set up tribunals for the trial of code violations.

The boycott of a concern not having the Blue Eagle is specifically legalized by this provision: "The President may regulate the distribution, use, and display of such insignia or labels, in order that purchasers and consumers of goods and services may be assisted in supporting the standards of fair competition provided for in this title."

The new draft gives the President specific power (which the present statute does not) to require departments and agencies of the United States to purchase from persons complying with such codes or agreements.

CAN ACCEPT COMPROMISE FINES

One of the most ingenious contrivances in the new draft for escaping the courts is the power given in section 12 (B) to any agency created by the President under the act, to compromise the liability of an alleged code violator, civil or criminal, or both, upon payment of an as yet unspecified sum of money to that agency and upon entry of a consent decree against him.

Still another contrivance is that provided for the case where an employee claims that his employer has violated any provision of the code relating to minimum wages or maximum hours of labor. This claim may be tried by the agency set up by the President, which agency is given power to find the facts and the amount of damage, and to enter an order directing the violator to pay such damage to the employee on or before a date to be fixed by the agency.

There is provision for appeal to the courts, but only if the employer does not pay within 6 months, and the power of the court to set aside the agency's order is closely limited, since the draft provides "that the findings and the order of such agency shall be prima facie evidence of the facts found therein."

LEGALIZES CODE ASSESSMENTS

5. Code authorities and assessments: The present statute makes no provision either for establishing code authorities or for obtaining money to meet the salaries and expenses of these elaborate establishments. Nevertheless, under most of the codes, authorities were set up, which promptly proceeded to assess members of the trade large sums of money with the approval of the N. R. A. It has been an open secret that "the N. R. A. attorneys were privately very anxious over this procedure, which they knew to be without lawful justification, and perhaps an unconstitutional delegation of taxing power."

The new draft legalizes both the code authorities and the assessment. It leaves room for imposing a code authority on a trade or an industry not composed of representatives of that trade or industry.

Any code prescribed or approved under the new draft may require persons subjected thereto to make equitable and proportionate contribution to the expenses necessary for the administration of such code. Failure to pay this tax becomes a crime punishable by heavy fines under the act, and every day the failure to pay continues constitutes a separate offense.

MAKES EXTENSION MANDATORY

6. Forced continuation of the codes: Most of the codes specifically provide that they are to terminate June 15, 1935, or some other date prior to the lapse of the existing statute. Most trades and industries went into the codes on the distinct understanding that the codes were to be of limited duration.

The new draft provides that all codes now in effect shall continue in effect for 90 days after June 15, 1935, and impliedly gives the President power to continue them even further.

7. Miscellaneous: The machinery for imposing forced codes on trades and industries is vastly strengthened. Very little remains of the conception of a voluntary code. As the result of a hearing on a proposed voluntary code, the President may impose an involuntary code entirely against the wishes of those who have presented the voluntary code.

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOOD, DRUGS, AND COSMETICS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein, to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and for other purposes.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be considered for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Clerk will state the first amendment reported by the committee.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce was, on page 1, line 8, to strike out "Sec." and insert "Section 201."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 3, after the word "confectionery", to insert the words "chewing gum", so as to make the paragraph read:

(a) The term "food" includes all substances and preparations used for, or entering into the composition of, food, drink, confectionery, chewing gum, or condiment for man or other animals.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to ask the Senator from New York just what is the occasion for the introduction of chewing gum into the bill and whether or not he has ever heard of any chewing gum which was injurious to health?

Mr. COPELAND. In reply to the Senator from Missouri, let me state that there are a great many chewing gums on the market which contain laxatives, others which contain thyroid used for slenderizing purposes, and other drugs are found in chewing gum, as well. Therefore, it was deemed wise to include this language.

Mr. CLARK. Would they not come within the ordinary definition of drugs as well as the definition of chewing gum? I have no objection to the amendment except that I am rather suspicious of new amendments after the committee reported the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. This was in the bill as it went from the committee.

Mr. CLARK. Certainly it was not considered by the committee. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and I both insisted on taking up the amendments one at a time, but were overruled by the chairman and the committee. Therefore, I feel it necessary to ask an explanation of the committee amendments as we come to them.

Mr. COPELAND. In view of the fact that there are chewing gums which contain laxatives and other medicinal substances and others which contain thyroid for slenderizing purposes, in order that such chewing gums might be reached, it was determined that the best way of doing it is by including them under the food item.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, if it be true that chewing gum contains medicinal qualities, it seems to me it ought to be included under the drug item rather than under the food item. It is inserted here as a food.

Mr. COPELAND. I did not mention another matter, which is that today we are hearing so much about vitamins. The vitamins are food substances, and we thought it quite unfair to the public to have any false advertising of a product which is really a food and which certain chewing gums include among its constituents.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not hear the Senator's amendment read, but does it describe what chewing gum we can afford to chew and what we cannot?

Mr. COPELAND. No; the bill has not gone quite that far.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to know whether I have to abandon some brands I have been using.

Mr. COPELAND. I think the Senator is perfectly safe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 10, after the word "or", to strike out the words "supplements thereto" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "any supplement to any of them", so as to make the clause read:

All substances and preparations recognized in the United States Pharmacopoeia, Homeopathic Pharmacopoeia of the United States, or National Formulary, or any supplement to any of them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 12, after the word "the", to insert the word "diagnosis" and a comma, so as to make the clause read:

All substances, preparations, and devices intended for use in the diagnosis, cure, mitigation, treatment, or prevention of disease in man or other animals.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York how he can reconcile the language of this section and the language of the amendment with the common, ordinary acceptation of the English language. In other words, here he says it is proper to describe as a drug "all substances, preparations, and devices intended for use in the diagnosis, cure, mitigation, treatment, or prevention of disease in man or other animals." In other words, if a man has invented a shoulder brace, a purely mechanical device, which he claims will straighten a man's shoulders and expand his chest and make for his health, according to the definition contained in this paragraph it has to be described as a drug and treated in law as a drug.

I should like to ask the Senator from New York to justify any such misuse of common, ordinary English terms.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from New York would have no objection to the proposal about the particular devices mentioned by the Senator. But there are on the market a great many devices which are offered for use, and citizens are exploited, believing that they can be cured of all sorts of ailments by the use of them. For example, there is such a thing as a radium belt carrying a disk alleged to contain radium; it is claimed that if the Senator from Missouri should wear that belt he would never have appendicitis or gall-bladder disease or perhaps any other ailment.

Mr. CLARK. The language the Senator from New York has employed in the bill is broad enough to cover any device of which the Food and Drug Bureau of the Agricultural Department chooses to take jurisdiction. The point I am making is that if the devices ought to be outlawed, they ought to be outlawed, and I have no objection to that; but to maintain that a purely mechanical device is a drug and to be treated as a drug in law and in logic and in lexicography is a palpable absurdity, in my opinion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. COPELAND. Just a moment! I am perfectly willing to have Senators go to the fundamentals of the bill and to make any just criticisms which may be passed upon the language employed; but if we are now to have every word in the bill attacked, I think it is calamitous and captious.

Mr. CLARK. Speaking for myself alone, I have no disposition to attack every word in the bill; but we are legislating on a very important matter. As I see it, what the Senator from New York is doing in this particular case is the same thing as if the Congress of the United States should attempt to say by law that calling a sheep's tail a leg would make it a leg. In other words, the Senator from New York in this language is attempting to define a wholly mechanical device as a drug. I say it is bad legislation; that if he desires to legislate against these mechanical devices he ought to do it in the open instead of by indirection and attempting to define as a drug something which palpably is not a drug.

Mr. COPELAND. The matter before us relates to the use of such devices in diagnosis of disease. The question of whether the word "devices" shall be used is not now under consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment was declared lost and therefore the amendment is not now before the Senate. Does the Senator from New York desire to move a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was rejected?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LOGAN. What amendment is it that was rejected?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment for the information of the Senator from Kentucky.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment was, on page 2, line 12, after the word "the", to insert the word "diagnosis" and a comma, so as to make the clause read:

All substances, preparations, and devices intended for use in the diagnosis, cure, mitigation, treatment, or prevention of disease in man or other animals.

Mr. LOGAN. Then, as I understand, the amendment we rejected was not the part of the bill using the word "devices." That is not the amendment at all which we rejected, but the amendment which we rejected was to insert the word "diagnosis."

Mr. CLARK. The Senator is correct. The question was on the rejection of the amendment in line 12, page 2, inserting the word "diagnosis." Under the agreement heretofore entered into by the Senate it is necessary to consider committee amendments first. Therefore, it is not now in order to move to strike out something already in the bill. The amendment which was rejected was for the purpose of extending the scope applied by the word "devices." I am opposed to extending the scope applied to the word "devices", and at the proper time I shall move to strike out the word "devices." That seems to me the logical thing to do.

Mr. COPELAND. I have no objection to the Senator doing that at the proper time, but this language relates wholly to the extension of the amendment to include the word "diagnosis."

Mr. CLARK. That is true; but if we keep the word "devices" in the bill I am opposed to extending its application, as the Senator from New York probably is.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Florida. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. CLARK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

During the roll call,

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, we cannot hear the responses. We can not hear anything.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas makes the point of order that there is disorder in the Chamber, and that the clerk cannot hear the answers to the roll call. Senators will please preserve order.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BULKLEY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], who is necessarily absent. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. METCALF. I inquire if the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. METCALF. Having a general pair with the Senator from Maryland, and not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. LOGAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who is necessarily detained from the Senate, and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. McADOO. I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON]. I am informed that if present, he would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

I wish further to announce that my colleague [Mrs. CARAWAY] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are detained on account of illness.

I desire further to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]; and

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL].

I am not advised how any of these Senators would vote, if present.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] is absent on account of illness.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] is necessarily detained. If present, he would vote "yea."

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] is absent on account of death in his family.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] is unavoidably absent. I am not advised how he would vote on this question if present.

Mr. MCNARY. I desire again to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent because of illness.

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—46

Adams	Copeland	McAdoo	Sheppard
Ashurst	Costigan	McNary	Shipstead
Austin	Couzens	Maloney	Steiwer
Barbour	Fletcher	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Barkley	Frazier	Neely	Thomas, Utah
Bilbo	Gerry	Norris	Trammell
Black	Glass	Nye	Vandenberg
Brown	Harrison	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Bulow	Hayden	Pittman	Wagner
Capper	Logan	Reynolds	Walsh
Connally	Lonergan	Robinson
Coolidge	Long	Russell

NAYS—29

Bachman	Cutting	Hastings	Radcliffe
Bailey	Dickinson	Hatch	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Dieterich	King	Townsend
Borah	Donahey	McGill	Truman
Burke	George	McKellar	White

NOT VOTING—20

Bone	Duffy	Lewis	Pope
Bulkley	Gibson	McCarran	Schall
Caraway	Johnson	Metcalf	Smith
Carey	Keyes	Norbeck	Tydings
Davis	La Follette	Overton	Wheeler

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, for the benefit of Senators who were not in the Chamber when this amendment was discussed a little while ago I should like briefly to summarize the effect of the amendment.

The effect of the amendment is to declare by Federal law the scales used by a physician to test the weight of patients in connection with a diagnosis to be a drug and make the scales subject to the jurisdiction of the Food and Drug Administration of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to state the effect of this amendment.

There are on the market certain electrical devices. A man takes hold of the handles of the machine, and the indicator spins around. It stops at "appendicitis", or it stops at "meningitis", or it stops somewhere else, indicating that the procedure diagnoses the ailment. Such a device is manifestly a fraud upon society.

That is what the amendment is designed to deal with. It has no relation whatever to scales used in a physician's office.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. CLARK. Such a device as the Senator has described should be outlawed; but it should be outlawed in terms which accurately describe it. Does the Senator contend that an alleged electrical device on which a man hangs by his hands, and on which a needle goes around to a certain point, is a drug?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, at the proper time the Senator from Missouri may offer an amendment dealing with this subject.

Mr. CLARK. I ask the Senator, Is that a drug?

Mr. COPELAND. "For the purposes of this act," to quote the bill, such devices are drugs.

Mr. CLARK. Why does it have to be? Why cannot this bill outlaw the thing itself, instead of calling it a drug and then outlawing it?

Mr. COPELAND. Let the Senator from Missouri at the proper time bring in an amendment to the whole clause. I know he is opposed to any classification of a device as a drug; but it is so classified as a drug "for the purposes of the act", in order that it may be so rated and dealt with for the protection of society.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am not going to continue the discussion. It is absurd and wicked to exploit the public by the sale of devices which are alleged, among other absurd claims, to have the power to make a diagnosis of disease; and that is the question before us. Later, when the Senator from Missouri brings in an amendment regarding the whole question of devices, we may consider that amendment on its merits; but certainly no Senator desires to have a man paying $5 for the privilege of putting his hands on a device and seeing the needle swing around, allegedly indicating that he has disease of the gall bladder. To prevent such an absurdity is what this amendment is intended to do.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I understand correctly, what we are about to vote on is whether or not the committee amendment inserting the word "diagnosis" shall be adopted.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho will state the point of order.

Mr. BORAH. The point of order is that there is not order in the Chamber. We literally cannot hear what is going on over on the other side of the Chamber, by reason of the noise in other parts of the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken. The Chair time and again has requested Senators to preserve order.

Mr. BORAH. The point of order is well taken, but it has not yet been carried out.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I suggest that the Sergeant at Arms be summoned to the Senate Chamber and that he be directed to preserve order in the Chamber. It is an abuse of privilege for Senators to insist on carrying on conversations on the floor to the confusion of those who are trying to carry on the proceedings of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator move that the Chair call the Sergeant at Arms to enforce order in the Chamber?

Mr. ROBINSON. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms is instructed by the Chair to carry out the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I suggest that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed by the Chair to approach those who are responsible for the disorder and instruct them that they must retire from the Chamber, and, if they fail to do so, bring them before the Chair for proper proceedings.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair requests the Sergeant at Arms to appear in the Senate.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I think we are being a little bit too severe on our recalcitrant Members. I think that is a little severe. I would rather forgive them and trust them to behave themselves from now on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair requests the Sergeant at Arms to appear in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is all right to be humorous about these things, but those of us who are serious and wish to carry on business ought to have the right and the opportunity to do so. I insist that the Sergeant at Arms be in attendance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proceedings will suspend until the Sergeant at Arms appears in the Senate. [After a pause.]

Mr. ROBINSON. Is there a Deputy Sergeant at Arms who might be availed of?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ask whether there is a Deputy Sergeant at Arms who might be available.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I move that a committee of three be appointed to search for the Sergeant at Arms. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Do I still have the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. What can I do with it? [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has had great experience in that matter. The Chair is not called on to reply. [After a pause.]

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, as the Sergeant at Arms does not seem to be present, I suggest that the Senate proceed with its deliberations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wanted to inquire further of the Senator from New York. If I understand the status of the amendment now under consideration, it does not involve the use of the word "devices" on line 11 at all.

Mr. COPELAND. It does not.

Mr. BARKLEY. The word "devices" is already there, as they may be intended to be used in the cure, mitigation, treatment, or prevention of disease, and the word "diagnosis" merely adds to their uses, namely, their use in looking into a situation prior to the time when the cure or mitigation shall begin?

Mr. COPELAND. That is right.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Under subsection (2) of subdivision (b) of the bill, on page 2, as it now stands, it is proposed to declare by law that "all substances, preparations, and devices intended for use in the cure, mitigation, treatment, or prevention of disease in man or other animals", shall be declared drugs.

The effect of the proposed amendment is as I stated a moment ago. Under the language of the bill as it stands, Congress would declare that all devices used for the cure, mitigation, treatment, or prevention of disease in man or other animals would be considered drugs, but it would not declare that such a thing as an ordinary set of scales, used for weighing a patient as a preliminary to a diagnosis, was a drug. The effect of the amendment would add scales and other devices used only in a diagnosis to the classification of drugs.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand, whether any of these devices, so far as they cover mechanical means set up for one medical purpose or another, should be in the bill, is another matter. I understand that the use of the word "diagnosis" proceeds on the theory that before one begins to cure or treat anybody he ought to find out what is the matter with him.

Mr. CLARK. But the amendment would add an entirely new class to the list of drugs. In other words, a scale would not be a drug without this amendment, but by the adoption of the amendment a scale would automatically be made a drug by act of Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. There are many scales which are drugs on the market so far as they report anything reliable with reference to the weight of man or beast. But I do not see any objection to the use of the word "diagnosis" in this connection, even though it might be desirable to strike out the word "devices" as including things other than actual drugs.

Mr. CLARK. I am opposed to enacting an absurdity. It is absurd to declared a device a drug to begin with, and it is still more absurd to declare such a device as a scale a drug.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the word "devices" is to be used with reference to the treatment of people, or the mitigation of their diseases, or the cure of people of whatever diseases they have, it ought not to be outlawed insofar as it may assist in the ascertainment of a disease of which one ought to be cured.

Mr. CLARK. In other words, the Senator's argument amounts to this, that if a man testified that a horse was 17 feet high instead of 17 hands high, he ought then to increase it and say, "I meant 25 feet."

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think that is a fair assumption at all, because that old adage about a man saying that a horse is 17 feet high and saying that he sticks to his story has no application here, it seems to me.

Mr. CLARK. This is simply an extension, instead of sticking to it.

Mr. BARKLEY. If we are to include "devices" at all as drugs for the cure of people, or for the mitigation of their diseases, or for the treatment of their diseases, if a device is a drug, which it may or may not be—there are some devices which are drugs; there may be others purely mechanical in character, which may not be drugs, as we understand that term—if they are to be used at all, it seems to me they ought to be used as much for finding out what is the matter with a patient as for treatment.

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator have any doubt that under the committee amendment as proposed an ordinary set of scales would be considered a drug, if the Bureau of Food and Drugs of the Department of Agriculture chose to hold it to be so?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know about an ordinary pair of scales or other device for ascertaining how much a man weighs.

Mr. CLARK. For use in making a diagnosis.

Mr. BARKLEY. Getting on a pair of scales and finding out what one weighs does not necessarily reveal anything with reference to disease. It may be that by the insertion of the word "diagnosis" we will protect many people from any treatment at all, or any cure, because the diagnosis may disclose that there is nothing the matter with them.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to state to the Senator from Kentucky, in regard to what the Senator from New York has said, that, so far as I am concerned, I am entirely in sympathy with providing by law against the use of such devices as the Senator from New York has described. It is no argument in favor of such language as this, such misuse of the English language, to say that these devices ought to be outlawed and the public protected against them.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not concerned so much about the use of devices, but I should like to have a diagnosis before I am cheated.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, frankly, this language was embarrassing to the committee, to those who originally framed the bill and have worked on it all these months. It was recommended in some of the hearings that we should have a special and separate provision in the act to protect against these evils. But, by and large, the testimony of the witnesses indicated that since the language is so clear——

Mr. ROBINSON. I again rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senate is not in order, and it is impossible to hear Senators who are speaking.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas has suggested that there is disorder in the galleries. The Chair is of that opinion, and the Chair has observed that the visitors who are constantly being brought in by the guides of the Capitol are causing most of the disturbance. Order must be preserved in the galleries, and conversation in the galleries must cease or the Chair will be compelled to order that the public galleries be closed.

So far as the floor of the Chamber is concerned, the present occupant of the Chair knows that every Senator is familiar with the rule of the Senate regarding conversation and noise in the Chamber, and the Chair is satisfied that, on reflection, the point of order made by the Senator from Arkansas will be respected.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, we are glad to have our visitors; we welcome them here. But we have before us a bill in which the Senate appears to be interested, and it is right that we should be permitted to hear each other across the Chamber. It is not easy to speak so as to be heard in the Senate anyway, but if our guests will bear in mind that it will facilitate work here if they shall cease conversation, I am sure all of us will be happier.

Mr. President, I want to say now that in the various hearings we had, the section of the bill now under discussion was given thorough study.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The public galleries will be cleared. That order does not apply to the private galleries nor to the press galleries. The public galleries will be cleared, and the doorkeepers and the guides will assemble later on in the day in the office of the Sergeant at Arms for a discussion of this matter.

The Senate will suspend while that order is carried out.

(The doorkeepers proceeded to clear the public galleries.)

While the galleries were being cleared,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The doorkeepers will carry out the order of the Chair and clear the public galleries, and then close the public galleries. That order does not apply to the private galleries. The effort of the Chair is to get order by preventing the guides from bringing in one contingent after another, and talking to the visitors while they are in the galleries.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FRAZIER. Some of the doorkeepers seem to think the order of the Chair includes the card galleries. As I understand, the order does not include the card galleries.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not include the card galleries. The order is to clear the public galleries, into and out of which guides are constantly conducting transient visitors. However, unless there is order in the card galleries, those galleries also will be evacuated and the doors closed.

(The public galleries were cleared.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will proceed to the consideration of the amendment of the committee. The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] has the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. We seem to have cleared not only the galleries but the Senate as well. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Brown	Costigan	Glass
Ashurst	Bulkley	Couzens	Gore
Austin	Bulow	Cutting	Guffey
Bachman	Burke	Dickinson	Hale
Bailey	Byrd	Dieterich	Harrison
Bankhead	Byrnes	Donahey	Hastings

Maloney	O'Mahoney	Thomas, Okla.	White
Metcalf	Pittman	Thomas, Utah
Minton	Radcliffe	Townsend
Moore	Reynolds	Trammell

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, before the recess we were discussing page 2 of the bill, specifically the insertion of the word "diagnosis", on line 12, but in general the whole of the subsection, subsection (b). In our committee hearings we had before us witnesses who made the same suggestion which has been made here by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]; it seemed more or less absurd to include in a food and drug bill various "devices" which were intended for use in the cure and treatment of disease. Those matters were considered at length in the public hearings, and it was the consensus that there was no better way than to include in this subparagraph these various devices.

If Senators will read the first line of subparagraph (b)—that is, line 5 of page 2 of the bill—it will be seen that it says—

The term "drug"—

And the word "drug" is put in quotation marks—

for the purposes of this act—

Shall be so-and-so.

Because of the consensus of the evidence it was deemed wise to leave this subsection as written.

The immediate question before us does not relate to the whole subsection. It relates merely to the one matter of including in the prohibition against devices the word "diagnosis".

Mr. President, I practiced medicine for a great many years, and at no time did I regard the scales as a means of diagnosis. I doubt if any reputable physician would so regard them. The sole purpose of including the word "diagnosis" in this subsection was to prohibit the use of devices which are fraudulent on their face, which are used by "traveling doctors" and other so-called "doctors" in their offices, devices which are humbugs, such as the one I have just described, where the patient takes hold of the handle of the machine, then an electric current causes the needle to spin around. Around the dial is marked almost every disease from asthma to zymosis, and when the indicator stops at "liver disease" the diagnosis has been made.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. What causes the indicator to stop at "liver disease"?

Mr. COPELAND. The mechanical device may be so contrived that it is a good deal like a gambling device, when the foot presses the button below it is all settled. It is a humbug on its face.

Without questioning at all the proposal that devices ought not to be included here, there can be no difference of opinion in the Senate that a machine so fraudulent in its intention when it is used the man who profits from it ought to be brought under the ban of the law. The question is, Does the Senate desire to have continued the use of these humbugs or does the Senate not desire to do so? I have stated the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, in response to what the Senator from New York has said, let me say I have no desire to continue the use of such devices; I have no objection to the Senator defining them in this bill as humbugs, which he has been calling them, and I have no objection to, in fact I would be strongly in favor, of denouncing them as a crime. My objection goes to putting the Congress of the United States in the ridiculous, absurd, and asinine position of defining a purely mechanical device as a "drug."

My objection to this particular amendment is to taking in the bill that ridiculous position and embodying in it such a definition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. CLARK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. BULKLEY. I again announce my general pair with the senior senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] are detained on business of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. I announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are absent because of illness, and that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BACHMAN], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

I desire further to announce the following general pairs: The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL].

I am not advised how any of these Senators would vote if present.

Mr. LOGAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. MCKELLAR (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND]. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], and let my vote stand.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "yea." I repeat the announcement made on the previous vote with regard to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL].

Mr. MCNARY. The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent on account of illness.

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 22, as follows:

YEAS 45

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 14, after the word "food", it is proposed to insert "and cosmetics", so as to make the clause read:

> And (3) all substances, preparations, and devices, other than food and cosmetics, intended to affect the structure or any function of the body.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 18, after the word "preparations", to insert the words "except ordinary toilet and household soap", so as to make the paragraph read:

> (c) The term "cosmetic" includes all substances and preparations, except ordinary toilet and household soap, intended for cleansing, or altering the appearance of, or promoting the attractiveness of, the person.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I say a word about the amendment? It is not the intention of the bill to include, within the definition either of cosmetics or drugs, soaps which are intended and primarily used for ordinary toilet and household purposes. So far as soaps are concerned the bill is meant to deal only with special soaps which are intended and primarily used in the treatment of disease or beautifying the person in the sense that cosmetics are used.

Further, the committee would like to add, after the word "soap" in this amendment, in line 18, the words "and household cleansers."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, how is one to determine, when he goes to a drug store and asks for soap, whether it is ordinary toilet soap or is of an extraordinary character? Is there any line of differentiation known to the public and which would protect the purchaser in the event he happened to make a mistake and got that character of soap which would come within the definition of "cosmetic"?

Mr. COPELAND. I do not think the purchaser will be involved at all.

Mr. KING. But the vendor would.

Mr. COPELAND. If the vendor sold a soap which was alleged to cure eczema or acne or some other disease of the skin, that would not be ordinary household soap. That would be a medicinal soap and would be dealt with as a drug.

Mr. KING. If it should be included as a drug, what pains and penalties would there be for the manufacture or selling of the article, or what limitations would be imposed upon the manufacturer or upon the vendor?

Mr. COPELAND. The manufacturer would be required to state frankly upon the label that it was intended to do so-and-so. Then he would run the gantlet of the administrators of the measure. If his statement is truthful, and supported by substantial scientific or medical opinion, he would be permitted to sell it. The purpose of the exemption is to make it clear that those soaps which the Senator in his household and I in mine use, are not affected by the bill.

Mr. KING. I have so much confidence in the Senator from New York that even if the bill were very revolutionary and shocked my preconceived views, I should be inclined to support it; but this measure, which I have hastily read since I came into the Chamber a few moments ago, contains such enormous powers, so much authority vested in bureaus and in official agencies, that it does shock me and I am afraid it will result in abuses and in a reign of terror, not only to farmers and those who purchase food supplies, but those who are engaged in the manufacture of pharmaceuticals and things essential to the welfare and health of the people.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. I do not yield to the Senator from Utah or anyone else in my confidence in the integrity and high purposes of the Senator from New York, but the bill does not contain any definition of what are ordinary toilet and household soaps and what are extraordinary toilet and household soaps. The bill would not be administered by the Senator from New York. If it were to be administered by the Senator from New York I should feel very certain that the terms herein used would be employed in the way in which he describes them to us in the Senate. However, the bill would not be administered by the Senator from New York, and no man can tell from the bill what are ordinary household toilet soaps and what are ordinary household cleansing preparations, and what are extraordinary household toilet soaps and cleansing preparations.

Furthermore, if any ordinary toilet and household soap or any cleansing soap is detrimental to health and safety, I do not know why it should be excepted. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill to explain why soaps of any sort, or any other sort of cosmetic, should be excepted from the operation of the bill if in fact it is detrimental to health.

Mr. KING. I yield the floor so the Senator from New York may answer the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator from New York would be the last man on earth to interfere with the free use of soap and water. I think if the American people would indulge frequently in the use of soap and water, they would escape most of the diseases which are conveyed by germs.

The provision under discussion is intended to do exactly what it says. We had long discussions with the soap manufacturers. They were worried for fear it might be considered that soap is a cosmetic and that, therefore, it would be brought under the operations of the bill. In order that there might not be such an absurd interpretation of the law by any "bureaucrat" or other person, we have inserted this very language providing that the term "cosmetic" does not apply to ordinary household soap. We discussed the use of the word "ordinary." We tried to find a different word, but finally the soap people and all concerned expressed themselves as satisfied with the word "ordinary", as applied to household soaps.

There are soaps on the market which, it is claimed, according to the label, will cure everything from ingrowing toenail to disease of the brain. That is the kind of soap we want to include in the operation of the bill and make certain that the public is not exploited. The ordinary household soaps and household cleansers are clearly beyond the purposes of the bill and ought to be definitely excluded, as they are by this language.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I desire to offer a substitute for the committee amendment. I move as a substitute for the committee amendment to insert the following words:

Except soaps and household cleansers for which no medicinal or curative qualities are claimed by the manufacturers or retailers in labels or advertising.

Mr. COPELAND. I have no objection to the substitution of that language. I am glad to accept it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 18, in lieu of the committee amendment, after the word "preparations", it is proposed to insert the words "except soaps and household cleansers for which no medicinal or curative qualities are claimed by the manufacturers or retailers in labels or advertising", so as to make the paragraph read:

(c) The term "cosmetic" includes all substances and preparations, except soaps and household cleansers for which no medicinal or curative qualities are claimed by the manufacturers or retailers in labels or advertising, intended for cleansing, or altering the appearance of, or promoting the attractiveness of, the person.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to; and, without objection, the amendment, as amended, is agreed to. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 3, line 18, after the word "disseminated", to insert the words "to the public", so as to make the paragraph read:

(j) The term "advertisement" includes all representations of fact or opinion disseminated to the public in any manner or by any means other than by the labeling.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 23, after the words "branch of the", to strike out the words "healing art" and insert in lieu thereof the words "medical profession", so as to make the sentence read:

The term "medical profession" means the legalized professions of the healing art; and the term "medical opinion" means the opinion, within their respective fields, of the practitioners of any branch of the medical profession—

And so forth.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I submit an inquiry to the Senator from New York at this point, though it is not relevant to the amendment just stated? There is in the bill a clear distinction between interstate and intrastate, but does the bill so commingle them into a compound mass as that acts which are clearly and confessedly intrastate may be brought within some of the punitive provisions of the law on the theory that they are interstate?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am glad to answer the question of the Senator from Utah. As I recall it, there is only one instance where that criticism might be raised. That relates to the inspection of factories. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] will at the proper time, if I understood him correctly in our conversation yesterday, present an amendment to the committee amendment or a substitute therefor.

That question arose in this connection: Where there are factories making products which might be contaminated in the making and where that contamination, which may be bacterial, is not to be found as the article goes into commerce, provision is made in the bill for inspection of the factory. In our bill as we have it before us, a reasonable request may be made by the Secretary; and if that request is refused, then when the article enters interstate commerce a fine may be imposed.

The Senator from Michigan at the right time will argue that that is not the right way to deal with the matter; that there should be an inspection so guarded that the secret processes, if there are any, may be protected; that the penalty ought to attach at the factory, so that when the article gets into interstate commerce there will be no interference with its free passage in interstate commerce. I think I am right in saying to Senators that as I recall now, that is the only instance where we attempt to enter the State.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, while this is perhaps premature, the Senator having alluded to section 707, subdivision (a), under the head of "Factory inspection", I am prompted to make comment upon the fact that the words "regulate interstate commerce in food, drugs, and cosmetics, and enforce" are stricken out, and this rather omnibus, uncertain provision is tendered:

In order adequately to protect public health and welfare through enforcement of—

And so forth.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] has correctly stated my intentions when section 707 is reached. I shall then offer a complete substitute for the entire section, which I think undoubtedly will wash away most of the objections the Senator from Utah has in mind.

Mr. COPELAND. May I say that I have seen the substitute; and when we come to that point, if the Senator from Michigan shall offer it, I shall interpose no objection.

Mr. KING. In the light of the statement made by the Senator from Michigan, I shall pretermit any further observations. I am very happy he is addressing himself to the matter; and, while I have the floor, I hope the Senator also will address himself to subdivision (b) on page 36.

Mr. COPELAND. Both of those subdivisions are included in the amendment which is to be proposed.

Mr. KING. I say that because manifestly too much power is given to officials by the provision to which attention has been called.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is entirely correct; and we are going to wipe it all out.

Mr. KING. I shall join the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether he is entirely satisfied with the definition of "medical profession", which I understand we are now about to amend? Will it be uniform throughout the United States?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is it not a fact that in some States there are very much broader provisions of law for the licensing of medical practitioners than there are in others?

Mr. COPELAND. That is true, and we have provided for that, as the Senator will see if he will turn over the page.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have observed that language, but I doubt whether it covers what I have in mind.

Mr. COPELAND. The definition as drawn we believe fully recognizes the right of the States to determine for themselves, through their control of the medical profession, the character of representations made with regard to drugs coming in interstate commerce for distribution within their own borders.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I realize that; but, again, let me say, that is not the point I have in mind. In one State a chiropractor may be recognized and licensed. Would he not come within the medical profession as defined in this bill?

Mr. COPELAND. He would.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But in another State which does not license chiropractors he would not be permitted to practice?

Mr. COPELAND. Correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then, when we come to the advertising sections of the bill, in the State in which a chiropractor is licensed he could give the "substantial and reliable medical opinion" which would sustain an advertisement which in another State could be sustained only by the opinion of the ordinary physician or surgeon. Is that correct?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. So that we are likely to have a complete lack of uniformity in the enforcement of the advertising features of the bill?

Mr. COPELAND. Nevertheless, we did not feel that we had any right to go into the States and interfere with their privileges to grant licenses. What we had in mind here more than anything else was to meet another practice; it is a very common thing to get men living in Germany or Austria or somewhere else to give this so-called "substantial medical opinion." It was our desire to make clear, as stated here, that—

> The term "medical opinion" means the opinion, within their respective fields, of the practitioners of any branch of the medical profession the practice of which is licensed by law in the State or Territory where any drug to which such opinion relates is held, sold, or distributed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes; but section 601, on page 25, which defines false advertisement, provides that—

> Any representation concerning any effect of a drug shall be deemed to be false under this paragraph if—

as amended by the committee—

> such representation is not sustained by demonstrable scientific facts or substantial and reliable medical opinion.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Under that provision, therefore, the opinion of a physician that would be acceptable in one State would not be acceptable in another.

Mr. COPELAND. Suppose the case were brought in Wyoming. I do not know what the law is there; but suppose the Wyoming law permitted a chiropractor to practice. His testimony, then, as regards a product seized there, would be on a par with the testimony of the so-called "regular" physician.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes. I am not thinking so much of the product seized as I am of the type of advertising. Most of this advertising for the ordinary patent medicine originates in the big cities. It originates in New York, or it originates in Chicago, and it is disseminated throughout the United States by large advertising concerns. It is obvious, Mr. President, that there will be a great lack of uniformity in the sort of advertising that would be permitted unless a definition of "medical profession" can be obtained which will be uniform throughout the United States.

Mr. COPELAND. May I say to the Senator that there is no provision under our Federal law for licensing physicians.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I know it.

Mr. COPELAND. So we had to go back to the States. If the product should be seized in a jurisdiction where the chiropractor or some other practitioner is recognized, we should have to accept his testimony as that of a "reliable" medical practitioner. Perhaps I personally might not be in harmony with that view; but I did not see, and I do not now see, how we can escape what we are doing here.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senate, on its responsibility under the Constitution, has just solemnly declared that a device is a drug, even though it be a purely mechanical device; and, of course, that includes the mechanical devices used by chiropractors.

Under the definition of the term "medical profession" the bill says:

> The term "medical profession" means the legalized professions of the healing art; and the term "medical opinion" means the opinion, within their respective fields, of the practitioners of any branch of the medical profession, the practice of which is licensed by law in the State or Territory where any drug, to which such opinion relates, is held, sold, or distributed.

Now we come over a little further to the advertising section; and there reference is again made to opinions borne out by the medical profession, and, as to drugs, to the definition of them in any official compendium.

On page 4, the term "official compendium" is defined as follows:

> The term "official compendium" means the United States Pharmacopœia, Homœopathic Pharmacopœia of the United States, National Formulary, or any supplement to any of them, official at the time any drug to which the provisions thereof relate is introduced into interstate commerce.

That means, and can only mean, that since obviously, as a matter of common knowledge, the devices used by chiropractors are not included as drugs in the official compendiums as defined—the United States Pharmacopœia, the Homœpathic Pharmacopœia of the United States, the National Formulary, or any supplement to any of them—therefore those devices are declared drugs outlawed under this measure.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri, who is usually so accurate, has forgotten that on page 2, line 5, we specifically wrote into the bill that—

> The term "drug", for the purposes of this act and not for the regulation of the legalized practice of the healing art—

And so forth. There is not anything in the bill which prohibits the chiropractor or the naturopath or the mechanical therapeutist, whatever he may be, from making use in his office of any device which he, as a legal practitioner in his State, deems it right to use.

Mr. CLARK. But let me ask the Senator another question. The provisions of this bill—and there are many of them—where medical opinion is referred to, and where the term "official compendium" as going to the proper use of drugs is referred to, and the definition of a device in subsection (b), on page 2, declaring that that is a drug, set that device outside the list of drugs which might possibly be authorized in the official compendium referred to on page 4.

Mr. COPELAND. May I say to the Senator that at the right time, if he will present some substitute for lines 11 to 16, on page 2, we shall be glad to consider it; for, of course, we tried to use language which would more suitably cover the matter which the Senator has in mind.

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator from New York that I shall be very glad to do that if sufficient opportunity is afforded to draft an amendment which to my mind will cover that matter. I should have been glad to do it in the committee if opportunity had ever been afforded in the committee to take up any particular draft of the bill, paragraph by paragraph and section by section, before it was reported.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am compelled to leave the Chamber for a time, and I ask the Senator from New York to pass over section 303, in case it shall be reached, until I can return. It appears on page 10 of the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. I shall be very happy to do that. The Senator refers to the provision relating to standards?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 3, line 24.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 7, after the word "supplement", to strike out "thereto" and to insert "to any of them", so as to read:

(l) The term "official compendium" means the United States Pharmacopœia, Homœpathic Pharmacopœia of the United States, National Formulary, or any supplement to any of them, official at the time any drug to which the provisions thereof relate is introduced into interstate commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 9, to insert:

(m) The term "Department" means the Department of Agriculture of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 11, to insert:

(n) The term "Administration" means the Food and Drug Administration of the Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Chapter III—Adulterated food", on page 4, line 21, after the word "substance", to insert "which may render it injurious to health, or which is"; in line 22, after the word "prohibited", to insert "by section 304."

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York explain the purport of that amendment?

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator refers to section 304?

Mr. CLARK. Yes; I should like to know the purpose of its insertion at this place.

Mr. COPELAND. It has largely to do with the introduction of any poison in the spray residue left on fruits. I am an orchardist and, therefore, personally interested. I may say to the Senator that there is nothing in the bill which prohibits an orchardist from using tons or barrels of spray or other substances intended to kill insect pests.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will not the Senator be kind enough to speak so that those in this part of the Chamber may hear?

Mr. COPELAND. I have just stated that there is nothing in the bill which is intended to reach the fruit producer and interfere with him in the application of any sprays or solutions he thinks necessary to kill insect pests or develop a good product.

Some criticism has been raised to section 304 by fruit producers. Of course, we could not go into a State and make regulations, anyway, and there is no attempt to do that; but the purpose of this feature of the bill is to guard Senators and their wives and children, as well as the public generally, against the retention on fruit of poisons in such quantities as to be damaging to health, and that is all; and that, I think, is reasonable. I do not know of any reason why anybody should be permitted to sell in interstate commerce any product of any sort which contains upon it or in it substances which are damaging to health. They cannot do it under the present law, and the public would be even better protected under the proposed law.

My attention having been called to this provision by the Senator from Missouri, I may say that it provides that if any article bears or contains anything "which may render it injurious to health, or which is prohibited by section 304", it shall be deemed to be adulterated.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, there is a committee amendment striking out all of section 304 and inserting a new section. The purpose of my inquiry was to find out from the Senator from New York whether by the committee amendment on page 4 he refers to section 304 as it was originally inserted, or to section 304, which is a committee amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. We are assuming and hoping and praying that these other amendments will be agreed to, and the intention is to refer to the new language. Perhaps the Senator would prefer to have the Senate vote on the new language first.

Mr. CLARK. No; I would not, for this reason: I have no objection to the committee amendment on page 4, but the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] has advised me that he has some amendments to offer to the fruit section of the bill which he has not yet prepared, and I did not wish to have this amendment put into the bill without his having an opportunity to offer the amendments to which I have referred.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senate shall adopt the amendment just referred to by the Senator from Missouri, and the Senator from Virginia shall ask for a reconsideration in order that his amendment may be considered in connection with other amendments, I shall have no objection.

Mr. CLARK. That was the only reason for my request. I did not want to have the Senator from Virginia precluded from offering his amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 4, line 22.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 1, after the word "substance", to insert a comma and "or if it is otherwise unfit for food"; in line 3, after the word "filth", to insert a comma and "or whereby it may have been rendered injurious to health"; and in line 8, after the word "may", to strike out "by contamination", so as to read:

SEC. 301. A food shall be deemed to be adulterated—

(a) (1) If it bears or contains any poisonous or deleterious substance which may render it dangerous to health; or (2) if it bears or contains any added poisonous or added deleterious substance which may render it injurious to health, or which is prohibited by section 304, or in excess of the limits of tolerance prescribed by regulations as provided by sections 304, 701, and 703; or (3) if it consists in whole or in part of any filthy, putrid, or decomposed substance, or if it is otherwise unfit for food; or (4) if it has been prepared, packed, or held under insanitary conditions whereby it may have become contaminated with filth, or whereby it may have been rendered injurious to health; or (5) if it is the product of a diseased animal or of an animal which has died otherwise than by slaughter; or (6) if its container is composed of any poisonous or deleterious substances which may render the contents injurious to health.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 21, after the words "ice cream", to strike out "and" and insert a comma and "it shall also be deemed to be adulterated if it"; in line 24, after the word "except", to insert "harmless"; in the same line, after the word "coloring", to insert "harmless", so as to read:

(d) If it is confectionery or ice cream, it shall also be deemed to be adulterated if it bears or contains any alcohol, resinous glaze, or nonnutritive substance except harmless coloring, harmless flavoring, natural gum, and pectin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 4, after the word "containing", to insert "harmless", so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That this paragraph shall not apply to any confectionery or ice cream by reason of its containing less than one-half of 1 percent by volume of alcohol derived solely from the use of flavoring extracts, or to any chewing gum by reason of its containing harmless nonnutritive masticatory substances.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York explain the purpose of the committee amendments in this section?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, subsection (d), on page 5, beginning in line 21, is intended to make clear that if to confectionary or ice cream shall be added alcohol, resinous glaze, or nonnutritive substances, it shall be considered as adulterated.

The Senator will remember that yesterday I exhibited to the Senate a jar of candy, each piece of which contained a metallic substance. I spoke about the Democratic donkey and bedraggled Republican rooster going down the throats of children. This language is to make it clear that the substances which I have named—alcohol, resinous glaze, and nonnutritive substances—shall not be permitted, and other substances are excluded, except harmless coloring, harmless flavoring, natural gum, and pectin.

On the next page, to make clear that there is no thought of prohibiting the use of flavors containing alcohol; it is provided that there shall be simply a limitation on the quantity of alcohol which may be permitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments on page 5, subdivision (d).

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Misbranded Food", on page 6, line 17, after the word "purchaser" to strike out the comma and "or (2) if its contents fall below the standard of fill prescribed by regulations as provided by sections 303, 701, and 703"; so as to read:

SEC. 302. A food shall be deemed to be misbranded—
(a) If its labeling is false or misleading in any particular.
(b) If it is offered for sale under the name of another food.
(c) If it is an imitation of another food, and its label fails to bear, in type of uniform size and prominence, the word "imitation" and, immediately thereafter, the name of the food imitated.
(d) If its container is so made, formed, or filled as to mislead the purchaser.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator explain the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator will turn over the page to subsection (h), beginning on line 3, he will see that the language proposed to be stricken out in these lines to which reference has been made, lines 17, 18, and 19, on page 6, are in a substitute proposed on page 8.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 4, after the word "label", to strike out "to avoid adulteration or misbranding"; in line 7, after the word "readily", to strike out "intelligible to the" and insert "understood by"; and in line 9, after the word "use", to insert a comma and "due consideration being given to the size of the package", so as read:

(f) If any word, statement, or other information required on the label under any provision of this act is not prominently placed thereon in such a manner as to be easily seen and in such terms as to be readily understood by purchasers and users of such articles under customary conditions of purchase and use, due consideration being given to the size of the package.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 20, to strike out:

(h) If it purports to be or is represented as a food for which a standard of quality has been prescribed by regulations as provided by sections 303, 701, and 703, and (1) its label fails to bear a statement of its quality in such terms as the regulations specify, or (2) its quality falls below such standard.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

(h) If it purports to be or is represented as a food for which a standard of quality or fill of container has been prescribed by regulations as provided by sections 303, 701, and 703, and its quality or fill falls below such standard of quality or fill of container and its label fails to bear a statement, in such manner as the regulations specify, showing that it falls below such standard of quality or fill of container.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I should appreciate it if the Senator from New York would explain this amendment. It appears to me that it would give unlimited discretion to the Department of Agriculture, or a bureau thereunder, to prescribe not only the standard of quality but the fill of container. I should like to know what is in contemplation by that expression.

Mr. COPELAND. Yesterday the Senator from New York presented exhibits, among others, a package of macaroni which was slack filled; it contained only two-thirds as much as the package would indicate it to contain. Likewise, there was presented a package of cheese cut across the middle to show that there was simply cheese on top and pastboard underneath. This provision is to protect against that sort of fraudulent practice.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. If I understand the Senator correctly, the purpose of this definition is to say that an article shall be declared misbranded if in fact the representations on the label as to weight and quality are correct, simply because it happens to be contained in a larger package than would be absolutely necessary to contain the article itself.

Mr. COPELAND. This provision is really what the law is now, may I say to the Senator. There is no particular change in the law as it is at present. The Senator will remember that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] asked that the proposed amendment on page 10, section 303, be passed over. The law at present is as follows:

If it be canned food and falls below the standard of quality, condition, and/or fill of container promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture for such canned food and its package or label does not bear a plain and conspicuous statement prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture indicating that such canned food falls below such standard.

That is the law as it is at present.

Mr. CLARK. What I am trying to get at is this: Let us say I am a manufacturer, and I purport to sell breakfast food, and I put in the package half a pound of breakfast food, and write plainly on the label, "This package contains one-half pound of breakfast food", or so many ounces of breakfast food, and it contains exactly what I represent it to contain, but I sell it in a 2-pound container; I am then guilty of misbranding under this section?

Mr. COPELAND. No; not if the manufacturer states the truth on the label.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. It only requires, Mr. President, that the label shall show that the package falls below the standard.

Mr. COPELAND. There is not anything in the bill which prohibits honesty in commercial practice. If a man chooses to put a quart of oatmeal in a barrel and then sell it, if there is a label on there which shows that the package is slack filled and that it contains only a quart of oatmeal, he may do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 15, after the word "ingredient", to strike out "order of predominance by weight"; in line 21, after the word "impracticable", to strike out "because of normal variations in ingredients, or their quantities, usual to good manufacturing or packing practice"; in line 23, after the word "exemptions", to strike out "as to packages of assorted food"; and in line 24, after the word "established", to strike out the comma and "and reasonable variations from the stated order of such ingredients shall be permitted, by regulations promulgated by the Secretary: And provided further, That exemption to compliance with the requirements of subdivision (2) of this paragraph is given to such foods where the common or usual name of each ingredient has been filed with the Secretary in accordance with regulations promulgated by him" and insert "by regulations promulgated by the Secretary", so as to read:

(1) If it is not subject to the provisions of paragraph (g) of this section and its label fails to bear (1) the common or usual name of the food, if any there be, and (2) in case it is fabricated from two or more ingredients the common or usual name of each such ingredient; except that spices, flavors, and colorings, other than those sold as such, may be designated as spices, flavors, and colorings without naming each: Provided, That, to the extent that compliance with the requirements of subdivision (2) of this paragraph is impracticable, exemptions shall be established by regulations promulgated by the Secretary.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York explain what the purpose of that amendment is?

Mr. COPELAND. This paragraph permits the Secretary to provide for exemptions which shall be established by regulations, and at the proper time I am going to propose an addition to that amendment. I might do it now, and then we could have it all at one time.

Mr. CLARK. It seems to me, from the parliamentary standpoint, that now is the proper time to propose an amendment to any committee amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. I send to the desk and ask to have read the language which I propose to add to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the language proposed to be added to the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 9, line 7, after the word "Secretary", it is proposed to substitute a colon for the period and to add:

Provided further, That truly proprietary food listed by the Secretary and not adulterated, otherwise misbranded, or falsely advertised within the meaning of this act shall be exempted from this paragraph.

Mr. CLARK. Where does that modification come?

Mr. COPELAND. At the end of paragraph (i). It continues right on at the end of the paragraph.

Mr. CLARK. After the word "Secretary"?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes. The purpose of that amendment is as follows:

There are a few products on the market, like Worcestershire sauce and other articles which could be mentioned, which are purely proprietary. They are sold only by the one manufacturer. If he submits that product to the Secretary and it is found to be wholesome and not untruthfully branded, not adulterated, there will be no interference with him in the sale of it.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to ask the Senator what is the occasion of striking out the provision of the bill as it was originally introduced, which laid down the rules as a matter of law, leaving the whole subject in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. COPELAND. Let us read the whole proviso and then we will have it all before us:

Provided, That, to the extent that compliance with the requirements of subdivision (2) of this paragraph is impracticable, exemption shall be established by regulations promulgated by the Secretary.

It may be that the package is too small to indicate full compliance; that there is not room on the package for all the language that is needed, so this language permits the Secretary, after he has determined that the article is wholesome and a proper one, still to make an exemption as regards this particular provision of the act.

Mr. CLARK. But is not the effect of this language to lay down a rule of law and then grant the Secretary of Agriculture authority to grant exemptions wherever he pleases, without laying down any conditions on which he may grant the exemptions?

Mr. COPELAND. When we talk about regulations, we have in the proposed bill very definite statements as to how they are to be made. The Secretary decides that regulation is needed. He must then submit that proposal to the Food Standard Committee. The Food Standard Committee says, "Yes; that is worth while considering", and so there is a public hearing where all interested parties may be heard. Then after that, provided a majority of the committee shall agree to the regulation, the regulation is made.

The able Senator from Missouri will recall that after our last hearing there was criticism of the bill because no provision was made for an interested industry or a group of citizens to make an appeal for a new regulation or a change in regulation. Because of that we added language on page 32, line 15, with respect to a disinterested committee set up by the President of the United States and intended to be entirely free from the influences of the Department, that the committee—

Having received from an interested industry or from representatives of the public a request for a new regulation or a change in an existing regulation, either committee, on its own motion, may advise the Secretary of its recommendations for action in accordance with the procedure set up by this section.

In the original bill, which was S. 1944, introduced in June 1933, the Secretary of Agriculture was given absolute power with no appeal from his decision to establish the regulations. But here such exemptions as I have mentioned might by regulation be made.

Mr. CLARK. Let me say to the Senator again, as I have done many times before, that while I consider this bill faulty in many respects, I think it represents a very great advance over the original Tugwell bill as it was prepared by the bureaucrats in the Department of Agriculture and sent up here for passage in 1933.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. As I understand the amendment offered by the Senator, it rather limits and qualifies the broad discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. COPELAND. It does.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is the purpose of it, and I think it is a very good provision. It limits that broad discretion.

Mr. CLARK. It limits it from the scope given to it by the Tugwell bill, but not from the standpoint of existing law.

Mr. FLETCHER. In this bill, after the words "by regulations promulgated by the Secretary", is a proviso, and the proviso restricts the regulation by the Secretary. That, I think, is a good qualification.

Mr. CLARK. Let me ask the Senator from New York one other question on that point. I understand that the amendment which I just heard read from the desk, and which I have not had a chance to examine, provides that the Secretary of Agriculture may exempt from the provisions of the act proprietary foods after the manufacturers have convinced him that they are not adulterated or detrimental to health, and after they have been placed on the list by the Secretary of Agriculture. Why should a distinction be made between proprietary foods and proprietary medicines?

Mr. COPELAND. At the right time the Senator may offer an amendment with regard to that.

Mr. CLARK. I do not care anything about offering an amendment. What I want to find out is why the committee, or the chairman of the committee, makes this distinction. I want to find out if there is any basis for it. In other words, it seems to me that exactly the same arguments advanced against proprietary medicines which are not detrimental to health, and which are not misbranded or adulterated, would apply equally to proprietary foods. For instance, in the case, cited by the Senator, of Ovaltine, it was stated in the book which was the Bible from which the original Tugwell bill was drawn that Ovaltine, while made up of entirely harmless substances, not in any way detrimental to health, was composed of very common substances which could be bought in the market for a fraction of the price charged for Ovaltine.

That is exactly the argument which is almost invariably made against proprietary medicines which are not detrimental to health; that is, that they may not be detrimental to health or may be even beneficial, but are composed of drugs or of substances which may be purchased in the market or at a drug store for very much less than the cost of the proprietary medicine and very much less than the cost, as a matter of fact, of a doctor's prescription.

I will ask the Senator from New York if that statement is not correct, that the same argument applies both to proprietary foods and proprietary medicines, assuming that neither are adulterated or detrimental to health?

Mr. COPELAND. I do not think they are on all fours. Of course, there are a few proprietary foods, such as malted milk and a few other widely advertised baby foods, the components of which are known to everybody in the scientific and medical world. Not one of them has an ingredient that in any way could be an invasion of the public health or detrimental to health. I could not say that of many patent medicines.

Mr. CLARK. But if they are detrimental to health, then, the definition set-up of proprietary foods here would not apply; in other words, why should not there be the same definition of proprietary foods that there is for proprietary medicines, and the same exemption that they be not adulterated or detrimental to health?

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator desires at the right time to offer an amendment providing that the same arrangement as to foods shall apply to patent medicines, he may do so.

Mr. CLARK. I stated to the Senator previously, and I repeat, that I have no particular interest in offering an amendment as to proprietary medicines. What I am trying to find out is the theory on which the chairman of the committee makes one rule as to proprietary foods and another rule as to proprietary medicines.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator really wants me to discuss the matter, though I dislike to take the time of the Senate to do it, I will state that there are many so-called "patent medicines" on the market which are not only fraudulent—which might also be said of some food preparations—because economically it is an absurdity to pay a dollar for what one may buy in a drug store for 15 cents, but there is in patent medicines the possibility of incompatibles, that is, the bringing together of substances which in themselves are harmless but which, when combined, make new chemical combinations which may be very dangerous to health.

Mr. CLARK. Is not that also true of proprietary food?

Mr. COPELAND. I would not say so.

Mr. CLARK. I do not profess to be a chemist, or a food expert, or a medical man of any sort, but I suggest, is it not possible to have proprietary foods made up of elements entirely harmless which, when put together, will make a bad combination?

Mr. COPELAND. No; I would not think so, because there is not that intimate reaction of one substance against another as in drugs and medicine. There cannot be a chemical change in a mixture of two or three foods.

Mr. CLARK. If in the case of foods, such a chemical reaction existed, would not the foods then fall within the class of substances detrimental to health?

Mr. COPELAND. No. I want to say to the Senator that I am not enthusiastic enough about this particular amendment to make a fight for it, but there are definite reasons why what he suggests could not be done with drugs. We have tried to set up standards for drugs. We have both the United States Pharmacopœia and the Homeopathic Pharmacopœia. Drug values have been scientifically studied over the years, and very correct standards, in my judgment, have been established. But when there are mixed together some sugar of milk, coco, starch, and some kind of flavoring, and the mixture is given a fanciful name, the only objection to it, from my standpoint, is that it is an economic humbug and not an invasion of health. Those who dispense it are taking money that they do not deserve.

Mr. CLARK. Is not the same thing true of a proprietary medicine which is not detrimental to health?

Mr. COPELAND. Somebody has got to determine whether it is detrimental to health.

Mr. CLARK. I understand that, but the Senator proposes by the amendment which he has offered to the committee amendment to make one regulation as to proprietary foods found not to be detrimental to health. Why should there be one rule as to proprietary foods not detrimental to health and a different rule as to proprietary medicines found not to be detrimental to health?

Mr. COPELAND. If there were as limited a number of patent medicines as there are patent foods, I would join the Senator and say the proposals are on all fours. But one can go into any drug store, as I used to observe in my native town, and see the shelves weighted down with patent medicines, some of them made up of incompatibles, most of them valueless, and yet, through their sale, the public is robbed of millions of dollars, and, I presume, billions in this day when we talk about billions.

Furthermore they lure the sick person into the belief that by taking a particular patent medicine, a teaspoonful every 2 hours out of a bottle, he will be cured of diabetes, Bright's disease, cancer, tuberculosis, and other ills.

Mr. CLARK. Is that any worse, may I ask the Senator, than for proprietary foods, such as he just mentioned, to be advertised as absolute cures for insomnia when all of us know they are not?

Mr. COPELAND. When it comes to that category, I will say "yes"; I am with the Senator a hundred percent.

Mr. CLARK. I may say to the Senator I have taken several cans of Ovaltine in succession without being able to cure a condition of sleeplessness, which happened to come upon me as the result of a serious illness. That seems to be upon all fours with proprietary medicines.

Mr. COPELAND. If a claim is made that the food relieves a physical disability and is curative, in that sense, then it becomes a fraud.

Mr. CLARK. Let me say to the Senator that I have no objection to this amendment, and I am not sufficiently interested in proprietary medicines, for which I hold no brief, to prepare an amendment on the subject; but I was wondering whether or not the recent radio activity of a very eminent lawyer in the city of New York, representing proprietary foods and food associations, had been aroused by the fact that there has been a distinction made between proprietary foods and proprietary medicines.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, I cannot answer that question.

Mr. CLARK. I did not expect that the Senator would be able to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 9, after line 14, to insert:

(k) If it bears or contains any artificial flavor, artificial color, or chemical preservative and it fails to bear a label stating that fact.

Mr. COPELAND. I move to insert in line 16, after the word "preservative", a comma and the words "which is not prohibited by section 301,".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 19, after the word "labeling", to strike out "or packaging", and in line 21, before the word "and", to strike out "natural food" and insert "fruits and fresh vegetables", so as to read:

(l) The Secretary is hereby authorized to promulgate regulations exempting from any labeling requirement of this act small open containers of fresh fruits and fresh vegetables and also food which is, in accordance with the practice of the trade, processed, labeled, or repacked in substantial quantities at establishments other than those where originally processed or packed, on condition that such food is in conformity with the provisions of this act upon removal from such processing, labeling, or repacking establishment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The paragraph from line 4 on page 10 to line 11 having been passed over, the next amendment is on page 10 after line 11.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] asked to have section 303 go over until he might be in the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

RESCINDING OF ORDER TO CLEAR THE GALLERIES

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I was absent from the Chamber this morning when the order was made by the Presiding Officer to clear the visitors' galleries. Had I been present, I would have entered a vigorous objection. There are thousands of visitors in the city who desire to see the House and the Senate function. I think it is very unkind to them, very inconsiderate of them, to have them removed from the galleries and prevented from returning.

I move, therefore, that the order heretofore made by the then Presiding Officer be revoked and that the galleries be thrown open to visitors in Washington.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I have no disposition to oppose the motion of the Senator from Oregon, with which I am in hearty sympathy, but I will say on behalf of the Senator who was in the chair at the time the galleries were ordered cleared, and who is not now present, that a condition had arisen in the galleries which necessitated action, for, despite repeated warnings on the part of the Chair, guides were bringing in large groups of visitors, passing them through the galleries, and even standing in the aisle of one of the galleries delivering lectures. At one time in a particular gallery such an incident occurred while the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] had the floor and was addressing the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. I am not criticizing the issuing of the order. I was not present at the time. It is the general principle and practice against which I am protesting. I have found, from observation of 18 years in the Senate, that probably 90 percent of the noise in the Senate Chamber emanates from the floor of the Senate and not from the galleries.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from Oregon states that he was not on the floor at the time the order was made. This happened to be an instance where repeated demands for order had been made. As a matter of fact the Sergeant at Arms had been directed to maintain order. At the time quiet prevailed on the floor to such an extent that it would have been almost possible to hear a pin drop. I am in sympathy with the thought of the Senator from Oregon, but I think a rule should be adopted, by whatever body governs the Capitol and whatever committee controls the Senate galleries, to prohibit Capitol guides from coming into the Senate galleries and standing in the aisles and delivering lectures while important business is being transacted on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. The responsibility rests upon the Senate. It is the business of the Senate. The doorkeepers and guides are employees of this body. If they are making unnecessary noise in the galleries, it is the duty of the Presiding Officer to direct the Sergeant at Arms to order the guides not to make any noise. We should not visit the punishment upon innocent visitors to the Senate galleries. I insist upon my motion.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I quite agree with the Senator from Oregon. I think there was some confusion in the galleries at the time and the condition described by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] actually existed; but talking among the Senators themselves created more noise and disturbance, in my opinion, than the talk and disturbance in the galleries.

Mr. McNARY. That is exactly what I said, as an observer of conditions in the Senate for many years. The Presiding Officer who is determined to maintain order can keep Senators quiet, but why punish those who are merely visitors to the galleries and who are our guests? I insist upon my motion.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I again call attention to the fact that the Senator from Oregon, not having been present on the floor at the time this incident occurred, is undertaking to make strictures on the Presiding Officer who happened to be in the chair, which I do not think he is justified in making, not having been present at the time.

The Senator from Oregon says he insists upon his motion. No one has opposed his motion. The only opposition has been some of the remarks of the Senator from Oregon himself.

Mr. McNARY. I made it very clear——

Mr. CLARK. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

Mr. CLARK. I was sitting directly behind the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], who had the floor at the time and who was addressing the Senate. A group of visitors came into the galleries, accompanied by a guide who stood in the aisle and proceeded to deliver a lecture in a tone of voice louder than the Senator from New York was able to employ here on the floor of the Senate.

Without any opposition to the motion of the Senator from Oregon, I do think it is improper to leave any implication whatever that the President pro tempore, who happened to be in the chair at the time, was guilty of any improper conduct in clearing the galleries.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms is instructed to reopen the galleries.

RECOVERY POLICIES

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, sitting on this side of the Chamber, I very much dislike to criticize the trend of events under the present administration; but now that it is starting on its third year I think it is about time that we take note of where we are going, and if that path is not one leading to recovery then we should start to walk one which would tend more to bring the Nation out of the depression than that which we have followed up to date.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield and allow me to call a quorum?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I should prefer not to do so. I appreciate the suggestion of the Senator. I am not making this speech to the Senate. I am making it to the country.

Mr. LONG. As one of the leaders of the Democratic Party, I want the party represented here. [Laughter.]

Mr. TYDINGS. I should prefer not to yield at this time.

Mr. LONG. I am afraid my party is going to be criticized, and I want it protected. [Laughter.]

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, right after the new administration came into power it was necessary to do many novel things which would not ordinarily have been done in normal times. I am not criticizing that action at all. The banks were closed. Perhaps drastic measures had to be taken. Certainly the period immediately following the administration's advent ought to be viewed and judged with a wholesome degree of tolerance, whether we be Democrats or Republicans.

However, when such measures as the N. R. A., the A. A. A., and other alphabetical institutions came into being, Members still under the spell of the depression voted for them without any real comprehension of what was involved. The so-called "elimination of child labor" is all right. The so-called "maximum-hours-of-labor provision" is all right. The so-called "basic standards", as it were, were proper to consider even in normal times. But when under the guise of the N. R. A. we allowed business to come in and write its own ticket, when we glorified trusts to a new height, when we gave them privileges which they had never before enjoyed, I question very much whether we helped the country even temporarily by such procedure.

Likewise, when we put upon the statute books the A. A. A. and various other measures supposedly designed to ameliorate the suffering of the people, I question very much whether that procedure, in turn, was justified even as an expedient. I am asking the question now, Is it not time to repeal these monstrosities and wipe them out in order to revive world trade, to reestablish our currency, to settle the war debts?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. We had an election last November. I will ask the Senator if he does not interpret the result of that election as the expressed will of the people that the administration should be allowed to carry out the policies which we were engaged in formulating? Perhaps it was not a Democratic victory; perhaps it did not mean the people approved what we had done; and the people said, "The President and his administration are engaged in certain definite plans to get us out of the depression, and are willing and desirous that they should go ahead and complete their plans." If that be true, then how can we take the position that we ought to back track unless we are willing to say we will not follow the will of the people as expressed at the polls?

Mr. TYDINGS. My concern is that if we shall follow what is interpreted by my good friend from Kentucky as being the will of the people, we will not only make recovery of the country impossible but in the succeeding election we will make the recovery of the Democratic Party absolutely null and void.

Mr. LOGAN rose.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will yield a little later on. Let me pursue that thought before I yield.

My interest is not to answer the mob clamor. My interest is not to be impelled by this or that piece of propaganda, but to try to support measures which are sound and which are going to bring the country out of the depression. There is nothing I have seen thus far in the basic philosophy of the administration which is going to accomplish that result.

I do not mean to give our Republican friends a left-handed pat on the back, because I consider, notwithstanding the era of so-called "prosperity" through which we passed, that in the administrations of Mr. Harding, Mr. Coolidge, and Mr. Hoover the foundation was laid for the very depression in which we find ourselves. We had emerged from the war in the position of not any longer being a debtor country, but a creditor country. The world owed us sums of money which it could not pay, and yet we insisted on selling to the world more goods than we were buying from them, although their debts to us at that time were greater than they could possibly discharge. However, we kept up the illusion of prosperity through the medium of international loans. We proceeded to lend to our customers, who already owed us more than they could pay, the money with which to pay for the goods we were exporting to them.

In that day, answering specifically the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky, everybody was for it so long as it lasted. Everybody was for prosperity. If anyone pointed to the fact that Cabinet officers were dishonest, that they were being tried for fraud, the answer was "prosperity." That was enough.

As long as the illusion lasted all America goose stepped back of that so-called "prosperity", when anybody who knows anything about the elements of economics must have known that to some degree the depression was inevitable; that we could not go on putting our customers further and further into debt without the day coming when they could not buy any more.

We criticized the Republican Party; and what I considered to be the mandate of the Democratic Party was the platform of the party written in Chicago in 1932. That was the platform upon which we were all elected. I was a candidate at that time. What did the platform promise? It promised a revival of world trade. It promised a balanced Budget. It promised to pay as we went. I have not seen any election since then which has altered the promises which we made in that platform.

What is the Democratic Party now doing? I am not seeking to hurt the Democrats; but I believe the time has come to raise our voices in warning, for before another year shall have gone by there may not be the large Democratic majority here and in other places which we have enjoyed. We cannot go on running the Government on hot air, on money pulled down from the heavens which the taxpayers will have to pay back. We cannot continue on the philosophy of scarcity, of producing less and less and expecting to employ more and more people. We can no longer do that with any degree of success, because the less work there is, the less we produce, the less employment there is. Up to this time the whole philosophy of the administration, in my judgment, has been to produce less and to increase rather than to decrease the army of the unemployed.

We came into power, and what did we do? Complaining against the policy of ultranationalism, of embargo tariffs, of increasing our creditor position, we offered to the country a program, and we swept the country. We carried all State elections; we carried most of the congressional elections; we even carried the municipal elections; and the Democratic Party, which is a minority party in the country, found itself almost in supreme command of every city, county, and State government, and even the National Government, and what do we do?

Instead of undoing the supernational policy of the past three administrations, we go further and accentuate it by devising in America not only the philosophy of scarcity but the philosophy of increasing prices so that we cannot compete in the markets of the world, and this in a country which produces more than its people can consume! How in the name of common sense can we ever reemploy the unemployed until we make markets all over again?

Every policy of the N. R. A. is a policy to increase the cost of manufactured commodities. Every policy of the A. A. A. is a policy to increase the cost of agricultural commodities, which makes us the less able to go out beyond our own country, or, indeed, even in it, and sell the things which we must sell in order not to increase further the army of the unemployed.

Think of it! Take cotton, for example, a crop of which we export over half of all we produce; and yet we are plowing under our cotton, and while we are plowing it under Brazil and Egypt and India are raising more and more and more of it. What are the farmers in the South going to do when other countries of the world raise sufficient cotton to supply the export trade which they formerly supplied? In what line of activity are we going to put those farmers? Are they going to make automobiles? Are they going to raise wheat? We are already exporting wheat. What work can they be given in a republic?

Senators, the time has come to turn back from this supernational policy and attempt to revive world trade, to reestablish international currencies, and to promote and increase the commerce of the world rather than to decrease it.

Let those on this side of the Chamber who take issue with me remember that we are Democrats because we are supposed to believe in certain fundamental and underlying principles. One of them is moderate tariffs. Another is the maximum amount of world trade commensurate with our national, financial, and economic stability. There is no increase in world trade in the A. A. A. There is less world trade in the A. A. A., and every Senator knows it.

Talk about increasing the purchasing power of the people while we increase the cost of the commodities the people must buy! By so doing we defeat, almost in the hour of its creation, the very object we set out to obtain.

What good, forsooth, does it do any man if he gets a dollar a day more, if everything he has to buy costs him a dollar a day more? What we ought to do is to bring into balance the price of commodities and the price of labor. Labor cannot have the price with which to buy unless there is work, and work cannot be provided by pursuing a policy of less trade. That is the thing for which the Republicans stood, with their embargo tariffs, under the last three administrations. I do not say that in a partisan way. I believe many who voted for high tariffs in those days did so with the thought that such a policy was for the best interests of America; but where did it lead us? It led us to the greatest depression we have ever seen; and I know there are in the country thousands of Republicans who today believe in reciprocal trade who 5 or 6 years ago would have been bitterly opposed to it.

Are we Democrats going to pursue the policy of nationalism, of shutting ourselves off from the rest of the world? And if we are going to pursue it, how in the name of common sense are we going to reemploy the unemployed? If there is an answer to that question, I do not know what it is.

We have always favored laws which curtailed the activities of the large corporations—the "trusts", as we call them. The N. R. A. is the greatest prop ever put under the trusts of America. Every Senator in this Chamber knows that to be so.

Talk about being a liberal! If being a liberal means to give the trusts more power than they ever before had, then I am no liberal. If being a liberal means not to trade with the other nations of the world, but to adopt a policy of isolation, to pursue the philosophy of scarcity, the philosophy of unemployment, then I am no liberal. If, on the other hand, being a liberal means not to place more power in the hands of the interests which are already strong enough to survive without additional power; if it means to revive world trade, to stimulate commerce, to find markets for the things we produce in superabundance, to operate on a sound money basis, to pay as we go, then I am a liberal, if those who believe in such a philosophy may be called liberals.

A few days ago we passed a joint resolution called a "public-works measure", in which we pursued the philosophy that the Federal Government is responsible for community affairs from one end of the Nation to the other. If they cannot support their schools, we will do it; if they cannot support their aged, we will do it; if they cannot support their indigent, we will do it. They need not worry any more; we will do it all for the whole Nation. That may be good philosophy, but I question whether we have not started something of such a nature that when the time finally does come to turn off the faucet, it will take a whole lot of courage to turn it off.

We are pursuing the philosophy that the greater the national debt the sooner we will get out of the depression. We are pursuing the philosophy that so long as we can borrow we will provide, unmindful of the fact that away down underneath the same fundamental forces that brought about the depression remain untouched and unchanged.

All we are doing—and I say this with no reflection on my friend from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]—is talking about expedient measures; the 30-hour-week bill, for example, which my friend has introduced in good faith to try to ameliorate the suffering of the unemployed. Should we not, instead, go to the fundamentals of this question?

I do not like to say this, because a false interpretation may be placed upon it, and I know that we did not mean to be other than generous; but, in my opinion, the policy pursued by this Government from 1919 to 1929 wrecked the world. We demanded promises to pay which could not be fulfilled under our economic set-up. We raised tariff barriers which were followed by all the other nations of the earth. We have the whole world locked up in watertight compartments, with the concomitant phenomena, militarism, dictatorships, depreciated currencies, embargo tariffs. Shall we go further along that road, or shall we be the strong nation that we are, the leader in a movement back to sound principles, to sound economics, and to peace and good will among nations?

What man in this body feels that we can pursue the policy of nationalism, of plowing under every third row of cotton, of plowing under wheat, without other nations retaliating with whatever means are at their command?

We cannot depreciate the currency in this country without finding that other nations will take up the repercussion by any means at their disposal. Up to the present time there may have been reasons for depreciating the currency, but is it not time, instead of pursuing this nationalistic policy, this supernationalistic policy, that we face about and offer our hands to the other nations of the earth in an effort to stabilize currencies on a fair basis, and to revive world trade?

There is no magic in government, there is no magic in wealth. The fallacies of five centuries ago are the fallacies of today. There is no royal road to success, to wealth, or to a successful government.

There was the Mississippi bubble under John Law in France, when the currency was depreciated, and France was brought to the brink of bankruptcy; but we learned nothing from that.

There was the South Sea bubble in England, which had a disastrous effect; and we learned nothing from that. There was the tulip mania in Holland, when one little root of a tulip sold for as high as $5,000, others for $4,000, others for $3,000, until the whole of Holland went tulip crazy; but when the tulip craze was over, banks had closed, and bankruptcy and ruin fell to the lot of a great many people in delightful and thrifty Holland.

In one year France depreciated its currency dozens of times. Henry VIII resorted, in his wars with France, to depreciated currency over and over again. Bad as those things were then, when the world was not so closely knit, when nations were not so interdependent, they are infinitely worse today, because the repercussion is immediately felt, and there is immediate retaliation on the part of all the other nations surrounding.

When is the movement of nationalism in Germany, and Italy, and Poland, and Russia, and the United States to end?

Should we do these things because they have been done elsewhere, or should we do them because they are for the best interests of our own country?

God knows I do not believe there ever was a man in the White House who wanted to do more for the underprivileged people than does the present President of the United States, and it affords me no pleasure to take issue with anything connected with his administration. I may be wrong; I have always been a poor prophet, and perhaps in the future will be even a poorer one, but I predict that unless we about face and walk back toward sanity, we will rue the day, and that we will realize that silence was not the part of friendship, the part of patriotism, or the way to assist in getting out of the depression.

Has not the hour come when bureaucratic government should be brushed aside and the legislative body reassert itself? There was ample justification for the largesse of power which we gave to the administration during the critical days of bank holidays and what not, but that time has passed; the banks are open. There is a certain amount of normality, so called. I think that now the legislature should reassert itself, or let us quit calling this a democracy, and be done with it, because it is no democracy at all.

Here we are providing for the expenditure of $5,000,000,000, an amount equal to 20 percent of our total national debt, without any strings tied to it worthy of the name. Do Senators think it will be expended efficiently, even if those at the top want it so expended? There will not be a Member of Congress in either House who will not feel impelled, in the competition which will be engendered, to see that his State is fairly treated in the distribution of the funds, regardless of the unemployment or distress which may exist in his State.

There is not a State in the Union—I say this with measured words—which, in my humble judgment, cannot support its schools. I believe it would be hard on many of the States; I believe that taxation would be almost unbearable; but I know, without being able to prove it, that there is not a State in the Republic which could not support its school system if the Governors and the legislatures of the respective States wanted the school systems supported by the States rather than by the Federal Government. There might have been a time after 1933 when that was not the case, but I believe that time has passed. I think we are evolving into a situation which we would have had anyway in 1921, 1922, and 1923, if it had not been that by international loans we created the illusion of international prosperity. We loaned our customers the money with which to buy the goods which we exported in abundance.

Some men say that world trade does not amount to much. They say that even in the good years it was the equivalent of only 8 or 9 or 10 percent of all we produced. Then, by the same logic, I say that unemployment does not amount to much, because we have only about 10 or 15 percent of our people unemployed. Why worry about it? But, if we could get back the trade we have lost, we could to a large extent get those who are unemployed back to work.

On this side of the aisle why are we Democratic? Have we ever been a party of supernationalism? Have we ever been a party of unsound currency? We did not have unsound currency under Cleveland, we did not have it under Wilson, we did not have it under the Democrats preceding the Civil War. We have always been a party which believed in the principle that with more trade there would be more work and more prosperity, and not a party which believed that with less trade there would be more work and more prosperity.

We will be in this depression, in my humble judgment, until there shall be some stabilization of world currencies, difficult though that may be. I am not saying we can stabilize currencies in the next 5 minutes, but I am asking for the effort to stabilize them, for the desire to stabilize them, not for the desire to run our country as if we were not a part of the world.

There will not be any return to prosperity until there shall be a return to healthy world trade. No sooner had the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act been put on the statute books than the governments of 61 nations scattered over the earth passed retaliatory tariffs against American products.

Where are the wheat farmers to sell their surplus wheat while we are forcing every other nation to be self-contained? Where are the cotton farmers to sell their cotton surplus while we are forcing our competitors to raise more and more cotton? Shall we pursue this policy for 4 or 5 more years, and then change it and find even at that early date that we are too late because in the meantime the cotton markets which we used to supply will have been supplied by those who previously did not produce cotton? That is the alternative.

It affords me no pleasure to say these things, but I think we have been too docile. I think in our high regard for those in extreme authority most of us have been quiescent, questioning, but willing to trust. Up to now I have not seen anything which would make me feel that in such an attitude lies the path of patriotism or the pathway to recovery.

Mr. President, I am an organization man. I have voted for all of the unpopular measures of the administration and for practically none of its popular ones. I stood here only a year ago and made a speech which was hard to make, asking the American Senate to cut down the costs of the Veterans' Administration, because we were told, and I believed it to be true, that economy was the basis upon which we would have to reconstruct the fortunes of the Government. Nothing has happened between that date and this which has made me proud of the speech I made on that occasion. A billion dollars is treated just the same as if it were a hundred thousand, and as if we could spend and borrow our way out of the depression. There is not a man who believes in his heart we can do that. There are dozens of Senators who echo "I agree with you" in their heart of hearts. Perhaps their party loyalty is a little stronger than mine. I am not quarreling with them, only doing that which I think is necessary to be done on this occasion.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. MURPHY. I may say to the Senator that the Committee on Agriculture recently had before it some of the leading men of the country, to hear their testimony as to the reasons for the loss of our foreign trade and the means of restoring that trade. I might say there was practical unanimity among them that there is the necessity for doing something with respect to money, and doing something further with respect to opening the foreign markets.

It was shown, for instance, as respects the products of the Corn Belt, specifically meat products and lard, that they are absolutely shut out of Germany today because Germany will not permit the purchase of American exchange to pay for them. Germany is desirous of protecting her gold reserve. The Corn Belt is restricted, in its entrance to England with its meat products, to 8 percent of England's needs, and England imports 95 percent of her hams and bacon. It was further shown that while the entrance of lard is unrestricted, the obligation is upon the exporters to sell at 1 cent a pound less than lard is sold for in the Chicago market.

It was further shown that as the result of the reciprocity treaty entered into with Cuba, the export of these products to Cuba was very considerably increased.

We have the situation today that with an increase in the exports of industrial products we have imports of agricultural products greater than our exports of them.

It was the belief of those who appeared before the committee, precisely as the Senator states here, that we are doing little or nothing fundamental; that all we are doing is palliative, to carry on merely, and that our work does not go to the roots, and that until we do go to the roots we shall have to carry on with these palliative measures, and possibly come back here later and spend more money for relief and for public works.

I feel as does the Senator from Maryland, though he voices it much more eloquently than I could possibly hope to do, that Congress should now seriously address itself to the precise task of expanding our foreign trade, making it possible to restore natural international trade relations.

There is one element, it seems to me, which did not exist in the days prior to the war. We have now a reverse situation in respect to being a creditor nation where formerly we were a debtor nation, and we have the further consideration entering into the minds of foreign governments that now they seek to make themselves sufficient in a military sense to enable them to prosecute a war. That is a deterrent upon the reopening of their markets to our agricultural products.

I have taken too much of the Senator's time; but I merely wanted to rise and to assure him that I am in entire sympathy with the views he expresses as to the necessity of reopening international markets, and particularly with the view which he expresses so forcefully, that practically all of our work here is merely palliative, some of it wisely reformative, but altogether too little of it constructive.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator from Iowa for his very worth-while contribution. I know that Senators are working hard here, and I know that to a certain degree palliatives are necessary; but it strikes me that after 2 years of almost nothing but palliatives we should begin to look beneath the surface; and, difficult though the task may be, though the solution is at no one's finger tips, and though an adequate plan cannot be put into execution by a mere gesture or a wave of the hand, I think the time has come when we ought to face the facts and try to solve the problem which confronts us.

When the public-works money shall have been spent, if putting off facing the fundamentals shall be allowed to go on and on, we will have to come back and get three or four or five more billion dollars, and we will be exactly where we are today.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. Undoubtedly the Senator is correct in his attack upon the extreme nationalistic spirit which prevails in America. That is our chief trouble; there can be no doubt about that; but we have expressed ourselves time after time as being nationalistic. So long as we hold to that view, which neither the Senator from Maryland nor myself can change, we shall have to pursue the idea that America has determined that she will be a self-sufficient country, and shall have to act accordingly.

I do not know how we can open foreign markets, how we can regain the good will of foreign nations, so long as we maintain an extreme nationalistic spirit; and I see no chance of changing that attitude.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is well within the facts in making his observations; but I point out to him that if we increase the cost of cotton, as I believe we do by the policies we have pursued, we increase the desire of other nations to produce it and buy it more cheaply, and to that extent we cut down our foreign trade in cotton. The same statement applies to hogs and to wheat and to other agricultural products.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I assume the Senator from Maryland has yielded to a great deal of propaganda published over the country about the increase in foreign production of cotton. I desire to ask the Senator if he knows that the production of cotton in all the foreign countries combined last year was less than it was the year before?

Mr. TYDINGS. That may be true; but, Mr. President——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then why talk about the increase in foreign production?

Mr. TYDINGS. The answer is that the production all over the world was less last year than it was the year before. What I am arguing about is that nevertheless, in every country where cotton may be grown, movements are now afoot to produce cotton with which to supply markets which we used to supply, and that in this country the movement is to produce less cotton, and consequently by that action to encourage foreign countries to produce the cotton.

Mr. BANKHEAD and Mr. GORE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield first to the Senator from Alabama, and then to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am very much surprised at the statement of fact made by the Senator from Maryland. I recognize his good faith; but he ought to know, if he is a student of the cotton question—and he ought not to talk about it if he is not—that there has been no preparation in any country in the world to increase the production of cotton, except possibly in Brazil.

Mr. TYDINGS. How about India?

Mr. BANKHEAD. There was a very large reduction in the yield of cotton last year in India over the previous year. Let me say further to the Senator that in Egypt for 2 years there was a compulsory control and reduction of cotton, as there was in this country, for the very same purpose that we undertook it—to get rid of a very large carry-over, too large to meet the requirements of world consumption.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me say to my friend from Alabama that he is not well advised of the situation in India. If he will examine the figures, he will see that, while perhaps production is less, the acreage planted to cotton was larger last year than for the preceding year.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There has been no material increase in acreage in India for many long years.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have not the figures available.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And there can be no material increase either in Egypt or India, because many years ago they reached the peak of production upon acreage which can be economically used for the production of cotton. A very large expenditure for irrigation purposes is required before either country can increase its yield. In fact, their requirements for the production of food crops are so great that they do not have acreage in any quantity in either country to add to the production of cotton.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Alabama must know that irrigation projects, water projects, have been completed in the past few years both in India and in Egypt; and the Senator must know that the Japanese are buying more and more cotton from India. They have developed a process by which they can mix a larger quantity of other cotton with our cotton and produce a fabric which has a ready sale. The Senator must also know that last year, for the first time in the world's history, Japan took primacy in the cotton-textile market, taking it away from Great Britain. Great Britain used to be our best customer for cotton, and now Japan has become our best customer for cotton. The Senator must also know that cotton can be produced more cheaply in India than in the United States.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the Senator expect the cotton farmer of the South to produce cotton in competition with India, even if he has to do it at starvation prices, merely to supply the exporters of this country with business?

Mr. TYDINGS. The result will be, if they lose the foreign markets through encouraging foreign cotton producers to increase their production of cotton, that the cotton farmers of the South will not be able to produce cotton at all, because the price will be so ruinous, through increased world competition, that they will get less than they could now get if they would scale down their cotton costs and keep the world markets.

I now yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to observe that the production of cotton in the United States last year dropped down to about nine and one-half million bales. That is the lowest production for a number of years. World production outside of the United States last year approximated 12,000,000 bales, only a few thousand bales short of 12,000,000. I believe it was the first time in history when the production of foreign cotton exceeded the production of cotton in the United States.

To corroborate what the Senator from Maryland has just said, I believe it was in 1929 that Japan took nearly twice as much American cotton as she took of Indian cotton, and last year her purchases from the two countries were almost the same, her purchases from us declining somewhat and her imports from India increasing substantially. The real danger, I should say, lies in the direction of Brazil. The chief trouble in Brazil is the primary cost, the initial cost of clearing the land and reducing it to cultivation. When that has once been done, Brazil can outstrip the United States in the production of cotton. In other words, the United States cannot compete with Brazil after the initial cost of clearing the land in Brazil has once been incurred; and the possibilities there are almost unlimited.

One further observation: During the first 6 months of this cotton year our exports of cotton declined nearly 50 percent. This decline is not only significant but ominous.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator from Oklahoma for giving so much point to what I said. While I did not have the figures before me, I was well advised that foreign cotton production was increasing while domestic cotton production was decreasing.

Mr. BANKHEAD. May I ask the Senator what the situation is with reference to wheat?

Mr. TYDINGS. I am coming to wheat in just a moment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let us see how serious the cotton question is, and then I will take up wheat.

Cotton is raised in 16 States; that is one-third of all the States in the United States. Think of that!

Mr. GORE. And 51 foreign countries produce cotton.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And have always done so.

Mr. TYDINGS. We raise cotton in 16 States. In most of those States it is the principal agricultural money crop. I found in the Statistical Abstract of 1932, the figures being those of the United States Census Department, the number of farmers engaged in cotton production, and then from those figures I attempted to eliminate the farmers in the 16 States who do not produce cotton as a primary crop; and my calculation showed that nearly 1,800,000 farmers raise cotton as their principal agricultural money crop. If that be true, and if we export half the cotton, it is a logical deduction that about 850,000 American farmers rely upon cotton sold outside the United States for their bread and butter. If the policy of scarcity shall continue to be followed, if the policy of high-priced cotton, which is encouraging the production of low-price cotton elsewhere, shall be maintained over a period of 10, 20, 30, or 40 years, until our export cotton trade shall be absorbed by the foreign producing cotton countries, what are the 850,000 farmers now making a living out of raising and exporting cotton going to do for a livelihood? Allowing four persons to a farm family, the means of living will be taken from about 3,200,000 agriculturists in this country.

The danger lies not so much in the immediate prospect, but we have adopted a policy, under the guise of temporary necessity, and to all intents and purposes are embracing it "until death do us part." We are marrying this policy as a permanent wife. Nobody is thinking any more of terminating it in a year or 2 years or 3 years. We say these measures are temporary, but in the meantime we have done nothing to keep intact the foreign markets we now have and those we are slowly gaining back through reciprocal-trade agreements.

Now, Mr. President, coming to wheat, making the same observations in reference to wheat as I made in reference to cotton, I ascertained that before the depression we used to export 18 percent of the wheat which we produced in America. Translating that 18 percent into farm families, we find that about 282,000 farmers, principally in the West, relied upon the export wheat market for their livelihood. Including their families, about 1,000,000 people are involved. Under the policy now being pursued, our wheat exports are declining, our wheat imports are increasing, I am advised, although I myself have not verified the figures. If, therefore, we encourage other countries of the world to produce more wheat, to such an extent that they can send it to the United States, what are the 282,000 farmers who produce wheat for export going to do when that market shall be gone? Thus, we have another million Americans whose livelihood will be taken away from them, and when the 3,200,000 Americans in the cotton-growing States and the 1,000,000 Americans in the wheat-producing States lose their income and their purchasing power, they will, in turn, throw others out of work who are directly or indirectly dependent upon their earnings for their livelihood. So the vicious circle goes on just as it has gone on during the depression.

I did not vote for the A. A. A.; I did not vote for the N. R. A. If I had been what we used to call a reactionary, conservative, old guard Republican, I think I would have voted for them, because that is the sort of thing that men of that particular philosophy used to believe in, namely, turning over the Government to the "big boys" at the top, allowing them to sit down and write their own codes and fix prices, and let a little of the wealth trickle down to the poor people away down below. I did not think the Democrats were going to come along so soon and put the mantle of purity on the shoulders of that sort of political monstrosity.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. We did inherit that philosophy from the Hoover administration. I believe the Senator has forgotten that the plowing up of cotton by the N. R. A. was practically proposed by Mr. Hoover.

Mr. TYDINGS. I believe it was, but I do not want to be unfair to Mr. Hoover, or to be too fair to him, either, but in his administration the depression was bearing down greater and greater every day. As I said regarding the first 2 years of the present administration, I am not criticizing any one of the high authorities of the Government for legislation of expediency. I realize that new and novel and untried measures had to be thrown into the hopper, perchance. What I am now asking, as we enter upon the third year is: Is it not time that we started to abandon some of these things and to deal with fundamentals and try to erect something that will provide more permanent security than the measures which we are now embracing as all-time propositions?

I want to look with tolerance, I want to look with liberality, and I think all people ought to look with liberality, upon the trials of the man in the White House, who came in on March 4, 1933, with a bank holiday on his hands, following 3 years of the depression, with unemployment rampant and with world trade disorganized. I say we ought to judge him with the greatest amount of liberality; but I am now talking to the Congress and asking, Is it not time that we get down underneath, find out the things that are wrong, cut those things out, and make an end of these temporary policies as soon as possible, in the hope that, through some effort, we may stabilize international currency, revive world trade, settle the war-debt question, if you please, bring about some measure of international cooperation and peace and good will and disarmament, rather than to pursue mad policies which already have brought Europe to the brink of war and may, before we know it, plunge all Christendom into a holocaust that will be followed by a wave of socialism or bolshevism, if statesmen and peoples have not the intelligence to hold back on the mad course that some people, who are following ultranationalistic policies would pursue? By that I do not mean that we ought to be a Simple Simon and go into this, that, and the other thing all over the world; but it seems to me that we can very appropriately make an effort to stabilize currencies and revive world trade, particularly when, after 2 years we have no dividends to show that the policies we have adopted have brought us any success.

THE GROWING ABYSS

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I just want to remind the Senator from Maryland that on the 25th of January 1933 he was under the same illusions then that he is now.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, what occurred in 1929 is occurring today. Nothing the Senator from Maryland is advocating is going to restore the country; nothing the Senator has been voting for is going to restore the country. The Senator is absolutely correct in all the criticisms he makes of the present administration and he is correct in all the criticisms he makes of the Hoover administration. As many times as he voted against Hoover he was right; maybe as many times as he has voted against the Roosevelt policies he was nearly right; but the great trouble is that men like the Senator from Maryland are just as blind now as they were in 1929. I had handed to me this morning a book printed by a Governor of the State of Ohio in 1928 and 1929, now the present junior Senator from that State [Mr. DONAHEY]. I am going to read a few passages from that book, because it might be thought that they were my own. This was written in 1929 and represents a conversation between the Governor of Ohio and some well-to-do people of America:

> You must learn that wealth is the product of the association of men and women and that labor creates the values that dollars control.
> * * * * * * *
>
> You should learn that every American who honestly toils has a natural birthright, and that is to receive a wage sufficient to provide for his family, educate his children, and a mite to lay by for the rainy day.
> You must learn that men cannot be hired at 20 and fired at 45 unless you provide an inheritance tax that will in a measure restore to society in proportion to its contribution an amount sufficient to provide for an old-age-pension law for all of the States now comprising America. * * *
> Combinations of wealth and power with their attendant selfish corruption—

Let me read that again:

> Combinations of wealth and power with their attendant selfish corruption must give way to the common welfare of all.

Mr. President, in the year 1933 the Senator from Maryland interrupted some remarks which I was making, and at that time I said to the Senator from Maryland:

> In 1916 President Woodrow Wilson, through a commission of his own, said that a calamity was headed for America because 60 percent of the people owned only 5 percent of the wealth, and that 2 percent of the people owned 60 percent of the wealth. The commission said we were headed toward calamity unless we broke up that inordinate distribution of wealth which prevailed in 1916. And yet in 1932, 16 years having passed, do the 2 percent still own 60 percent of the wealth? No! One percent owns 60 percent of the wealth. Do 60 percent of the people still own 5 percent of the wealth? No! Two-thirds of the American people, 67 percent of the people, today could not pay their debts and have a copper cent left. It is generally estimated that 5 or 6 percent of the people own more than 85 percent of the wealth and possibly have a control of a great deal of the remaining 15 percent. We have reached the point of stagnation. We have reached the middle of the stream. The abyss yawns. It has yawned for the poor man and he has fallen the victim of it. The abyss has yawned for the middleman and he has fallen the victim of it. Now the abyss yawns for everybody in America unless this condition is corrected. "The abyss yawns for all."

Mr. President, the unfortunate thing is that my distinguished, learned, and talented friend from Maryland on this side of the aisle and the talented leaders on the other side of the aisle, who have made common mistakes, who have gone along picking at the Dardanelles with a wooden bill, trying to find a way through the depression, have steadily, constantly, and relentlessly led the country into the very jaws of hell. There is no way of their saving it; there is no way of their protecting the people. There is but one trouble, and they decline to see it. There is only one trouble in America. Senators may look for all the sporadic remedies they desire; they may apply all the remedies they wish; but unless they break up concentration of wealth in the hands of the few it is not possible to feed and clothe the American people. We cannot get Senators to see that.

As I said to my friend from Maryland, he is just as blind today as he was then. He has an idea we can hunt around here and mess up with some kind of world-trade situation and bring back a condition of prosperity. The conditions are Nation-wide; the conditions are world-wide. None of these things are going to do any good. I am not a prophet, but I stated in 1932 it would not do any good; I said in 1933 it would not do any good; and I said last year it would not do any good. I have here a copy of a speech I made in 1932, when I came to the United States Senate. I am not going to belabor the Senate by quoting from it, but it would show to the Senate that even the most illiterate Member of this body could have seen in 1932 that this condition could not be benefited or corrected unless there was something done to redistribute wealth.

Why? Last year 10 percent of the people were reported as having a little over one-half of the income and 90 percent of the people were reported as having less than half the income. The income, according to the statisticians, had fallen from $95,000,000,000 to $42,000,000,000, and more than 50 percent of the income went to 10 percent of the people and 90 percent of the people had less than half of the income. Constantly it is going in that direction, and yet learned Senators of the United States, in a country which produces too much, in a country which has too much, are still talking about going over to China or Egypt or Japan and finding the balm of Gilead to correct the trouble in the United States.

The trouble is not in Japan. The Mikado and the serfs of Japan do not cause the United States trouble. We do not have to go to Japan to get cotton enough to make all the clothes the people of the United States have to wear. That cotton is in the United States now. We do not have to go to China to get wheat to eat. That is in the United States. We do not have to go to the Fiji Islands to get corn to eat. That is in the United States. We do not have to go to Germany to find houses in which to live. That is all in the United States. We do not have to go to the wilds of Asia to find gold and precious metals for the United States. We have them here in the Treasury.

Yet we have people hunting around with magnifying glasses, looking all over the world, all over China and Asia, to find out what is the trouble in the United States, when people are starving to death for the food we have here in plenty, when people are freezing to death because of a lack of clothes we have here in the United States—and yet some are hunting around, at the end of all these years, trying to find out what the trouble is that we cannot feed the people of the United States with all the food surplus we have here.

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOOD, DRUGS, AND COSMETICS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein; to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics; and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, under the subhead "Tolerances for poisonous ingredients in food and certification of coal-tar colors for food", on page 10, after line 13, to strike out:

SEC. 304. (a) If an added poisonous or added deleterious substance in or on food is or may be injurious to health, the Secretary is hereby authorized to promulgate regulations, as provided by sections 701 and 703, prohibiting such added substance in or on any food, or establishing tolerances limiting the amount therein or thereon, for the protection of public health, taking into account the extent to which the use of such substance is required in the production of such food and the other ways in which the consumer may be affected by the same or other poisonous or deleterious substances.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 304. (a) To safeguard the public health, no poisonous or deleterious substance shall be added to any food except where such substance is required in the production thereof or cannot be avoided by good manufacturing practice; but when such substance is so required or cannot be so avoided, the Secretary is authorized, for the protection of public health, to promulgate regulations, as provided by sections 701 and 703, limiting the quantity therein or thereon. In determining the quantity of such added substance to be tolerated in or on different articles of food, the Secretary shall take into account the extent to which the use of such substance is required or cannot be avoided in the production of each such article, and the other ways in which the consumer may be affected by the same or other poisonous or deleterious substances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 20, in the heading, to strike out "Permit factories" and insert "Emergency permit control."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 21, after the word "finds", to insert "after investigation"; on page 12, line 1, after the word "packing", to strike out "thereof" and insert "thereof in any locality"; and, in line 8, after the words "public health, and", to strike out "requiring manufacturers, processors, and packers of such class of articles to hold permits conditioned on compliance with such regulations" and insert "thereafter no manufacturer, processor, or packer of such class of articles shall introduce into interstate commerce any such food unless he holds an unsuspended, valid permit issued by the Secretary as provided by the regulations", so as to read:

SEC. 305. (a) Whenever the Secretary finds after investigation that the distribution in interstate commerce of any class of food may, by reason of contamination with micro-organisms during the manufacture, processing, or packing thereof in any locality, be injurious to health, and such injurious nature cannot be adequately determined after such articles have entered interstate commerce, he is then, and in such case only, authorized to promulgate regulations, as provided by sections 701 and 703, governing the conditions of manufacture, processing, or packing for such temporary periods of time as may be necessary to protect the public health, and thereafter no manufacturer, processor, or packer of such class of articles shall introduce into interstate commerce any such food unless he holds an unsuspended, valid permit issued by the Secretary as provided by the regulations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 21, after the word "violated" and the period, to strike out "The Secretary shall reinstate the permit whenever, after hearing and an inspection of the establishment, it is found that adequate measures have been taken" and insert "The holder of a permit so suspended shall be privileged at any time to apply for the reinstatement of such permit, and the Secretary shall, immediately after prompt hearing and an inspection of the establishment, reinstate such permit if it is found that adequate measures have been taken"; on page 13, line 4, before the word "permit", to strike out "original"; and in the same line, after the word "permit", to insert a comma and "as originally issued or as amended", so as to read:

(b) The Secretary is authorized to issue such permits for such periods of time as he may by regulations prescribe and to make regulations governing the issuance and renewal thereof. The Secretary is authorized to suspend immediately upon notice any permit issued under authority of this section if it is found that any of the conditions of the permit have been violated. The holder of a permit so suspended shall be privileged at any time to apply for the reinstatement of such permit, and the Secretary shall immediately after prompt hearing and an inspection of the establishment, reinstate such permit if it is found that adequate measures have been taken to comply with and maintain the conditions of the permit as originally issued or as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Chapter IV—Adulterated drugs", on page 13, after line 16, to strike out:

(a) If it is dangerous to health under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling or advertising thereof.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

(a) (1) If it is dangerous to health under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling or advertising thereof; or (2) if it consists in whole or in part of any filthy, putrid, or decomposed substance; or (3) if it has been prepared, packed, or held under insanitary conditions whereby it may have been contaminated with filth, or whereby it may have been rendered injurious to health; or (4) if its container is composed of any poisonous or deleterious substance which may render it injurious to health; or (5) if it contains, for purposes of coloring only, a coal-tar color other than one from a batch that has been certified in accordance with regulations as provided by sections 403, 701, and 703.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, does not this provision declare, in effect, that a drug which is misbranded is adulterated? Later in the bill there is a provision describing adulterated drugs and another provision applying to misbranded drugs. It seems to me the provision in effect provides that a drug which is only misbranded is declared adulterated.

Mr. COPELAND. I assume the Senator is seeking to avoid the possibility of seizure of the drug?

Mr. CLARK. It will be referred to later in connection with the question of seizure.

Mr. COPELAND. I think at that time the whole subject might well be considered. I have no objection to giving it consideration at that itme.

Mr. CLARK. I have no objection to the amendment being adopted, with the understanding that there shall be no objection to reconsideration later in connection with the question of seizure.

Mr. COPELAND. I shall not interpose any objection to what the Senator has in mind.

Mr. CLARK. In other words, it is immaterial to me except that some Senators who would like to discuss it are not in the Chamber at the moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 14, line 7, after the words "name is", to strike out "the same as or simulates a name"; and in line 9, after the word "it", to strike out "(1) fails to meet the definition and description set forth therein, or (2)", so as to read:

(b) If its name is recognized in an official compendium, or if it purports to be a drug the name of which is so recognized, and it differs from the standard of strength, quality, or purity as determined by the tests or methods of assay set forth therein; except that whenever tests or methods of assay have not been prescribed therein, or such tests or methods of assay as are prescribed are insufficient, for determining whether or not such drug complies with such standard, the Secretary is hereby authorized to bring such fact to the attention of the appropriate body charged with the revision of such compendium and if such body fails within a reasonable time to prescribe tests or methods of assay which are sufficient, then the Secretary may prescribe for the purposes of this act such tests or methods of assay by regulations as provided by sections 701 and 703. No drug shall be deemed to be adulterated under this paragraph because it differs from the standards of strength, quality, or purity therefor set forth in an official compendium, if its label bears in juxtaposition with the name of the drug a statement indicating wherein its strength, quality, and purity, as determined by the tests or methods of assay applicable under this paragraph, differ from the standards therefor set forth in such compendium. Whenever a drug is recognized in both the United States Pharmacopœia and the Homœopathic Pharmacopœia of the United States it shall be subject to the requirements of the United States Pharmacopœia unless it is labeled and offered for sale as a homeopathic drug, in which case it shall be subject to the provisions of the Homœopathic Pharmacopœia of the United States and not to those of the United States Pharmacopœia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 25, before the word "such", to strike out "in every particular"; and on page 16, line 1, after the word "substantial", to insert "and reliable", so as to read:

SEC. 402. A drug shall be deemed to be misbranded—

(a) If its labeling is false or misleading in any particular. Any representation concerning any effect of a drug shall be deemed to be false under this paragraph if such representation is not sustained by demonstrable scientific facts or substantial and reliable medical opinion.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 12, after the word "label", to strike out "to avoid adulteration or misbranding"; in line 15, after the word "readily", to strike out "intelligible to the" and insert "understood by"; and in line 17, after the word "use", to insert a comma and "due consideration being given to the size of the package", so as to read:

(b) If in package form it fails to bear a label containing (1) the name and place of business of the manufacturer, packer, seller, or distributor; and (2) an accurate statement of the quantity of the contents in terms of weight, measure, or numerical count: Provided, That under subdivision (2) of this paragraph reasonable variations shall be permitted, and exemptions as to small packages shall be established, by regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

(c) If any word, statement, or other information required on the label under any provision of this act is not prominently placed thereon in such a manner as to be easily seen and in such terms as to be readily understood by purchasers and users of such articles under customary conditions of purchase and use, due consideration being given to the size of the package.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 21, after the word "eucaine", to strike out "barbital" and insert "barbituric acid"; in line 24, after the word "any", to strike out "narcotic or hypnotic"; in line 25, after the word "therefrom", to strike out the comma and "or any other narcotic or hypnotic substance which has been designated as habit forming by regulations as provided by sections 701 and 703" and insert "unless the derivative is clearly not habit forming"; and in line 4, after the word "and", to insert "except when dispensed on the written order of a member of the medical profession", so as to read:

(d) If it is for internal use by man and contains any quantity of any of the following narcotic or hypnotic substances: Alpha eucaine, barbituric acid, beta eucaine, bromal, cannabis, carbromal, chloral, coca, cocaine, codeine, heroin, marihuana, morphine, opium, paraldehyde, peyote, sulphonmethane, or any substance chemically derived therefrom unless the derivative is clearly not habit forming, and, except when dispensed on the written order of a member of the medical profession, its label fails to bear the name and quantity or proportion of such substance or derivative and in juxtaposition therewith the statement "Warning—May be habit forming."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 13, after the word "the", to strike out "names and quantity or proportion" and to insert "name"; and in line 14, after the word "active", to strike out "ingredient: Provided, That exemption to compliance with subdivision (2) of this paragraph is given in such cases where the name, quantity, and proportion of each active ingredient is filed with the Secretary in accordance with regulations promulgated by him" and insert "ingredient, including any alcohol: Provided, That, to the extent that compliance with the requirements of subdivision (2) of this paragraph is impracticable, exemptions shall be established by regulations promulgated by the Secretary", so as to read:

(e) If it is not designated solely by a name recognized in an official compendium and its label fails to bear (1) a common or usual name of the drug, if such there be; and (2), in case it is fabricated from two or more ingredients, the name of each active ingredient, including any alcohol: Provided, That, to the extent that compliance with the requirements of subdivision (2) of this paragraph is impracticable, exemptions shall be established by regulations promulgated by the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 24, after the word "and", to strike out "explicit" and insert "adequate", and on page 18, line 4, after the word "use", to strike out "is contraindicated and", so as to read:

(f) If its labeling fails to bear plainly and conspicuously (1) complete and adequate directions for use, and (2) such warnings in such manner and form as may be prescribed by regulations, as provided by sections 701 and 703, against use in such pathological conditions or by children where its use may be dangerous to health, or against unsafe dosage or methods or duration of administration or application: Provided, That where any requirement of subdivision (1) of this paragraph, as applied to any drug, is not necessary for the protection of the public health, the Secretary shall promulgate regulations, as provided by sections 701 and 703, exempting such drug from such requirement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 12, after the word " is ", to strike out " the same as, or simulate, a name ", and in line 13, after the word " compendium ", to insert " or if it purports to be a drug the name of which is so recognized ", so as to read:

(g) If its name is recognized in an official compendium, or if it purports to be a drug the name of which is so recognized, and it is not packaged and labeled as prescribed therein. Whenever a drug is recognized in both the United States Pharmacopœia and the Homœopathic Pharmacopœia of the United States it shall be subject to the requirements of the United States Pharmacopœia with respect to packaging and labeling unless it is labeled and offered for sale as a homeopathic drug, in which case it shall be subject to the provisions of the Homœopathic Pharmacopœia of the United States, and not to those of the United States Pharmacopœia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, on page 18, line 15, after the word " therein ", I move to strike out the period, insert a comma and the words " unless exempted under (1) of this section."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 19, after line 12, to strike out:

(j) If it purports to be or is represented as a germicide, bactericide, disinfectant, or antiseptic for any use on or within the body and its labeling fails to bear a plain and conspicuous statement of such use, including the strength or dilution, manner, and duration of application, and when tested by a standard method, it does not have the germicidal effect within the duration so prescribed of a 1 to 80 dilution of phenol used by a standard testing method for 10 minutes at 37° C. All testing methods for the purposes of this paragraph shall be prescribed by regulations as provided by sections 701 and 703: Provided, That no drug shall be deemed to be misbranded under this paragraph by reason of failure of its labeling to bear a statement of any advertised use if such advertising is disseminated only to members of the medical and pharmaceutical professions, or appears only in scientific publications of these professions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 4, to strike out:

(k) If it purports to be or is represented as an inhibitory antiseptic for any use as a wet dressing, ointment, dusting powder, or such other use as involves prolonged contact with the body, and its labeling fails to bear a plain and conspicuous statement of such use, including strength or dilution, and manner of application, and when tested by a standard method, it fails to prevent the growth of microorganisms within the entire time of such duration. All testing methods for the purposes of this paragraph shall be prescribed by regulations as provided by sections 701 and 703: Provided, That no drug shall be deemed to be misbranded under this paragraph by reason of failure of its labeling to bear a statement of any advertised use if such advertising is disseminated only to members of the medical and pharmaceutical profession, or appears only in scientific publications of these professions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 20, to insert:

(j) If it purports to be or is represented as a germicide, bactericide, disinfectant, or antiseptic for any use on or within the body and its labeling fails to bear plainly and conspicuously adequate directions for such use, and when used as directed it does not have germicidal effect equivalent to phenol of a 1 to 80 aqueous dilution for 10 minutes at 37° C. when tested by a method prescribed by regulations as provided by sections 701 and 703: Provided, That no drug shall be deemed to be misbranded under this paragraph by reason of (1) failure of its labeling to bear adequate directions for a use indicated in advertising disseminated only to members of the medical and pharmaceutical professions, or appears only in scientific publications of these professions; or (2) its failure to have the germicidal effect required by this paragraph if its own standard of such effect is stated on its label and such drug is distributed for use solely by the medical profession.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 12, to insert:

(k) If it purports to be or is represented as an inhibitory antiseptic for any use as a wet dressing, ointment, dusting powder, or such other use as involves prolonged contact with the body and its labeling fails to bear plainly and conspicuously adequate directions for such use, and when used as indicated, it fails to prevent the growth of micro-organisms within the entire time of such use when tested by a method prescribed by regulations as provided by sections 701 and 703: Provided, That no drug shall be deemed to be misbranded under this paragraph by reason of failure of its labeling to bear adequate directions for a use indicated in advertising disseminated only to members of the medical and pharmaceutical profession, or appears only in scientific publications of these professions.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the Senator from New York corrected by amendment the language in subsection (g). We have now reached the point, in line 3, on page 22, where I think we have agreed to substitute the word " directed " for the word " authorized." I move, in line 3, that the word " authorized " be changed to " directed."

Mr. COPELAND. That is entirely agreeable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 11, to insert:

CERTIFICATION OF COAL-TAR COLORS FOR DRUGS

SEC. 403. The Secretary is hereby authorized to promulgate regulations, as provided by sections 701 and 703, for the certification of coal-tar colors which for purposes of coloring only are harmless and suitable for use in drugs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading " Chapter V—Adulterated Cosmetics ", on page 22, line 22, after the word " to ", to strike out " the user " and insert " health ", and in line 24, after the word " labeling " to insert " or advertising ", so as to read:

SECTION 501. A cosmetic shall be deemed to be adulterated—

(a) If it bears or contains any poisonous or deleterious substance which may render it injurious to health under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling or advertising thereof, or under such conditions of use as are customary or usual.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 23, to strike out " (b) If it bears or contains any poisonous or deleterious substance prohibited, or in excess of the limits of tolerance prescribed, by regulations as provided by sections 503, 101, and 703 ", and in lieu thereof to insert:

(b) If it consists in whole or in part of any filthy, putrid, or decomposed substance.

(c) If it has been prepared, packed, or held under insanitary conditions whereby it may have been contaminated with filth, or whereby it may have been rendered injurious to health.

(d) If its container is composed of any poisonous or deleterious substance which may render it injurious to health.

(e) If it contains a coal-tar color other than one from a batch that has been certified in accordance with regulations as provided by sections 503, 701, and 703.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is recalled that on one or more occasions the Senator from New York described the effect of certain substances when applied to the person as destructive of the tissues and very harmful. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if there are so-called " cosmetics " which are made of putrid substances, which are poisonous, and which have a deleterious effect on the person when applied.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator refers to page 22, line 22, where the words " the user " are stricken out, and line 23, where the word " health " is inserted. There has been much discussion about that. A cosmetic might be injurious to the feelings of the patient, the mental condition of the patient; but it is very clear that the things I spoke about yesterday, when I presented the pictures, and so forth, are cases where there is injury to health, where the cosmetics affects the body, affects the tissues. That is an injury to health. I think ample protection is afforded by the provision in the bill, and I should not be satisfied if it were not.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is the Senator willing now to return to page 10?

Mr. COPELAND. Just as soon as we finish this section. I shall be willing to do that as soon as we finish chapter V.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, under the subhead "Misbranded cosmetics", on page 24, line 6, after the word "label", to strike out "to avoid adulteration or misbranding"; in line 9, after the word "readily", to strike out "intelligible to" and insert "understood by"; and in line 11, after the word "use", to insert a comma and "due consideration being given to the size of the package", so as to read:

SEC. 502. A cosmetic shall be deemed to be misbranded—

(a) If its labeling is false or misleading in any particular.

(b) If in package form it fails to bear a label containing (1) the name and place of business of the manufacturer, packer, seller, or distributor; and (2) an accurate statement of the quantity of the contents in terms of weight, measure, or numerical count: Provided, That under subdivision (2) of this paragraph reasonable variations shall be permitted, and exemptions as to small packages shall be established, by regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

(c) If any word, statement, or other information required on the label under any provision of this act is not prominently placed thereon in such a manner as to be easily seen and in such terms as to be readily understood by the purchasers and users of such articles under customary conditions of purchase and use, due consideration being given to the size of the package.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 14, after the word "labeling", to strike out "or packaging", so as to read:

(d) The Secretary is hereby authorized to promulgate regulations exempting from any labeling requirement of this act cosmetics which are, in accordance with the practice of the trade, processed, labeled, or repacked in substantial quantities at establishments other than those where originally processed or packed, on condition that such cosmetics are in conformity with the provisions of this act upon removal from such processing, labeling, or repacking establishment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 21, to strike out:

TOLERANCES FOR POISONOUS INGREDIENTS IN COSMETICS

SEC. 503 (a) If a poisonous or deleterious substance in cosmetics is or may be injurious to health, the Secretary is hereby authorized to promulgate regulations, as provided by sections 701 and 703, prohibiting such substance in or on any cosmetic, or establishing tolerances limiting the amount therein or thereon, for the protection of public health, taking into account the extent to which the use of such substance is required in the production of such cosmetic and the other ways in which the consumer may be affected by the same or other poisonous or deleterious substances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 8, to insert:

CERTIFICATION OF COAL-TAR COLORS FOR COSMETICS

SEC. 503. The Secretary is hereby authorized to promulgate regulations, as provided by sections 701 and 703, for the certification of coal-tar colors which are harmless and suitable for use in cosmetics.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent to return to page 10, line 4. The Senator from Idaho wished to be here when that section should be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senate will recur to section 303 on page 10.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not sure that I am in order under the unanimous-consent agreement, but I did not wish to lose my right to offer the amendment at the proper place.

Referring to the committee amendment in line 9, page 10, to strike out "standards" and insert "standard", is it in order to move, in connection with that, to insert the words "definition and" before the word "standard"?

Mr. COPELAND. Referring to standards for fresh fruits?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will read the report on the bill, it will occur to him that there was a belief on the part of the apple people that there might be an effort on the part of the Department to establish the chemical and divisible constituents of an apple; and the report shows that it is intended that no standard of identity shall be established for apples or pears.

Mr. BORAH. As the matter now stands, should the amendment be adopted and the bill enacted with that amendment, it would read as follows:

That no standard of quality shall be established for fresh fruits and fresh vegetables.

What I should like to have is the insertion of the words "definition and", so that it would read:

That no definition and standard of quality shall be established for fresh fruits and fresh vegetables.

I desire to read, at this point, part of a letter which I have received from the Idaho Shippers' Traffic Association. They call attention to several matters and say:

The first of these to which we refer is that carried under section 303 on page 9 of the bill, under the heading "Definitions and standards for food." This paragraph authorizes the Secretary to establish any food definition and standards of identity, also, fill of container. This would give the Secretary of Agriculture tremendous power, for under such provision it would be possible for him to establish a regulation requiring a certain sugar, acid, and solid content of apples, pears, prunes, or of any vegetables, and any variation from that standard would be a violation of the law if offered in interstate commerce.

Everyone knows there is a wide variation in the sugar and acid as well as the solid content of different varieties of fruits and vegetables, this naturally being chargeable and dependent entirely on the district in which it is grown. Climatic and seasonal variations of each growing season will enter into the development of the product as well as different soil conditions and different handling by different growers.

One grower will handle his orchards or crop rotation in the way of vegetables in one manner and get certain results. His neighbor will use decidedly different methods, and naturally the product will reflect the handling by the growers.

As I understand, the desire of the writers of this letter has been met in part—that is to say, that no standard of quality shall be established for fresh fruit—but I understand also that they desire that no definition and standard shall be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, in the report it is definitely stated that no standard of identity for apples or pears should be established. There are fruits, such as cantaloups, which might be shipped in interstate commerce when they had been plucked too early, and would go to the consumer unripe. We did not wish to embarrass the Department in the administration of the proposed law, which is for the protection of the public, by precluding the possibility on the part of the department of establishing a standard of identity as regards cantaloups, for example, that they should be ripe cantaloups, and proper for human consumption. We sought to protect the apple grower, and we are confident that we have done so, because we have written into the report at the bottom of the page this language:

It is not expected that definitions and standards of identity will be provided for natural food where no public benefit would result. For example, there is not now and is not likely to be any abuse in the sale of immature apples and pears; these products can be accurately judged by the consumer on their appearance and no definition of identity is required for them.

Mr. BORAH. That is satisfactory in part. Now let me ask the Senator in charge of the bill another question. Under the bill, with the amendment, there will be no standard of quality established for fresh fruits and fresh vegetables?

Mr. COPELAND. There will not be.

Mr. BORAH. I will not urge the word "definition" further at this time. I shall await the adoption of the committee amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment passed over.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 10, line 8, under the subhead "Definitions and standards for food", after the word "quality", to strike out "and" and insert "and/or"; in line 9, after the word "no", to strike out "standards" and insert "standard"; and in line 10, after the word "fresh", to strike out "natural foods" and insert "fruits and fresh vegetables" so as to read:

SEC. 303. For the effectuation of the purposes of this act the Secretary is hereby authorized to promulgate regulations, as provided by sections 701 and 703, fixing and establishing for any food a definition and standard of identity, and a reasonable standard of quality and/or fill of container: Provided, That no standard of quality shall be established for fresh fruits and fresh vegetables.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Chapter VI—False advertisement", on page 25, line 21, after the word "if", to strike out "in every particular", and in line 23, after the word "substantial", to insert "and reliable", so as to read:

CHAPTER VI

FALSE ADVERTISEMENT

SECTION 601 (a) An advertisement of a food, drug, or cosmetic shall be deemed to be false if it is false or misleading in any particular relevant to the purposes of this act regarding such food, drug, or cosmetic. Any representation concerning any effect of a drug shall be deemed to be false under this paragraph if such representation is not sustained by demonstrable scientific facts or substantial and reliable medical opinion.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I was called out of the Chamber, and I am not aware of the reason for skipping from page 10 to page 25.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from Idaho had previously asked that the amendments in section 303 on page 10 go over until he could be present. Then a few moments ago he requested that they be considered.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to call attention, on page 16, line 19, to the provision which reads, "If it is for internal use by man and contains any quantity of any of the following narcotic or hypnotic substances," and then they are named. I wonder whether the substances mentioned should not be prohibited whether for internal use or any other kind of use. I was struck by an article in the Evening Star of yesterday about a narcotic sold in the District of Columbia which is made from a poisoned weed originating in Mexico and cultivated in this country. The article to which I refer is mentioned on line 23, but it is limited there, it seems to me, by the use of the words "internal use."

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator would like to have the word "internal", on line 19, stricken out?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think so.

Mr. COPELAND. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 16, line 19, it is proposed to strike out the word "internal."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I should like to have inserted in the RECORD the article from the Evening Star of yesterday to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Star, Apr. 1, 1935]

DREAD MARIHUANA SOLD IN DISTRICT—AUTHORITIES, POWERLESS TO STOP TRAFFIC IN DRUG, ASK NEW LEGISLATION

With a new bill aimed at the narcotic traffic in the District slated for introduction in the House this week, Federal officials disclosed today that marihuana—a drug known to induce insanity—is being sold here in places known to them and that authorities are prepared to strike at this traffic as soon as legislation affording them the proper power is enacted.

Although marihuana is described by Narcotics Commissioner Harry J. Anslinger as a "dangerous drug", there is no Federal or District law to control its use, and until such legislation is provided officials are virtually powerless to act.

At present the only thing that authorities can do is to evoke the old pharmacy law, which provides a $10 fine for failure to label poison. Such action in the case of smoking marihuana is said by officials to be ineffective.

The proposed legislation will be introduced by Representative FENERTY, of Pennsylvania, he indicated today. The bill, it is believed, will contain, among its many other provisions, severe penalties for unauthorized sale of marihuana.

USED IN "REEFERS"

The drug is being smoked here mostly in the form of "reefers", a kind of cigarette in which the dried flowers of the marihuana, or Indian hemp, are mixed with tobacco. These "reefers" are known also by addicts in various parts of the country as "muggles", "grifo", "moots", and "mooters." Marihuana also is smoked in pipes, mixed with tobacco, and is then usually referred to as "kiff" and "Indian hay."

Alarmed by crimes committed by addicts, many States, including all those around the District, have taken action to curb the drug.

In Maryland, Governor Nice only recently signed a so-called "model" State narcotic act, which enables authorities to put sharp restrictions on marihuana.

Virginia enacted a State narcotic law last session.

West Virginia's Legislature adopted a model narcotic law, but, according to a check up here, the measure has not yet been signed by the Governor.

EVIDENCE INCREASING

Evidence of the possession, sale, and smoking of marihuana has been on the increase, according to officials in close touch with the situation.

In Washington the marihuana cigarettes are being sold for 25 cents each. The price is lower in some sections, but as high as 50 cents a cigarette in others.

One of the crimes laid to marihuana was described in an official document covering a case in Florida:

"A young boy who had become addicted to smoking marihuana cigarettes, in a fit of frenzy, because he imagined a number of people were trying to cut off his arms and legs, seized an ax and killed his father, mother, two brothers, and a sister, wiping out the entire family except himself."

In California a man under the influence of marihuana actually decapitated his best friend.

YOUNG PEOPLE INVOLVED

Addiction to Indian hemp is admitted by this Government to be on the increase, according to a report to the League of Nations. This addiction, said to have been formerly confined largely to the Middle West and Southwest, appears to be spreading, the report said, and "has become a problem in the southeastern and northeastern parts of the United States, particularly among the younger people."

The toxic effects of the weed appear to be limited exclusivly to the higher nerve centers, according to experts on the problem.

It produces first an exaltation with a feeling of well-being and an increased sense of physical strength and power. Accompanying this exaltation is a stimulating of the imagination, followed by a more or less delirious state characterized by visions, sometimes pleasing, sometimes gruesome. Persons and things look small, time is interminable; seconds seem like minutes and hours like days.

While the delirium is one of degrees, it gradually merges, if the dose is sufficient, into a state of general motor weakness, fatigue, drowsiness, and sleep. In cases of prolonged addiction, the somnolent action, however, is replaced by psychomotor activity with a tendency to willful violence accompanied by complete loss of judgment and restraint.

Commissioner Anslinger said marihuana is the same as hashish, used widely in the Near East and derived from the Arabic word "assassin."

The production and use of the hemp within the United States are not prohibited by Federal law, and Congress is restricted under the Constitution from enacting legislation covering the matter because the question is one which lies solely within the police power of the States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment of the Committee on Commerce.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 23, to strike out "(b) It shall be unlawful to advertise for sale in interstate commerce a drug represented to have any therapeutic" and to insert "(b) For the purposes of this act the advertisement of a drug representing it to have any therapeutic"; on page 25, after the word "tuberculosis", to insert "poliomyelitis (infantile paralysis)"; in line 5, after the word "diseases", to strike out "as well as any other disease which may be added to this list by regulations as provided by sections 701 and 703" and insert "shall be deemed to be false"; and in line 12, after the word "or", to strike out "if it", so as to read:

(b) For the purposes of this act the advertisement of a drug representing it to have any therapeutic effect in the treatment of Bright's disease, cancer, tuberculosis, poliomyelitis (infantile paralysis), venereal diseases, heart and vascular diseases shall be deemed to be false; except that no advertisement not in violation of paragraph (a) of this section shall be deemed to be false under this paragraph if it is disseminated only to members of the medical and pharmaceutical professions or appears only in the scientific periodicals of these professions, or is disseminated only for the purpose of public-health education by persons not commercially interested, directly or indirectly, in the sale of such drugs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Chapter VII", on page 26, after line 16, to strike out "General administrative provisions."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask that the committee amendment on page 26, line 17, which proposes to strike out the headline "General administrative provisions", be rejected.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 18, where the committee proposed to strike out the subhead "Power to make regulations."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 26, line 19, where the committee proposed to insert the subhead "Provisions as to regulations."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, at the beginning of line 20, to strike out "Sec." and insert "Section"; and in the same line, after the word "to", to strike out "make" and insert "promulgate", so as to read:

SECTION 701. (a) The authority to promulgate regulations for the efficient enforcement of this act, except as otherwise provided in this section, is hereby vested in the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 1, after the numerals "1914", to insert a comma and "except as otherwise provided therein"; and in line 4, before the words "as the", to insert "after due notice," so as to read:

(b) The Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Agriculture shall jointly prescribe regulations for the efficient enforcement of the provisions of section 714, except as otherwise provided therein. Such regulations shall be promulgated in such manner and take effect at such time, after due notice, as the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine.

(c) Hearings authorized or required by this act shall be conducted by the Secretary or such officer or employee as he may designate for the purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 9, after the word "regulations" to insert "and administrative actions"; so as to make the subhead read:

COURT REVIEW OF REGULATIONS AND ADMINISTRATIVE ACTIONS

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 12, after the word "on" to strike out "complaint of" and insert "petition by"; in line 13, after the word "person" to insert "(1)"; in line 15, after the word "Department" to strike out "of Agriculture"; in line 18, after the word "capricious" to insert "in the light of the facts,"; in line 19, after the word "petitioner" to strike out "will" and insert "may"; and in line 20, after the word "enforcement" to strike out the colon and the following proviso, "Provided, That nothing in this section shall be deemed to abridge the right of any person against whom a criminal prosecution or suit for injunction shall have been brought under this act, or who shall intervene as claimant in any proceeding of libel for condemnation to plead that the regulation whose violation is alleged as the ground for such prosecution, suit, or libel is invalid on any of the grounds set forth above", and to insert a semicolon and the words, "and (2) to grant appropriate injunctive relief from any act or omission of any officer, representative, or employee of the Department in the administration of this act, if it has been shown that such act or omission is unreasonable, arbitrary, or capricious, in the light of the facts, or not in accordance with law, and that the petitioner may suffer substantial damage thereby: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be deemed to abridge the right of any person against whom a criminal prosecution or suit for injunction shall have been brought under this act, or who shall intervene as claimant in any proceeding of libel for condemnation, to plead that the regulation, the violation of which is alleged as the ground for such prosecution, suit, or libel, is invalid on any of the grounds set forth above," so as to read:

SEC. 702. The district courts of the United States are hereby vested with jurisdiction, on petition by any interested person (1) to restrain by injunction, temporary or permanent, the enforcement by any officer, representative, or employee of the Department of any regulation promulgated as provided in sections 701 and 703 if it is shown that the regulation is unreasonable, arbitrary, or capricious, in the light of the facts, or not in accordance with law, and that the petitioner may suffer substantial damage by reason of its enforcement; and (2) to grant appropriate injunctive relief from any act or omission of any officer, representative, or employee of the Department in the administration of this act, if it has been shown that such act or omission is unreasonable, arbitrary, or capricious, in the light of the facts, or not in accordance with law, and that the petitioner may suffer substantial damage thereby: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be deemed to abridge the right of any person against whom a criminal prosecution or suit for injunction shall have been brought under this act, or who shall intervene as claimant in any proceeding of libel for condemnation, to plead that the regulation, the violation of which is alleged as the ground for such prosecution, suit, or libel, is invalid on any of the grounds set forth above.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public health and food standards committees", on page 28, line 20, after the word "and", to strike out "(d)" and to insert "(c)"; and after line 20 to strike out "section 401, paragraph (b); section 501, paragraph (b); section 302, paragraph (j); section 402, paragraphs (d), (f), (h), (j), and (k); sections 304, 305, 503, and section 601, paragraph (b)", and to insert "section 302, paragraph (j); section 304, paragraphs (a) and (b); section 305, paragraph (a); section 401, paragraphs (a) and (b); section 402, paragraphs (f), (h), (j), and (k); section 403; section 501, paragraph (e); and section 503"; on page 29, line 7, after the word "health", to insert "with respect to food, drugs, and/or cosmetics"; so as to read:

PUBLIC HEALTH AND FOOD STANDARDS COMMITTEES

SEC. 703. (a) To aid and advise the Secretary in promulgating regulations for the protection of public health, as contemplated by section 301, paragraphs (a) and (c); section 302, paragraph (j); section 304, paragraphs (a) and (b); section 305, paragraph (a); section 401, paragraphs (a) and (b); section 402, paragraphs (f), (h), (j), and (k); section 403; section 501, paragraph (e); and section 503, a Committee on Public Health is hereby provided which shall consist of five members designated by the President with a view to their distinguished scientific attainment and interest in public health with respect to food, drugs, and/or cosmetics and without regard to their political affiliation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 11, after the word "paragraphs", to strike out "(c)," in line 16, before the word "Administration", to strike out "Food and Drug", and in line 19, after the words "from the", to strike out "Food and Drug", so as to read:

(b) To aid and advise the Secretary in the promulgation of regulations with respect to food, as contemplated by section 302, paragraphs (g) and (h), and section 303, a Committee on Food Standards is hereby provided which shall consist of 7 members, 3 of whom shall be selected from the public, 2 from the food producing, processing, manufacturing, and distributing industry, and 2 from the Administration. The members selected from the public and the food industry shall be appointed by the President without regard to political affiliation, and the members from the Administration shall be designated by the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 22, after the word "by", to strike out "the provision" and insert "any provision"; on page 30, line 5, after the word "authorized", to strike out "to make findings of fact and"; and in line 6, after the word "regulation", to insert "as he shall find to be necessary to effectuate the purposes of such provision", so as to read:

(c) Whenever the Secretary deems that any regulation contemplated by any provision of this act enumerated in paragraphs (a) and (b) of this section should be established, he shall so advise the appropriate committee. With the approval of a majority of its members, the committee shall recommend to the Secretary a proposed regulation, and the Secretary shall give notice of the proposal and of the time and place of a public hearing to be held thereon not less than 30 days after the date of such notice. After such hearing the Secretary is authorized to formulate and promulgate such regulation as he shall find to be necessary to effectuate the purposes of such provision, but no such regulation shall be promulgated without the approval of a majority of the members of the committee. The regulation so promulgated shall become effective on a date fixed by the Secretary, which date shall not be prior to 90 days after its promulgation, and may be amended or repealed in the same manner as is provided for its adoption: Provided, That regulations setting up exemptions pursuant to section 402, paragraph (f), may be promulgated without notice or hearing and shall become effective at such time as the Secretary determines.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 19, after the word "Secretary", to strike out "under section 301, paragraphs (a) and (d); section 501, paragraph (b); section 402, paragraphs (j) and (k); and sections 304 and 503" and to insert "under section 301, paragraphs (a) and (c); section 302, paragraph (j); section 304, paragraphs (a) and (b); section 401, paragraph (a); section 402, paragraphs (h), (j), and (k); section 403; section 501, paragraph (e); and section 503", so as to read:

(d) If any regulation promulgated by the Secretary under section 301, paragraphs (a) and (c); section 302, paragraph (j); section 304, paragraphs (a) and (b); section 401, paragraph (a); section 402, paragraphs (h), (j), and (k); section 403; section 501, paragraph (e); and section 503, is declared invalid in any court proceeding, the Secretary may promulgate in substitution therefor a temporary regulation consistent with such decision. Such temporary regulation may be promulgated without notice or hearing and shall become effective at and for such time as the Secretary designates, but in no event longer than 180 days from the effective date thereof. On or before the promulgation of such temporary regulation the Secretary shall institute proceedings, as provided in paragraph (c) of this section, for the establishment of a new regulation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 14, before the words "Administration", to strike out "Food and Drug"; in line 23, after the word "Department", to strike out "of Agriculture"; and in the same line, after the word "has", to insert "or acquires", so as to read:

(e) The term of office of members of the committees provided by paragraphs (a) and (b) of this section, other than members from the Administration, shall be 5 years; except that an appointment to fill a vacancy occurring before the expiration of a term shall be for the remainder of that term, and of the appointments first made to each committee after approval of this act, 1 shall be for 1 year, 1 for 2 years, 1 for 3 years, and 1 for 4 years, as shall be designated by the President in their respective appointments. The President shall designate the chairmen of the committees. No person who is a member of the Department or who has or acquires a financial interest in the manufacture, advertising, or sale of any food, drug, or cosmetic shall be eligible to serve on the Committee on Public Health, or as a member from the public on the Committee on Food Standards.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 13, after the word "committees", to insert "Having received from an interested industry or from representatives of the public a request for a new regulation or a change in an existing regulation, either committee, on its own motion, may advise the Secretary of its recommendations for action in accordance with the procedure set up by this section", and to strike out lines 21 to 23, inclusive, as follows: "Each committee on its own motion or at the request of the Secretary may advise him of its views on any question concerning the enforcement of this act", so as to read:

(f) Each committee shall convene at the call of its chairman at such time and place as he may designate, but action by either committee under this section may be taken by the members thereof acting individually without convening in meeting. In each case in which approval by either committee of a regulation is required under this section, the Secretary shall transmit to each member of such committee a transcript of the record of the public hearing held by him. Members of the committee shall be given due notice of, and may sit with the Secretary or his representatives at, all such public hearings relating to the functions of their respective committees. Having received from an interested industry or from representatives of the public a request for a new regulation or a change in an existing regulation, either committee, on its own motion, may advise the Secretary of its recommendations for action in accordance with the procedure set up by this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 33, line 1, after the word "industries", to insert "and public", so as to make the subhead read:

Advisory committees from industries and public.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 6, after the word "industry", to insert "creators and/or"; in line 7, after the word "public" and the period, to strike out "To aid in securing compliance with the requirements of this act, the" and insert "The"; in line 10, after the word "advertising", to insert "and/or trade"; at the beginning of line 11, to strike out "tend to effectuate the purposes of this act" and insert "will aid in securing compliance with the requirements of this act"; and in line 16, after the word "act", to strike out the comma and "and no plans shall be accepted which are designed to promote monopolies or eliminate or oppress legitimate enterprises", so as to read:

ADVISORY COMMITTEES FROM INDUSTRIES AND PUBLIC

SEC. 704. For the purposes of consultation in formulating general administrative policies for the enforcement of this act, the Secretary is authorized to appoint an advisory committee from each of the following groups: The food industry, the drug industry, the cosmetic industry, creators and/or disseminators of advertising, the public. The Secretary is further authorized to accept plans for such self-regulation of advertising and/or trade practices as will aid in securing compliance with the requirements of this act, when presented by associations or groups representative of their industries: Provided, That nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as restricting the responsibilities and powers conferred upon the Secretary by this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Examinations and Investigations", on page 33, line 22, after the word "Department", to strike out "of Agriculture", so as to read:

EXAMINATIONS AND INVESTIGATIONS

SEC. 705. The Secretary is authorized to conduct examinations and investigations for the purposes of this act through officers and employees of the Department or through any health, food, or drug officer or employee of any State, Territory, or political subdivision thereof, duly commissioned by the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask to have inserted at the bottom of page 33 the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 33, after line 25, it is proposed to insert the following:

The regulations promulgated under section 701 (a) shall provide for the delivery of a representative part of an official sample of a food, drug, or cosmetic to the vendor thereof, if such sample is collected to determine by analysis whether it is adulterated within the meaning of this act and subject to any conditions and exceptions which are necessary for the purposes of this act and which are prescribed by such regulations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 22, after the word "to", to strike out "regulate interstate commerce in food, drugs, and cosmetics, and enforce" and insert "protect public health and welfare through enforcement of"; and on page 35, after line 11, to strike out the following:

(b) The several district courts of the United States are hereby vested with jurisdiction to restrain by injunction, temporary or permanent, the shipment in interstate commerce or delivery after receipt in interstate commerce of any food, drug, or cosmetic from or by any factory, warehouse, establishment, or vehicle, designated in paragraph (a) of this section, if the owner, operator, or custodian thereof has, after reasonable request, denied permission to officers or employees duly designated by the Secretary so to enter and inspect such factory, warehouse, establishment, or vehicle and equipment, finished and unfinished materials, containers, and labels there used or stored. Whenever such permission is granted, the injunction issued pursuant to this paragraph shall be dissolved, or may be continued in force subject to such conditions governing the inspection as the court may order. Violation of any injunction issued pursuant to this paragraph may be summarily tried and punished by the court as a contempt. Such contempt proceedings may be instituted by order of the court or by the filing of an information by the United States attorney.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

(b) In order to keep the channels of interstate commerce free from adulterated and misbranded articles of food, drugs, and cosmetics so as adequately to protect public health and welfare, the introduction or causing to be introduced into interstate commerce or delivery or causing of delivery after receipt in interstate commerce, of any food, drug, or cosmetic, from any factory, warehouse, establishment, or vehicle, designated in paragraph (a) of this section, is hereby prohibited, if the owner, operator, or custodian thereof has, after reasonable request, denied permission to officers or employees duly designated by the Secretary to make the inspection authorized by such paragraph; and any person who introduces or causes to be introduced into interstate commerce, or delivers or causes to be delivered after receipt in interstate commerce, any food, drug, or cosmetic from any such factory, warehouse, establishment, or vehicle after the owner, operator, or custodian thereof has, after reasonable request, so denied permission to make such inspection, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; and for each such introduction or causing to be introduced, or such delivery or causing of delivery, after such denial and until such permission is granted, such person shall be liable to a fine of not more than $50.

So as to read:

FACTORY INSPECTION

SEC. 707. (a) In order adequately to protect public health and welfare through enforcement of the provisions of this act, officers or employees duly designated by the Secretary, after first making reasonable request and obtaining permission of the owner, operator, or custodian thereof, are authorized (1) to enter any factory, warehouse, or establishment in which food, drugs, or cosmetics are manufactured, processed, packed, or held for shipment in interstate commerce or are held after such shipment, or to enter any vehicle being used to transport such food, drugs, or cosmetics, in interstate commerce; and (2) to inspect such factory, warehouse, establishment, or vehicle and all equipment, finished and unfinished materials, containers, and labels there used or stored.

(b) In order to keep the channels of interstate commerce free from adulterated and misbranded articles of food, drugs, and cosmetics so as adequately to protect public health and welfare, the introduction or causing to be introduced into interstate commerce, or delivery or causing of delivery after receipt in interstate commerce, of any food, drug, or cosmetic, from any factory, warehouse, establishment, or vehicle, designated in paragraph (a) of this section, is hereby prohibited, if the owner, operator, or custodian thereof has, after reasonable request, denied permission to officers or employees duly designated by the Secretary to make the inspection authorized by such paragraph; and any person who introduces or causes to be introduced into interstate commerce, or delivers or causes to be delivered after receipt in interstate commerce, any food, drug, or cosmetic from any such factory, warehouse, establishment, or vehicle after the owner, operator, or custodian thereof has, after reasonable request, so denied permission to make such inspection, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; and for each such introduction or causing to be introduced, or such delivery or causing of delivery, after such denial and until such permission is granted, such person shall be liable to a fine of not more than $50.

Mr. COPELAND. We have now come to section 707, and in order that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] may offer a substitute for subdivisions (a) and (b), I ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to offer his substitute, which will strike out some of the language not printed in italics which has been written into the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I offer a substitute for the entire section 707. I think the Senator from New York is in agreement with me in connection with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment, in the nature of a substitute for section 707, will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all of section 707 on page 34, beginning in line 22, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 707. (a) In order to prevent interstate commerce in adulterated or misbranded food, drugs, or cosmetics for the purposes of safeguarding the public health and preventing deceit upon the purchasing public, officers or employees duly designated by the Secretary, after first making reasonable request and obtaining permission of the owner, operator, or custodian thereof, are authorized (1) to enter any factory, warehouse, or establishment in which food, drugs, or cosmetics are manufactured, processed, packed, or held for shipment in interstate commerce or are held after such shipment, or to enter any vehicle being used to transport such food, drugs, or cosmetics in interstate commerce; and (2) to inspect such factory, warehouse, establishment, or vehicle and all pertinent equipment, finished and unfinished materials, containers, and labeling therein. Any such owner, operator, or custodian who refuses such reasonable request shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall on conviction thereof be subject to the penalties prescribed by section 708 (b) of this act.

(b) The several district courts of the United States are hereby vested with jurisdiction to order the disclosure of a private formula or a secret process in pursuance of an inspection made under this section, if and to the extent such disclosure is necessary for the purposes of this act, and in such case only.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Prohibited acts and penalties", on page 37, line 5, after the word "following", to strike out "acts" and insert "acts and the causing thereof", so as to read:

SEC. 708. (a) The following acts and the causing thereof are hereby prohibited:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 7, after the word "introduction", to insert "or delivery for introduction", so as to read:

(1) The introduction or delivery for introduction into interstate commerce of any food, drug, or cosmetic that is adulterated or misbranded.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 17, before the name "United States", to strike out "radio broadcast", and in the same line, after the word "interstate", to strike out "commerce" and insert "commerce by radiobroadcast or otherwise", so as to read:

(4) The dissemination of any false advertisement by United States mails, or in interstate commerce by radiobroadcast or otherwise, for the purpose of inducing, directly or indirectly, the purchase of food, drugs, or cosmetics.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 25, after the word "food", to strike out the comma and "drugs, or cosmetic", so as to read:

(6) The introduction into interstate commerce of any food if the manufacturer, processor, or packer does not hold an unsuspended valid permit when so required by regulations under section 305.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 4, to insert:

(8) The forging, counterfeiting, simulating, or falsely representing, or without proper authority using any mark stamp, tag, label, or other identification device authorized or required by regulations promulgated under the provisions of section 305.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 9, to insert:

(9) The using by any person to his own advantage, or revealing, other than to the Secretary or his officers or employees or to the courts when relevant in the trial of any case under this act, any information acquired under authority of sections 305 or 707 concerning any method or process which as a trade secret is entitled to protection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 16, after the word "violates", to strike out "or causes to be violated"; in line 17, after the words "provisions of", to insert "subdivision (1) to (7), inclusive, of"; in line 21, before the word "more" to strike out "less than $100 nor"; and in line 24, after the word "not", to strike out "less than $100 nor", so as to read:

(b) Any person who violates any of the provisions of subdivision (1) to (7), inclusive, of paragraph (a) of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall on conviction thereof be subject to imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or a fine of not more than $1,000, or both such imprisonment and fine; and for a second or subsequent offense imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or a fine of not more than $3,000, or both such imprisonment and fine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 2, after the word "willful", to strike out "offense" and insert "violation of any of the provisions of subdivisions (1) to (7), inclusive, of paragraph (a) of this section", and in line 5, after the word "not", to strike out "less than $1,000 nor", so as to read:

(c) Notwithstanding the provision of paragraph (b) of this section, in case of a willful violation of any of the provisions of subdivisions (1) to (7), inclusive, of paragraph (a) of this section the penalty shall be imprisonment for not more than 3 years, or a fine of not more than $10,000, or both such imprisonment and fine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 7, to strike out:

(d) No publisher, radiobroadcast licensee, or other agency or medium for the dissemination of advertising shall be deemed to have violated the provisions of paragraphs (b) or (c) of this section by reason of the dissemination of any false advertisement, but the liability shall rest upon the manufacturer, packer, distributor, or seller who caused the dissemination of such advertisement. Any publisher, radiobroadcast licensee, or other agency or medium for the dissemination of advertising who, on reasonable request of any officer or employee duly designated by the Secretary, willfully refuses to furnish the name and post-office address of the person who caused him to disseminate any advertisement, or who disseminates any false advertisement where the dissemination thereof has been caused by a person residing in a foreign country, and does not establish a guarantee or undertaking signed by a manufacturer, packer, distributor, or seller of the article advertised, residing in the United States, to the effect that such person assumes full responsibility for any violation of this act incurred by the dissemination of such advertisement, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall on conviction thereof be subject to the penalties prescribed in paragraph (c) of this section.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

(d) No publisher, radiobroadcast licensee, advertising agency, or other agency or medium for the dissemination of advertising shall be deemed to have violated the provisions of subdivision (4) or (5) of paragraph (a) of this section by reason of the dissemination of any false advertisement when such dissemination is caused by the manufacturer, packer, distributor, or seller, residing in the United States, of the article so advertised; but such manufacturer, packer, distributor, or seller shall be amenable to the prosecution and penalties provided for violation of such subdivisions. It shall be unlawful for any publisher, radiobroadcast licensee, advertising agency, or other agency or medium for the dissemination of advertising willfully to refuse, on reasonable request of an officer or employee duly designated by the Secretary, to furnish to such officer or employee the name and post-office address of the manufacturer, packer, distributor, or seller, residing in the United States, who caused him to disseminate any advertisement; and any publisher, radiobroadcast licensee, advertising agency, or other agency or medium for the dissemination of advertising who so refuses shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall on conviction thereof be subject to the penalties prescribed by paragraph (b) of this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 3, after the word "be", to strike out "prosecuted under" and insert "subject to the penalties of"; in line 5, after the word "commerce", to strike out "an" and insert "any"; in the same line, after the word "article", to insert "of food, drug, or cosmetic"; in line 15, after the word "such", to strike out "person assumes full responsibility for any violation" and insert "article is not adulterated or misbranded, and such copy is not false, within the meaning"; in line 18, after the word "it", to strike out the comma and "which may be incurred by the introduction of such article into interstate commerce or by the dissemination of such advertising"; and on page 42, line 3, after the word "which", to strike out "is not distributed or sold" and insert "he does not distribute or sell", so as to read:

(e) No dealer shall be subject to the penalties of paragraph (b) of this section (1) for having received in interstate commerce any article of food, drug, or cosmetic and in good faith sold it as received unless he refuses to furnish on request of an officer or employee duly designated by the Secretary the name and address of the person from whom he purchased or received such article and all documents pertaining to the delivery of the article to him, or (2) if he establishes a guaranty or undertaking signed by the person residing in the United States from whom he received in good faith the article of food, drug, or cosmetic, or the advertising copy therefor, to the effect that such article is not adulterated or misbranded, and such copy is not false, within the meaning of this act, designating it. To afford protection, such guaranty or undertaking shall contain the name and address of the person furnishing such guaranty or undertaking, and such person shall be amenable to the prosecution and penalties which would attach in due course to the dealer under the provisions of this act. No retail dealer shall be prosecuted under this section for the dissemination, in good faith, other than by radio broadcast, of any advertisement offering for sale at his place of business any article which he does not distribute or sell in interstate commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, after line 4, to strike out:

(f) Any person who forges, counterfeits, simulates, or falsely represents, or without proper authority uses any mark, stamp, tag, label, or other identification device authorized or required by regulations promulgated under the provisions of section 305, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall on conviction thereof be subject to imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, or both such imprisonment and fine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, after line 12, to strike out:

(g) Any person who uses to his own advantage or reveals, other than to the Secretary or his officers or employees, or to the courts when relevant in the trial of any case under this act, any information acquired under authority of sections 305 or 707, concerning any method or process which is entitled to protection in equity as a trade secret, shall be guilty of a felony, and shall on conviction thereof be subject to imprisonment for not more than 2 years or a fine of not more than $5,000 or both such imprisonment and fine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, after line 22, to insert:

(f) Any person who violates any of the provisions of subdivision (8) of paragraph (a) of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall on conviction thereof be subject to imprisonment for not more than 1 year or a fine of not more than $5,000, or both such imprisonment and fine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 3, to insert:

(g) Any person who violates any of the provisions of subdivision (9) of paragraph (a) of this section shall be guilty of a felony and shall on conviction thereof be subject to imprisonment for not more than 2 years or a fine of not more than $5,000, or both such imprisonment and fine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Liability of corporations and their officers", on page 43, line 11, after the word "act", to insert "unless otherwise provided", so as to read:

SEC. 709. (a) When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, unless otherwise provided, the act, omission, or failure of any officer, employee, or agent acting for or employed by any person, within the scope of his employment or office, shall in every case be deemed to be the act, omission, or failure of such person, as well as that of the officer, employee, or agent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 18, after the word "act", to insert "unless otherwise provided", so as to read:

(b) Whenever a corporation or association violates any of the provisions of this act, unless otherwise provided, such violation shall also be deemed to be a violation by the individual directors, officers, or agents of such corporation or association who personally ordered, or did any of the acts constituting, in whole or in part, such violation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Institution of Criminal Proceedings", on page 43, line 24, after "Sec. 710", to strike out:

The Secretary shall, before reporting any violation of this act to any United States attorney for institution of criminal proceedings thereunder, afford due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested persons in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary shall prescribe. (b) The report of the Secretary to the United States attorney for the institution of criminal proceedings under this act.

And insert:

Before reporting any violation of this act to any United States attorney for institution of criminal proceedings thereunder, the Secretary shall, in accordance with regulations prescribed by him, afford appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing to interested persons (1) for hearing upon the question of such violation; and (2) for hearing to review his tentative decision to make such report, upon cause shown satisfactory to the Secretary. The report—

And in line 20, after the word "suitable", to insert "written", so as to read:

SEC. 710. Before reporting any violation of this act to any United States attorney for institution of criminal proceedings thereunder, the Secretary shall, in accordance with regulations prescribed by him, afford appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing to interested persons (1) for hearing upon the question of such violation; and (2) for hearing to review his tentative decision to make such report, upon cause shown satisfactory to the Secretary. The report shall be accompanied by findings of the appropriate officers and employees, duly authenticated under their oaths. Nothing in this act shall be construed as requiring the Secretary to report for prosecution or for the institution of libel or injunction proceedings minor violations of this act whenever he believes that the purposes of the act can best be accomplished by a suitable written notice or warning.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Seizure", on page 44, line 22, after the word "Any", to insert "article of"; in line 23, before the word "that", to strike out "in interstate commerce"; in line 24, after the word "misbranded", to insert "when introduced into or while in interstate commerce"; and on page 45, line 7, after the word "found" and the period, to strike out:

The article shall be liable to seizure (1) by process pursuant to the libel, or (2) if a chief of station or other officer of the Food and Drug Administration, duly designated by the Secretary, has probable cause to believe that the article is so adulterated as to be imminently dangerous to health, then, and in such case only, by order of such officer, issued under his oath of office, particularly describing the article to be seized, the place where located, and the officer or employee to make the seizure. In case of seizure pursuant to any such order, the jurisdiction of the court shall attach upon such seizure. Any article seized pursuant to any such order shall thereupon be promptly placed in the custody of the court and a libel of information shall be promptly filed for condemnation thereof; and if the court before which the condemnation proceedings are had shall find that there was probable cause for such seizure, it shall issue a certificate of probable cause.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

The article shall be liable to seizure by process pursuant to the libel; but if a chief of station or other employee of the Administration, duly designated by the Secretary, has probable cause to believe from facts found by him and duly reported to the Secretary that such article is so adulterated as to be imminently dangerous to health, then, and in such case only, the article shall be liable to seizure by such chief of station or employee, who shall promptly report the facts to the proper United States attorney. Such United States attorney shall file a libel of information for condemnation of the article so seized. If the court in which the libel was filed shall find that there was probable cause for such seizure, it shall issue a certificate of probable cause.

So as to read:

SEIZURE

SEC. 711. (a) Any article of food, drug, or cosmetic that is adulterated or misbranded when introduced into or while in interstate commerce, or that has been manufactured, processed, or packed in a factory or establishment, the operator of which did not, at the time of manufacture, processing, or packing, hold an unsuspended valid permit, if so required by regulations under section 305, shall be liable to be proceeded against while in interstate commerce or at any time thereafter on libel of information and condemned in any district court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which the article is found. The article shall be liable to seizure by process pursuant to the libel; but if a chief of station or other employee of the administration, duly designated by the Secretary, has probable cause to believe from facts found by him and duly reported to the Secretary that such article is so adulterated as to be imminently dangerous to health, then, and in such case only, the article shall be liable to seizure by such chief of station or employee, who shall promptly report the facts to the proper United States attorney. Such United States attorney shall file a libel of information for condemnation of the article so seized. If the court in which the libel was filed shall find that there was probable cause for such seizure, it shall issue a certificate of probable cause.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 12, after the word "any", to insert "chief of station or other"; and in line 14, before the word "of", to strike out the comma and "subdivision (2)", so as to read:

(b) If, in any proceeding against any chief of station or other officer or employee by reason of a seizure pursuant to paragraph (a) of this section, the court shall find that there was probable cause for the seizure, or if a certificate of probable cause has been issued in the condemnation proceedings, then, in the event of a judgment against such officer or employee, the amount thereof shall, upon final judgment, be paid out of appropriations made for the administration of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 21, after the word "court", to strike out "shall, by order at any" and insert "at any time after seizure up to a reasonable"; in line 22, after the word "trial", to insert "shall by order"; and in line 23, after the word "proceeding", to insert "his attorney or agent", so as to read:

(c) The court at any time after seizure up to a reasonable time before trial shall by order allow any party to a condemnation proceeding, his attorney or agent, to obtain a representative sample of the article seized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 13, after the word "Territory", to insert "in which sold", so as to read:

(d) Any food, drug, or cosmetic condemned under this section shall, after entry of the decree, be disposed of by destruction or sale as the court may, in accordance with the provisions of this section, direct and the proceeds thereof, if sold, less the legal costs and charges, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States; but such article shall not be sold under such decree contrary to the provisions of this act or the laws of the jurisdiction in which sold: Provided, That after entry of the decree and upon the payment of the costs of such proceedings and the execution of a good and sufficient bond conditioned that such article shall not be sold or disposed of contrary to the provisions of this act or the laws of any State or Territory in which sold, the court may by order direct that such article be delivered to the owner thereof to be destroyed or brought into compliance with the provisions of this act under the supervision of an officer or employee duly designated by the Secretary, and the expenses of such supervision shall be paid by the party obtaining release of the article under bond. Any article condemned by reason of the manufacturer, processor, or packer not holding an unsuspended valid permit when so required by regulations under section 305 shall be disposed of by destruction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 24, after the word "The", to strike out "proceedings" and insert "procedure"; in line 25, after the words "to the", to strike out "proceedings" and insert "procedure"; and on page 48, line 3, after the word "case", to insert "In cases of articles of food, drugs, or cosmetics seized under the provisions of this section when the same issues of adulteration or misbranding under the provisions of this act, raised by the same claimant, are pending in various jurisdictions, the United States district court for any district where one of such seizures is pending, is hereby vested with jurisdiction to consolidate and try such cases separately; and on application of the claimant, seasonably made, such cases may be tried in the jurisdiction of his choice. Separate verdicts shall be rendered in each case and judgments entered on such verdicts in conformity with the provisions of this section.", so as to read:

(e) The procedure in cases under this section shall conform, as nearly as may be, to the procedure in admiralty; except that either party may demand trial by jury of any issue of fact joined in any such case. In cases of articles of food, drugs, or cosmetics seized under the provisions of this section when the same issues of adulteration or misbranding under the provisions of this act, raised by the same claimant, are pending in various jurisdictions, the United States District Court for any district where one of such seizures is pending, is hereby vested with jurisdiction to consolidate and try such cases separately; and on application of the claimant, seasonably made, such cases may be tried in the jurisdiction of his choice. Separate verdicts shall be rendered in each case and judgments entered on such verdicts in conformity with the provisions of this section.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to this amendment. I am not surprised that the printer, after having nine prints of the bill, should make some mistakes. The entire committee gave serious thought to this amendment, and I wish to amend it, in accordance with the full committee action, by striking out, in line 9, the word "separately", and then striking out in line 11, after the period, the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, would the Senator object to the addition of a further phrase in line 11 after the word "choice", reading as follows: "or in the United States district court in the district where his principal place of business is located"?

Mr. COPELAND. There are some difficulties about that; but I have less objection to the inclusion of the language where the Senator proposes it than I would have in any other place in the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think it might perhaps be objectionable at any other place, but at this point it seems to me it might be worth taking to conference.

Mr. COPELAND. The language then would be, beginning on line 9:

And on application of the claimant, seasonably made, such cases may be tried in the jurisdiction of his choice.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Or perhaps it should read:

The jurisdiction of his choice, including the United States District Court in the district where his principal place of business is located.

Mr. COPELAND. I think the provision means exactly that. I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the committee amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 48, line 11, after the word "choice" in the amendment heretofore agreed to, it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "or in the United States District Court in the district where his principal place of business is located."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 17, to strike out:

(g) To avoid multiplicity of libel for condemnation proceedings without impairing the protection of the public or the opportunity for the prompt trial on the merits of alleged violations, the district courts of the United States are hereby vested with jurisdiction to restrain by injunction, as hereinafter provided, the institution of more than three seizure actions under this section against any article if (1) the alleged violation is one of misbranding only, (2) all current shipments of the article alleged to be misbranded bear the same labeling, (3) such alleged misbranding does not involve danger to health or gross deception, and (4) such misbranding has not been the basis of a prior judgment in favor of the United States in any criminal prosecutions or libel for condemnation proceeding under this act. Upon motion by claimant of any article seized under this section, the court may order the dismissal of the libel for condemnation thereof if more than three seizure actions have previously been instituted against such article and such claimant would be entitled to injunctive relief as hereinbefore provided.

(h) Any injunction issued pursuant to paragraph (g) of this section shall be dissolved on motion of the United States attorney, (1) upon the presentation by him of a duly certified judgment of condemnation in a seizure case against such article, or (2) at the expiration of the term of court next ensuing after the term in which such injunction issued, unless the complainant files with the court a duly certified judgment rendered upon a determination of the issue of misbranding, and entered pursuant to this section after the issuance of such injunction, or evidence satisfactory to the court of his inability to secure such determination.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

(g) The several district courts of the United States are hereby vested with jurisdiction to restrain by injunction, temporary or permanent, any multiplicity of proceedings under this section with respect of any food, drug, or cosmetic, for cause shown which is satisfactory to the court and consistent with the purpose of this act. Such injunction shall contain any conditions deemed by the court to be necessary in the circumstances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Injunction proceedings", on page 50, line 10, after the word "jurisdiction", to insert "for cause shown"; in line 12, after the word "introduction", to insert "or causing to be introduced"; in line 14, after the words "dissemination of" to insert "or causing to be disseminated"; in line 15, after the word "by", to strike out "radio broadcast"; in line 16, after the word "commerce", to insert "by radio broadcast or otherwise"; and in line 19, after the words "dissemination of", to insert "or causing to be disseminated", so as to read:

SEC. 712. (a) In order to avoid multiplicity of criminal prosecutions or libel for condemnation proceedings, the District Courts of the United States are hereby vested with jurisdiction for cause shown, to restrain by injunction, temporary or permanent, any person from the repetitious (1) introduction or causing to be introduced into interstate commerce of any adulterated or misbranded food, drug, or cosmetic; or (2) dissemination of or causing to be disseminated any false advertisement by United States mails, or in interstate commerce by radio broadcast or otherwise, for the purpose of inducing, directly or indirectly, the purchase of food, drugs, or cosmetics; or (3) dissemination of or causing to be disseminated a false advertisement by any means for the purpose of inducing, directly or indirectly, the purchase of food, drugs, or cosmetics in interstate commerce. In such injunction proceedings it shall not be necessary to show on the part of such person an intent to continue the offense.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 7, after the word "jurisdiction" and the period, to insert "No person shall be deemed to have violated an injunction, issued pursuant to this section, by reason of the dissemination, subsequent to such injunction, of the false advertisement which was the basis of the injunction, if such dissemination was beyond the control of such person", so as to read:

(b) Violation of any injunction issued pursuant to this section may be summarily tried and punished by the court as a contempt. Such contempt proceedings may be instituted by order of the court or by the filing of an information by the United States attorney; and process of the court for the arrest of the violator may be served at any place in the United States or subject to its jurisdiction. No person shall be deemed to have violated an injunction, issued pursuant to this section, by reason of the dissemination, subsequent to such injunction, of the false advertisement which was the basis of the injunction, if such dissemination was beyond the control of such person.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Duties of United States attorney", on page 51, line 16, after the word "libel", to insert "of information"; in line 23, after the word "section", to insert "702 and section"; and in line 24, before the word "shall", to strike out "and section 702", so as to read:

SEC. 713. It shall be the duty of each United States attorney to whom the Secretary reports any violation for institution of criminal libel of information for condemnation, or other proceedings under this act, or to whom any health, food, or drug officer of any State or Territory, or political subdivision thereof, presents evidence satisfactory to the United States attorney of any such violation, to cause appropriate proceedings to be instituted in the proper courts of the United States without delay. All suits instituted under this act other than those pursuant to section 702 and section 711, paragraph (g), shall be by and in the name of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Publicity", on page 54, line 7, before the word "information", to strike out "such"; in the same line, after the word "cosmetics", to strike out "as is necessary to protect against danger to public health or fraud upon the consumer, but such information regarding any brand of food, drug, or cosmetic gained under section 302, paragraph (i), or section 402, paragraph (e), shall not be so disseminated except"; in line 13, after the words "of the", to strike out "consumer: Provided, That nothing" and insert "consumer. Nothing"; and in line 16, after the word "of", where it occurs the second time, to strike out "his" and insert "the", so as to read:

(b) The Secretary may also cause to be disseminated information regarding food, drugs, or cosmetics in cases involving imminent danger to health or gross deception of the consumer. Nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit the Secretary from collecting, reporting, and illustrating the results of the investigations of the Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the committee amendments. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, after line 8, on page 56, the last page of the bill, I move to insert a new paragraph, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to insert, on page 56, after line 8, the following new paragraph:

(c) Meats and meat-food products shall be exempt from the provisions of this act to the extent of the application thereto of the Meat Inspection Act, approved March 4, 1907 (U. S. C., title 21, secs. 71–93; 34 Stat. 1260 et seq.), as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be reprinted tonight with the amendments as adopted, so that we may have it before us in that form tomorrow when the Senate convenes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COPELAND. I have no disposition to press for a final vote tonight. Therefore I yield the floor at this time.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further reports of committees, the first order of business on the calendar will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Howard L. Doyle to be United States attorney, southern district of Illinois.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Joseph T. Votava to be United States attorney, district of Nebraska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in legislative session, took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 3, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 2 (legislative day of Mar. 13), 1935

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS

Howard L. Doyle to be United States attorney, southern district of Illinois.

Joseph T. Votava to be United States attorney, district of Nebraska.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, APRIL 2, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we trust that we hold in our hearts unspeakable praise and gratitude because Thou hast put on human nature and carried it up the hills of light. We thank Thee, Father, for Thy marvelous gift to the world. He overcomes doubt, destroys sin, cures sorrow, breaks down barriers, and establishes the kingdom of brotherhood in the minds and hearts of men. We are thus made free from annoying disquietudes, and are blest with contentment undisturbed. We pray that we may love Thee with all our hearts and understanding and our neighbors as ourselves. This is infinitely more than whole sacrifices and burnt offerings. Heavenly Father, sustain us with a fine sense of human rights; the right to be well born; the right to know the meaning of religion; the right to worship Thee according to the voice of conscience; the right to work; and the right to have a share in the good things of life. Show us the path today, blessed Lord, and secure to us and to our children blessings of the fullness of joy. Thine shall be the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. UTTERBACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary may have permission to sit during the sessions of the House today and the balance of this week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization may have permission to sit during sessions of the House on Wednesday and Thursday of this week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE] is unavoidably detained. He has requested that I ask that he be granted unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes tomorrow after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot do that under a reservation of objection. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I doubt the wisdom of the House consenting to starting off the day with 30-minute speeches. Members of the House complain to me saying that they come over here prepared to take up the regular announced business of the House for the day and do not like to leave their offices and come here and have to listen to some 20- or 30-minute speeches. I just pass the matter up to the House. If the gentleman from South Dakota is granted 30 minutes, there is no reason why we should not grant a like time to half a dozen other Members. I feel that the House would like to have these speeches either made under general debate or later in the day. I do not care to be solely responsible for interfering with speeches, but I do feel that they ought to be made as much as possible at times when they will interfere with business as little as possible. I have said before that I think business is more important than speeches. However, if no one else cares to object to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota, I will not.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. It is not unusual to submit such requests as I have made.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I know it is not. It is too common.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE WHEELER-HOWARD ACT

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to renew permission granted me some time ago to print my own remarks in the RECORD, including certain excerpts from testimony in committee hearings and from the last annual report of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, are the excerpts from the report of the Secretary of the Interior very extensive?

Mr. KVALE. I would not say they were extensive; they occupy perhaps three pages of the hearings. They are material and I think they should be incorporated in my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I desire to reply to certain unfortunate criticisms which have been and are being leveled against the Honorable John Collier, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as well as against the administration of the Wheeler-Howard Act which was made law by the Seventy-third Congress. It seems to me that the fate of certain fundamental principles which are involved demand that at this time someone undertake the duty of assembling in one place certain data and certain facts which may eloquently speak for themselves.

Mr. Speaker, a long personal acquaintance with John Collier, a knowledge of the peculiar zeal and devotion which has marked his lifelong activity in behalf of the Indians and their problems, a familiarity with his refreshing and liberal independence of thought and action, and the undeniable record of his capable and incorruptible administration in office, lead me to the conclusion that he, personally and individually, does not require my assistance nor that of any other volunteer. John Collier can and will take care of himself.

So, Mr. Speaker, in turning at once to the facts pertinent to the current drive against operation of the Wheeler-Howard Act, I include a very brief and timely editorial which appeared in the militant Washington News under date of March 26. It reads:

OLD DEALS FOR NEW

When Indian Commissioner Collier announced his plan to restore self-determination and self-respect to the exploited first Americans, Congress cooperated. It passed the Wheeler-Howard Indian Reform Act. Then a great majority of the tribes eagerly accepted their new deal by popular vote.

Today reaction in and out of Congress threatens to nullify this progressive measure.

The law authorized appropriations of $12,500,000 for purchase of land for landless Indians, creation of a revolving loan fund, educational loans, and tribal organization expenses. But the Budget Bureau this year cut this to $6,425,000. Then a House subcommittee sheared that down to $3,275,000. Here was a total cut of nearly 75 percent of the authorization of last year.

In addition, enemies of the measure have launched personal attacks against Commissioner Collier. One critic demanded his impeachment on the ground that he was a member of the Civil Liberties Union.

In the Indian country certain cattlemen, lumbermen, and others are still trying to persuade the tribes to reject the measure. They have not succeeded, however. Apart from the Oklahoma Indians who were not covered by the law only one important reservation, that of Fort Peck, Mont., has rejected it.

The Senate should undo the effects of the ill-considered House attack. The white man has established a pretty consistent record for double-dealing with his redskin brother, a record that the Wheeler-Howard Act sought to redeem. Is this, too, going to turn out another broken treaty?

As the editorial suggests, the first purpose of the Wheeler-Howard Act was to secure new land of a better quality and type for the Indians, securing for them the possession and use of that land, excluding white stockmen from the land which the Indians can use, terminating the contract system of Indian timber cutting and substituting a tribal operation of the forests. Generally it represented a complete new deal for the Indians.

These aims, and an admirably clear statement of the difficulties involved, are contained in the opening pages of the Commissioner's annual report, which are made a part of the last annual report—1934—of the Secretary of the Interior. They follow:

The fiscal year 1934 has been a reorientation of Indian Service policies, and many reorganizations completed or set under way. It has been a year of intense labor, because numerous emergency tasks (some of them of dominating importance to the Indians) have been thrown upon an overhead personnel which previously had been considered a meager one for the regular work alone. On the whole, the staff has met its challenge, and the response of the Indians has gone beyond anything previously hoped for.

THE WHEELER-HOWARD ACT

In the last paragraph of the Commissioner's annual report for 1933 it was stated:

"If we can relieve the Indian of the unrealistic and fatal allotment system, if we can provide him with land and the means to work the land; if, through group organization and tribal incorporation, we can give him a real share in the management of his own affairs, he can develop normally in his own natural environment. The Indian problem as it exists today, including the heaviest and most unproductive administration costs of public service, has largely grown out of the allotment system which has destroyed the economic integrity of the Indian estate and deprived the Indians of normal economic and human activity."

The allotment system with its train of evil consequences was definitely abandoned as the backbone of the national Indian policy when Congress adopted and the President approved the Wheeler-Howard bill. The first section of this act in effect repeals the General Allotment Act of 1887. During numerous committee hearings, during several redrafts and modifications affecting every other part of the measure, this first section was never questioned or revised. It reached the President's desk in its original form without the change of a word or a comma, indicating that Congress was thoroughly convinced of the allotment system's complete failure and was eager to abandon it as the governing policy.

THE ACT'S TWOFOLD AIM

The Wheeler-Howard Act, the most important piece of Indian legislation since the eighties, not only ends the long, painful, futile effort to speed up the normal rate of Indian assimilation by individualizing tribal land and other capital assets but it also endeavors to provide the means, statutory and financial, to repair as far as possible, the incalculable damage done by the allotment policy and its corollaries. Unfortunately, the beginning of the repair work had to be in large part postponed, because the authorized appropriations could not be made by Congress after the passage of the act during the closing days of the session.

The repair work authorized by Congress under the terms of the act aims at both the economic and the spiritual rehabilitation of the Indian race. Congress and the President recognized that the cumulative loss of land brought about by the allotment system, a loss reaching 90,000,000 acres—two-thirds of the land heritage of the Indian race in 1887—had robbed the Indians in large part of the necessary basis for self-support. They clearly saw that this loss and the companion effort to break up all Indian tribal relations had condemned large numbers of Indians to become chronic recipients of charity; that the system of leasing individualized holdings had created many thousands of petty landlords unfitted to support themselves when their rental income vanished; that a major proportion of the red race was, therefore, ruined economically and pauperized spiritually.

ECONOMIC REHABILITATION—LAND PURCHASES

To meet this situation, the act authorized a maximum annual appropriation of $2,000,000 for the purchase of land for landless Indians. This maximum appropriation, even if continued over a term of years, will meet only the most pressing emergency-land needs of the Indians. It must be remembered that since 1887 the Indian race has lost the use of 90,000,000 acres, the cream of its land holding. With an annual appropriation of $2,000,000 and an average base price of $20 per acre, it would require 20 years to restore 2,000,000 acres for Indian use.

While Congress did not specifically direct the consolidation of Indian lands broken up and checkerboarded with white holdings in the allotment process, it authorized such consolidation and set up the machinery for it. Congress also authorized the establishment of new reservations for now completely landless and homeless Indians and directed that title to all newly purchased land should be taken in the name of the United States in trust for the Indian tribe or individual Indian, who will have the use and occupancy of the land. Thus, the policy of common ownership of land enunciated in section 1 of the Wheeler-Howard Act is reaffirmed and implemented throughout the body of the statute.

Part of the effort at economic rehabilitation is the indefinite extension of all restrictions on the alienation of Indian trust lands as prescribed by section 2. However, this section merely locks the door out of which passed the valuable team of work horses, leaving the decrepit plug behind.

THE REVOLVING CREDIT FUND

The sponsors of the General Allotment Act of 1887 believed that the division of the tribal land among the members of the tribe would create in the Indian the pride of individual ownership and induce him to make use of his own land for the support of his family. Overlooked entirely was the cold fact that capital in some form is needed to transform even a piece of the best raw land into a productive farm. Since the Indian's newly acquired private land could not legally be pledged as security for bank or private loans, it was the duty of the Federal Government to place at the disposal of its wards credit in sufficient volume to meet their need for operating capital.

This imperative duty the Federal Government never recognized. Instead, it chose the easier road. It rapidly relaxed its restrictions on leasing. Lacking equipment for farming, the average Indian family proceeded to lease its land to white farmers or stockmen for cash. The leasing system, demoralizing to the Indians and contributing to the surplus of commercial farm products, spread like the Russian thistle. To this day the Indians who rely on the shrinking volume of lease money for their main support far outnumber those who farm their own allotted land.

What was true 50 years ago is true today. Without a reasonable amount of capital for permanent improvements, livestock, seed, implements, etc., the Indian owner of a piece of land cannot hope to make his living from the cultivation of the soil. To meet this pressing need the Wheeler-Howard Act authorizes a revolving credit fund of $10,000,000.

This fund is to supply the long-term and short-term credit requirements of some 250,000 persons. Much of it must be tied up in long-term loans for sawmills, homes, and other improvements. Yet there is a huge demand for short-term loans to finance seasonal farm operations. The new lands to be bought for landless Indians must be improved and fenced, homes must be built, implements and seed acquired for the settlers, almost solely out of the revolving credit fund. In all probability the demands of the forthcoming year will demonstrate that it is inadequate.

THE HEIRSHIP-LAND PROBLEM

In the natural course of events privately owned Indian lands must on the death of the owner be divided among his heirs and, in turn, among the heirs of the heirs. This result of the allotment system brings about the forced sale of Indian heirship lands, usually to white buyers. If there are no buyers, the heirship land must be leased and the proceeds distributed among the numerous heirs at an expense out of all proportion to the size of the gross revenue.

The Wheeler-Howard Act is taking the first hesitant step toward the solution of this problem. The new law, while allowing Indian owners to leave or devise their restricted land to any member of the tribe or to their heirs, regardless of tribal affiliations, in accordance with applicable State or Federal laws, bars the owners or heirs from selling restricted Indian lands to anyone except the tribe or the tribal corporation in the jurisdiction of which the land is located.

Obviously this negative provision, inapplicable in Oklahoma and on the Klamath Reservation, does not solve the problem. Some 7,000,000 acres are now in the heirship status; the acreage is increasing every month. The tribes have not the money with which to purchase this land. At only $5 per acre, it would require $35,000,000 to reacquire this land; the maximum authorized appropriation for 17½ years would be needed to return the land now in the heirship status for tribal use.

If the problem is to be solved within a reasonable time, the cooperation of the allottees and heirs must be had. They must learn that for the sake of their race and of their children they should voluntarily transfer the title to their individual holdings to the tribe or to the tribal corporation, receiving in return the same rights as they enjoy now, namely, the right to use and occupy the land and its improvements, to receive the income from the land, and to leave the same rights to their children, except that the children and other heirs could not cut up the land into small, unusable pieces.

Where the land in process of inheritance has already been so divided among numerous heirs, they will have the opportunity to return the small parcels to the tribe or tribal corporation, receiving interests in the corporate property in exchange. Thus the tribe would acquire title to now unusable land which, after consolidation, could be assigned for the use of interest holders in tracts of usable size.

SPIRITUAL REHABILITATION

Through 50 years of "individualization", coupled with an ever-increasing amount of arbitrary supervision over the affairs of individuals and tribes so long as these individuals and tribes had any assets left, the Indians have been robbed of initiative, their spirit has been broken, their health undermined, and their native pride ground into the dust. The efforts at economic rehabilitation cannot and will not be more than partially successful unless they are accompanied by a determined simultaneous effort to rebuild the shattered morale of a subjugated people that has been taught to believe in its racial inferiority.

The Wheeler-Howard Act provides the means of destroying this inferiority complex, through those features which authorize and legalize tribal organization and incorporation, which give these tribal organizations and corporations limited but real power, and authority over their own affairs, which broaden the educational opportunities for Indians, and which give Indians a better chance to enter the Indian Service.

Even before the passage of the Wheeler-Howard bill a great spiritual stirring had become noticeable throughout the Indian country. That awakening of the racial spirit must be sustained, if the rehabilitation of the Indian people is to be successfully carried through. It is necessary to face the fact that pauperization, as the result of a century of spoliation, suppression, and paternalism, has made deep inroads. Of necessity it will take time, patience, and intelligent, sympathetic help to rebuild the Indian character where it has been broken down.

The first step in this rebuilding process must be the reorganization of the tribes, authorized by the Wheeler-Howard Act. In the past they managed their own affairs effectively whenever there was no white interference for selfish ends. They can learn to do it again under present conditions with the aid of modern organization methods, once they realize that these organizations will be permanent and will not be subject to the whims of changing administrations. These organizations, both tribal and corporate, will make many initial mistakes; there will be many complaints against shouldering the load of responsibility that accompanies authority. The task of organizing and incorporating the tribes will be difficult and laborious, calling for the maximum amount of skill, tact, firmness, and understanding on the part of the organizers. But the result should be the development of Indian leadership capable of making the Indian tribal organizations and corporations function effectively with a minimum of governmental interference.

Mr. Speaker, referring again to the editorial comment on the drastic and crippling cut which the Bureau of the Budget and the House of Representatives administered to the funds for carrying out the provisions of the Wheeler-Howard Act, let me quote this paragraph from the same annual report. It is compelling. The Commissioner states:

We are still falling down badly in helping the Indians to get the maximum economic and social value for their forest and range. This necessitates that they should use it themselves, instead of leasing the privilege to someone else. Using their own resources would give the Indians a much larger income than at present, for they could not only receive the value of their stumpage prices or grazing fees, but also they would make wages; and if their enterprises were properly managed, they should be able to make at least as much profit as has come in the past to the lumber and livestock industries. Furthermore, there would be the immense social value of having the Indians working for their income.

The Wheeler-Howard Act, authorizing the appropriation of $10,000,000 for loans to Indian tribes, communities, or individuals, should help to make possible the use of the Indian resources by the Indians themselves. Through capital borrowed from the Government the Indians on most of the reservations should be able to purchase either their own sawmills and logging equipment or a foundation livestock herd with which to utilize their forest and range.

Furthermore, extracts from the Commissioner's testimony before the House Appropriation Committee's subcommittee are pertinent and informative. He stated to them on February 6 that—

During the last session of Congress the Indian committees held almost continuous hearings, which revolved primarily around the subject of how we could make the Indians self-supporting on the land.

Those hearings were occasioned by the submission of an administration bill introduced by the chairmen of the two committees, Mr. WHEELER and Mr. Howard.

SHRINKING OF LANDS AND GENERAL LIVING CONDITIONS OF THE INDIANS

Those examinations and hearings carried out by the committees showed that the Indian lands had been shrinking steadily and in sort of a remorseless fashion for the last 45 years. There had been 137,000,000 acres of good Indian land in 1887. There were now 47,000,000 acres, and about half of that was desert or semidesert land.

The losses of land had not fallen evenly upon the Indians, but in a very uneven way. Some Indians were still in possession of a lot of land, but more than 100,000 Indians had lost all of their land and there were that many landless Indians, of whom a very large number were just living in hovels, the poorest housing conditions in the United States.

An additional 50,000, at fewest, were substantially, though not absolutely, landless.

Among the reasons which were clearly brought out as to why the Indians had lost their land were, first of all, the operation of the allotment system, which contemplated that as the Indian died his land would be sold; that is, it had to be partitioned, physically partitioned, among the heirs, or sold, so that the law itself compelled the alienation of the Indian land and the cash proceeds were eaten up in short order.

Also, it was brought out that the Government had never supplied to the Indians a system of financial credit to enable them to go forward as farmers or stockmen. The only credit extended to them had been this little industrial reimbursable amount each year that has been running around $300,000 a year for the entire Indian population, of course entirely inadequate as a credit fund.

TERMS OF THE WHEELER-HOWARD BILL

Now, as a result of all those discussions the modified Wheeler-Howard bill was passed and became law. That bill established definitely a new congressional policy in certain essential matters. It prohibited the allotment in severalty of tribal lands, thereby, if you will, closing the door after most of the horses had gotten out; yet there are important tribal areas in some parts of the country which can yet be conserved and used to support a good life for the Indians of those regions.

Then the bill enunciated that landless Indians should be revested with land through purchase or otherwise. The new land should not become the property of the individual who received it; the title would remain in the Government; the Indians would have the perpetual use of the land and the ownership of improvements, and so on, the right of transmitting his exclusive use of the land to his heirs, but he could not alienate it.

Two million dollars a year was authorized to be appropriated for the purchase of land for homeless Indians, landless Indians.

Then the need of a businesslike credit system was recognized and a lump-sum appropriation of $10,000,000 was authorized. The land-purchase authorization was $2,000,000 each year. The $10,000,000 revolving credit fund was not to be a recurrent appropriation.

The act required that Indians who were going to take advantage of this credit fund should organize locally. The language of the act is that they should organize into corporations. It really means, with respect to financial credit, credit associations quite comparable to those which we have under the farm-credit system. The loan would be extended to the individual through the local corporation or credit association. At the same time it was recognized that one bad shortcoming of our Indian Service in the past had been that we had no provision for giving Indians first-rate trade or professional or technical educations.

The act authorized a quarter of a million dollar fund annually to be used as a loan fund to enable ambitious Indian boys and girls to go through colleges, trade schools, medical schools, and technical schools.

LOCAL ORGANIZING OF THE INDIAN UNDER THIS ACT

I may say that the act went a certain distance toward revising another traditional policy. The old policy, until last year, was to discourage the Indians from organizing locally. In general, the tribal systems were broken up, and the Indian, not possessing the right of contract, could not organize in any modern way, so he was disorganized in the old way and unable to organize in a modern civic or business fashion.

The Wheeler-Howard Act recognizes that the Indians need to organize and that they should organize for mutual aid, and for a certain amount of home rule where they are living in homogeneous communities, and for business operations.

The Indian group which organizes receives a charter from the Secretary of the Interior, and, having issued the charter, thereafter the Secretary cannot arbitrarily take it away or modify it. A certain amount of stability is thus made possible for the organizations. Congress can revoke the charters or the Indians themselves can give up their organizations, but the Secretary or Commissioner cannot just knock them out.

The sum of $250,000 a year is authorized in the act to be spent for the costs of organizing Indian tribes and corporations.

* * * * * * *

The $250,000 is to be used for the work of assisting them to organize. It includes a cost they, themselves, will incur in the process of organizing. For example, a tribe may need a lawyer who will help them organize their complicated business undertakings, and he will be paid out of this organizing fund.

GOVERNMENT WARDSHIP OF THE INDIANS

The idea has been, heretofore, that everything that happened on an Indian reservation happened as the result of something that some Government employee did. In other words, we paid for everything. All sorts of things that in our ordinary life a fellow does for himself or his family or that his own organization does for him the Government did for the Indians through direct employment, usually, of white people. That is best illustrated in the field of the Health Service, as an example. We have been going ahead on the idea that the entire health service to the Indians, including all the medical, clinical, and hospital service, should be provided by the Government gratuitiously. We have recognized that there is not any probability of getting enough gratuitous money to do it adequately, but we still have gone ahead on the notion that if we did not do it that way, we could not do it at all; either the Government had to pay the whole bill or there would not be any medical service, and we have educated the Indians into that view of the thing.

The same way with education. They are untaxed and get their education without pay at the same time. And the same way with every other conceivable service—burial, the little things of community sanitation, the work a justice of the peace would do in a white community. Through and through, the notion has been free service by a very large corps of employed people heading up here in the Washington office.

Now, we realize that unless that tradition can be broken down we never are going to get anywhere with the Indians.

Mr. TAYLOR. That will be a perpetual dole forever.

Mr. COLLIER. Yes.

Mr. Speaker, the drive against the Wheeler-Howard Act seems to be purely an effort to put Indian affairs back where they were 2 years ago, which was as follows:

First. Indian landholding had shrunk from 137,000,000 of good acres to 47,000,000 of poor acres since the year 1887. This shrinkage has been due to the Government's own actions under the allotment system. It was mathematically sure to go forward until all the lands were lost. This same land system of forced land allotment had pushed the Indians across into idleness and an almost universal dependence on a dole which was meager or nonexistent.

Second. At the same time the tribes were without the right to organize, whether for political or economic purposes. Indian Bureau autocracy was complete and was subject to no court review. The Indian Commissioner was a monarch, essentially absolute.

Third. The Indians were denied access to financial credit, and this fact, coupled with the denial of their right to organize, resulted in forcing them to lease to white people the use of their grazing lands, their irrigated lands, and so forth, and to let white people cut their timber.

The system was one of cold-blooded exploitation under forms of law. While most of the Indian property had already been legally looted, there remained a value of hundreds of millions not yet seized from the Indians.

What changes did the Wheeler-Howard Act make? Let us summarize:

First. It extended the trust period on all Indian lands, and thereby put a stop to the alienations to whites.

Second. It declared a policy of acquiring new lands for the Indians, which new lands should be held by the Government for Indian use and never should be allotted to individual Indians or alienated to whites. Two million dollars a year was authorized for buying these lands.

Third. Financial credit was instituted to enable the Indians to go into the stock business, into the business of merchandising their own products, into irrigation and dry farming, and into enterprises of cutting and remanufacturing their own timber. A $10,000,000 revolving loan fund was authorized.

Fourth. The Indians were given authority to organize as tribes, and when so organized they were given a definite, although modest, amount of power over their own collective affairs. Once a tribe should organize, the Indian Office could not disband the organization or force any change upon it.

Going further, the Wheeler-Howard Act authorized the Indians to form themselves into business corporations for purposes of landholding and land use, cooperative buying and selling, and cooperative administration of credit. The revolving loan fund was made available to the Indians through the medium of these tribal corporations. Indian tribal funds, under the Wheeler-Howard Act, could no longer be spent except with the consent of the Indian owners. In the past 30 years more than $100,000,000 of Indian trust funds have been wrongfully diverted into Indian Bureau pay rolls.

Fifth. Going further, the Wheeler-Howard Act declared that Indians should have preference for all jobs in the Indian Service. Civil service restrictions were lifted so far as they concerned Indian applicants for employment. A counterdrive against the act from some of the approximately 5,000 white employees was to be anticipated.

Sixth. The right of Indians to advanced education, technical and professional, was declared by the act, and $250,000 a year was authorized for scholarship loans for this purpose.

Seventh. The act made it mandatory upon the Secretary of the Interior to enforce perpetual yield in Indian forests, range control on Indian range lands, and all other practices necessary to save the soil.

From the above, it is clear that the act was exclusively one of extending new benefits and protections to the Indians; and, in fact, it contained no feature involving compulsion upon the Indians other than the requirement of perepetual-yield administration for forests and of soil-conservation practice upon the ranges.

Nevertheless, the act extended to the Indians the unprecedented privilege of themselves deciding, tribe by tribe, whether they want to live under it or not. Referendums, as directed in the act, have been held on 116 reservations, with 116,000 Indians living on them, and the yes vote has been about 73 percent of the total vote cast. The turn-out of the voters has been almost exactly equal to that which is usual among whites at Presidential elections; namely, 53 percent of the total eligible vote. The Indian vote has run far ahead of white referendum votes, which generally are smaller than the votes upon contests between persons. Eighty-five tribes have cast absolute majorities for the Wheeler-Howard Act. A table with corroborating figures is here shown.

Total eligibles among 117 tribes, bands, pueblos, etc., which have voted up to and including Dec. 31, 1934	58,852
Total votes cast	31,215
Or 53.04+ percent of the eligibles.
Total votes cast for	22,772
Or 72.95+ percent of the votes cast.
Or 38.69+ percent of the eligibles.
Total votes cast against	8,443
Or 27.04+ percent of the votes cast.
Or 14.34 percent of the eligibles.

	Voting population	Yes	No
Where a majority of votes were cast in favor of the legislation	52,055	21,417	5,380
Where a majority of votes were cast in opposition of the legislation	2,742	477	1,652
Where a majority of votes cast were against the legislation, but not sufficient to exclude themselves:
Including Fort Apache, which is to vote again	4,055	878	1,411
Excluding Fort Apache, the figures are	2,715	606	1,010

Absolute majority, for	85
Absolute majority, against	14
Majority of eligibles against but not sufficient to exclude themselves under Solicitor's opinion (including Fort Apache, which is to vote again)	17
	116

In the face of these facts, assertions are persistently made that the Indians do not want the act, that the Indians do not want more land, do not want credit, do not want the right to organize, do not want preference for Government jobs, do not want scholarship loans, do not want the right to veto improper use of their own trust moneys.

The drive was apparently first concentrated against the House Appropriation Committee with the object of cutting out appropriations authorized under the Wheeler-Howard Act, and thus leaving the act unimplemented and sterile. The drive was partially successful, because the Budget estimate of $1,000,000 for land purchase was cut to $500,000; the Budget estimate of $5,000,000 for Indian credit was cut to $2,500,000; and the Budget estimate of $250,000 for the costs of organizing the tribal political and corporate organizations was cut to $100,000. It is this last slash which has most seriously jeopardized the Wheeler-Howard reforms, because the fundamental concept of the new policy is that the Indians shall organize to take over the control of their own collective destinies, and that the Bureau shall no longer be czar over the Indians; but if the wherewithal for effecting organization is denied, then organization must proceed slowly indeed.

The Indians, by and large, mind you, are economically the poorest class in the whole United States. And wherever Indians are located, they are environed by predatory interests which do not want them to stand on their own feet, and which do intend to exploit or seize their properties.

Therefore it should at once be apparent that this administration, which wants to help them to organize, must be supplied with the financial means to carry out the task. The modest authorization of $250,000 was granted in full by the Budget, but, as stated above, it has been cut to $100,000 by the Appropriation Committee. The Senate may still remedy, in part, this ill-considered action, and the House may have the opportunity of approving a more liberal conference report. It is to be hoped that after the appropriation bill is out of the way, the drive against the Wheeler-Howard Act will not swing back into the general legislative channels, and that no attempt to dismember the act will be made.

As a part of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, because of the importance of the issues therein aired and discussed, I attach a verbatim copy of a memorial addressed to the President of the United States and Congress by the so-called "American Indian Federation", together with the Commissioner's statement given to the House Committee on Indian Affairs in reply to allegations contained in the memorial.

ONWARD TO GREATER THINGS

THE AMERICAN INDIAN FEDERATION,
Sapulpa, Okla., December 21, 1934.

A memorial by American Indians to Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt, the President, and to the Congress of the United States

On behalf of the American Indian, the American Indian Federation, duly organized on August 27 in the city of Gallup, N. Mex., by leading Indians, subject to the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, presents this memorial for your earnest consideration.

Having been granted unqualified American citizenship in 1924, we beg to emphasize that we should be considered and treated in accordance with that part of the immortal Declaration of Independence reading:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

Until 1871, the American Indian, existing under various tribal organizations, was treated as "separate nations", with whom the American Government had made some 370 treaties.

Congress, in 1871, passed an act abolishing further recognition of Indian tribes as independent nations, with whom the United States would make treaties, but not annulling these 370 already made.

From 1871 until our grant of citizenship in 1924 the American Indian was held as a political prisoner or, as the United States Supreme Court has defined the status, as "political wards"—his person under the immediate jurisdiction of the Bureau of Indian Affairs and subject in all personal relations to the arbitrary rules and regulations of said Bureau.

Since our grant of citizenship in 1924 we have been led to believe, and have hoped, that the Bureau of Indian Affairs would grant us our personal freedom and that the American Indian at last would "be recognized as an American citizen, treated as such, educated as such."

Until the present administration no official of said Bureau has ever publicly questioned our rights as American citizens; but now Commissioner Collier has publicly repudiated the act by Congress in granting us citizenship.

In an article by Commissioner Collier, appearing in the magazine section of the New York Times, issue of May 6, 1934, the Commissioner writes:

"The Indians are citizens of the United States, made so by a special act of Congress passed in 1924, as a gesture for their services to the Nation in the World War. Notwithstanding, Indians having the status of Government wards today—that is, two-thirds of the total population—cannot make contracts, cannot borrow money, cannot hire a lawyer, or get their own money into their hands without the permission from a special Government bureau, the Office of Indian Affairs."

Again, notwithstanding the intent of both Congress and the Bureau for the past 50 years that the existence of the Bureau was for the purpose of "educating and making citizens of the Indian", we are confronted by another present Bureau official, as quoted from the New York Herald Tribune of November 9, 1934, as follows:

"The Government has given up trying to make the red man into a 'white' man and has decided that his best future lies in being allowed to 'be himself.' The new Indian policy of the new deal is to encourage the native arts, crafts, poetry, self-government, culture and even religion of the Indian, and to allow him to live his own life in his own way; at the same time giving him modern sanitation and other beneficial features of white civilization. This was the outline presented by Ward Shepard, of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, to leading scientists of Washington, in a lecture at the Cosmos Club."

Later, from the same article, this Mr. Shepard, of the Indian Bureau, is quoted as follows:

"The efforts to civilize the Indian according to white standards was doomed to failure from the start, because it was an attempt to transplant a people still in the stone age into the high-powered industrial democracy of modern America."

(The history of the great Indian leaders, when the American Indian was a free man, clearly makes this "stone age" reference a gratuitous, official affront to the intelligence of the American Indian.)

To the foregoing we state as fact: That under Commissioner Collier the Indians have been denied freedom of speech and free assembly; Indians opposing the policy of the Bureau have been subject to vindictive treatment; the personal rights of the Indian as guaranteed to American citizens under our Constitution have been completely ignored and, in fact, by Commissioner Collier denied to exist; the policy of the education of the Indian continues in Bureau, not public schools; and to fully establish the intent of the present Commissioner to segregate the Indian, keep him an Indian, not an American citizen; to cut him off from the greatest education for citizenry, namely, personal contact with American life—we cite the bill which the Bureau forced through at the very close of the last session of Congress.

This bill was a sequel to the notorious Wheeler-Howard bill, which contained 52 pages, and as passed and approved as of June 18, 1934, contains five printed pages. It was forced through under the misrepresentation of having the approval of the Indians and was an "administration" bill.

While said law contains some clauses of value to the Indian, its main intent and purpose and wherein it repudiates the said 50 years' intent of both Congress and all previous bureaus, and wherein its result must be a perpetuation of this Bureau and its rule over the daily lives of the Indian, is to be found in its section 18 and its section 17.

Section 18 provides for an "election" conducted by the Bureau, by the Bureau-ridden and Bureau-controlled Indians, to approve or disapprove the bill by majority vote of the adult Indians in each tribe. "Approval" means consent, for the first time in history, by the Indian tribes to Bureau jurisdiction and rule; this means the limitation of personal rights under citizenship—such "election" with voters from a subject people, with no knowledge of its consequences, can only be likened to the "free" elections under the dictator Hitler.

Section 17 provides that after the "approval election" another adult majority "election" is held by the Bureau to permit the Bureau to issue a tribe a charter to form an Indian community performing all the activities of an American community, except it contains only Indians, and all the powers of such community will be defined by the Bureau in its ultralegal role of dispenser of Russian communistic life in the United States.

Never before in the history of this Bureau has such a momentous change in the conduct of Indian affairs been proposed, and hence, on such fact alone, had no honest intent when forced through Congress in the critical period of our country's affairs which led every Congressman to believe that an administrative measure was one of dire necessity, excusing all haste in its enactment.

Therefore we charge that Commissioner Collier has, and is, with deliberate intent and contrary to the desires of the American people, who desire justice done to the American Indian, seeking to frustrate the opportunity of the Indian to enter American life as a citizen and, instead, is perpetuating an iniquitous, un-American Bureau and forcing a subdued, Bureau-controlled (a subject) people into a segregated serfdom, continued to be ruled by the dictatorship of a Government Bureau which has held the American Indian in chains since 1871.

We charge that the official record of Commissioner Collier establishes him as wholly unfit by temperament and honest principles, as well as officially using the mighty power of his office, to continue the American Indian under a greater serfdom than he has endured since 1871, and in so doing has maliciously and flagrantly ignored the rights given the Indian by virtue of the greatest gift the American Government can bestow—citizenship.

Whereas the universal practice of the courts of the country is that of permitting a minor even of 14 years of age to choose its own guardian: Therefore we submit that the American Indian should be given the right to approve the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who exercises such arbitrary power over his person and his property.

To the end that the American Indian may obtain at least fair play, we demand the removal of John Collier as Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the removal of his official appointees, none of whom, before appointment, had any practical knowledge of the American Indian nor of Indian affairs.

We urge the appointment of a man who knows Indian affairs and will reorganize the Bureau on lines in keeping with the personal rights now due the American Indian as an American citizen.

We further offer for consideration by Congress and a trustworthy Commissioner, as a working basis for fundamental relief for the American Indian, the following outline of plan:

1. Free the Indian at once from Bureau wardship of his person.

2. Each State—through its already established channels, under which and in the same manner they now treat their other citizens, but the Indian—to educate, to guard health, to police, and to open all its established courts to the Indian. Congressional appropriations from Indian funds where treaties provide, or from taxes now voted annually to the Bureau (and more if needed), to go to the State to cover all cost of foregoing. In cases of emergency the Red Cross should be given all power, free from Bureau control, to immediately take charge of the Indian health and life situation.

3. Begin at once with competent heads to untangle the Indian property mess existing in the Bureau, with the view of creating, legally, active trusteeships, subject to court review, of this property, including tribal funds, preferably creating a separate trust for each reservation and tribal fund. These trusts should be created on same fundamental legal basis as other innumerable trusts which now hold property all over the United States.

At no time, of course, during the above program is the Indian to be inequitably disturbed in the rights, occupancy, and use of any Indian property now by him possessed.

Dated and signed this 21st day of December, A. D. 1934, at the office of the American Indian Federation in Sapulpa, Okla.

Respectfully submitted.

JOSEPH BRUNER,
President the American Indian Federation.

Attest:

W. W. LEFLORE, Secretary.

Commissioner Collier testified on February 6, 1935, to the committee as follows:

A "memorial" has been filed with your committee, signed by Joseph Bruner as president of the American Indian Federation. For some time Mr. Bruner and his associates have been addressing the President, have been interviewing Members of Congress, and have been seeking press publicity. As their organization practically is a fake organization, and their allegations are unspecific and self-contradictory, I have not paid attention to them heretofore.

I am glad that the "memorial" has been laid before your committee and has been dignified by a committee hearing, because an occasion is thus provided to deal once and finally with the organization and its allegations.

I have stated that practically the so-called "American Indian Federation" is a fake organization. Its spokesmen purport and pretend to speak for and represent the American Indians. Yet the president, Mr. Bruner, holds no delegation of authority even from his own tribe. The vice president, Mr. Morgan, is in Washington without authority from his own tribe. (See the appended telegram.) The Sioux representatives, Mr. Whirlwind Soldier and Mr. Louis Valandra, have not been empowered by any branch of the Sioux Tribe to represent it in this federation. Mr. Joseph Brooks, who appears on the letterhead as president of the seventh district, has not been empowered by any tribe to act as a member of this federation, nor has he authorized the use of his name.

There are about 340,000 Indians, in 180 tribes, located in 222 Indian Service jurisdictions. The tribes, almost universally, are organized into tribal councils or other stable organizations, which speak with authority for the tribes which have empowered them. I assert that, with the exception of tribes totaling fewer than 3,000 individuals—all in southern California—no one among the 180 Indian tribes has authorized the American Indian Federation to speak for it or has placed representation upon the letterhead of this so-called "federation." The American Indian Federation, therefore, consists of certain men who have a bona fide authorization from a majority of the members of certain of the Mission Indian Bands of southern California, and with these men are associated a few individual Indians in other parts of the country and certain white men. A body thus constituted has, of course, just as much right to prefer charges and to make recommendations as it would have if it veritably represented the Indians, but it should not pretend to be that which it so clearly is not.

With respect to the Mission Indian Federation, which is the only element supplying substance to the so-called "American Indian Federation." I merely call your committee's attention to the memorandum concerning that southern California Indian organization which I supplied to the House Indian Committee last spring, and which is printed in the hearings on the Wheeler-Howard bill, page 272. The men representing the Mission Indian Federation are in Washington this year, as last year, seeking legislation which would entitle various lawyers to receive large payments, for services of no measurable value, out of the forthcoming award by the Court of Claims to the Indians of California.

Mr. Bruner, president of the American Indian Federation, has heretofore designated himself as principal chief of the Creek Nation. This was a false designation, and at the tribal election of the Creek Nation held September 14, last, Mr. Bruner was not even among the candidates who trailed at the election. At the Muskogee office of the Five Tribes Agency, from time to time the superintendent posts the names of Indians living in outlying districts to whom payments of money are due. The Indians need merely to come or to send for the money and it is theirs. There are some men, Indian and white, who make note of the names thus posted and then go out and see these Indians and undertake to collect the money for them on a profit-sharing or contingent basis. The "racket" is a petty one, and is mentioned here only to make intelligible a letter bearing Joseph Bruner's signature, dated October 25, 1933, addressed to Mr. Scott Cochran, 913 East Fifth Place, Tulsa, Okla., and reading as follows:

"Under date of September 7, you executed a contract with me and Etc., for 50-50 recovery of the fund which was in Department. Mr. Albert Bigpond advise me that you have already got your check. I wish you write an explaned to me why you dont pay us our part of the recovery. And the amount you got by return mail.

"Sincerely yours,

"JOSEPH BRUNER (Signed)"

I now deal briefly with the "memorial" signed by Mr. Bruner. The errors of statement are recklessly complete. They seem to grow in part out of an apparently incurable confusion of mind, especially in regard to the enactment of the so-called Wheeler-Howard, or Indian reorganization act, approved June 18 last.

That important measure, of which I was not the author, was reported by the House Indian Committee without a dissenting minority report and by the Senate Indian Committee without dissent, was passed by Congress, and was made law through Presidential signature. It is an enormously beneficial piece of legislation, for which I would be glad to assume the responsibility if the facts justified such an assumption.

Endeavoring to find specific charges of a meaningful nature in the "memorial", I cite on page 2 the following: "Commissioner Collier has publicly repudiated the act by Congress granting us citizenship." The statement is totally incorrect, as the "memorial's" own quotation shows. The alleged "repudiation" consisted in a description of the facts of Indian law as they were on May 6, 1934. The handicaps upon the freedom of Indians, described in my statement, were among the handicaps which I was seeking to persuade Congress to remove. And Congress did remove a portion of these handicaps by the enactment of the Wheeler-Howard Act.

On page 3 of the "memorial" it is stated: "Under Commissioner Collier the Indians have been denied freedom of speech and free assembly, Indians opposing the policy of the Bureau have been subjected to vindictive treatment", and more on the same line. No specifications are given, nor can they be. The allegation is wholly false.

On page 4 in the "memorial", after proposing that I, as Commissioner, be removed from office, the "memorial" demands further "the removal of his (Collier's) official appointees, none of whom, before appointment, had any practical knowledge of the American Indian nor Indian affairs." Again there is no specification and the statement is merely wild. The appointments recommended by me and made by the Secretary of the Interior have been, in the main, appointments of Indians to positions in the Service. We have enormously increased the proportion of Indians to whites in the Indian Service. Details are given in a departmental release which I append to this letter.

The Federation states, page 3, that my policy for Indians is "not public schools." My policy and the Department's is the exact opposite; and in the current fiscal year the Indian Service is spending $1,370,000 for public-school tuition for Indians and for food, clothing, and books for Indians in public schools.

The "memorial" attacks section 18 of the Wheeler-Howard Act. Section 18 requires that the act be submitted to referenda of the Indians on all reservations except in Oklahoma. These referenda have been held on reservations totaling approximately 100,000 Indians and 58,852 eligible voters. Of the total Indian vote cast, 72.95 percent has favored the Wheeler-Howard Act. The percentage of the eligible voters who actually have voted has been approximately that which is cast in Presidential elections, and much higher than that which is cast in referendum elections among whites. The "yes" vote has been 72.95 percent of the total vote, as compared, for example, with the "yes" vote of 57.3 percent of the total vote, which was the percentage cast for Mr. Roosevelt in the whole country in the Presidential election of 1932.

Section 18 of the Wheeler-Howard Act was inserted by the House Indian Committee and was enacted by Congress. The federation's quarrel, therefore, is with Congress and not with the Indian Commissioner. And under section 18 the Indians overwhelmingly have voted that they do want the protections and advantages of the Wheeler-Howard Act. The federation's quarrel, therefore, is with the Indians and not with the Indian Commissioner.

The privilege extended to Indian tribes by Congress through section 18 is a most unusual right. For the first time in any Federal legislation the referendum has been made applicable to a public law. Congress went even farther. It made a public law subject to a referendum by a special class of the general population. It did not give the white population affected by the law a chance to vote for or against its acceptance. It restricted this privilege solely to the Indian.

It should be understood that the Indian Reorganization Act came into force and became immediately applicable everywhere on June 18, 1934. Through section 18 Congress extended to all Indian tribes, except those in Oklahoma, the privilege of voting themselves out of the application of the act. Congress qualified this rare and unusual privilege, never bestowed on any other part of the general population, with the provision that a majority of all the adult voters must vote affirmatively to exclude the tribe. Considering the extraordinary nature of the referendum privilege, considering further the size and importance of the benefits conferred upon the Indians by the act, Congress, and especially the House committee, acted wisely, I believe, in requiring that these benefits be not denied any tribe or its individual members except through the positive action of a majority of all adult members.

The referendum elections have been conducted in the letter and the spirit of the law; undoubtedly there have been minor disputes about the right to vote, etc., on various reservations, but nowhere could the resolution of these minor disputes have changed the result. Nor were these disputes more numerous or serious than at the average white election.

I have found no other statements in the "memorial" which are definite enough to permit comment or rebuttal. It may, however, be useful to point out the unstated, underlying misconception or confusion of ideas, which is the result of the evident domination over the federation's thinking by Mr. Joseph W. Latimer, now or formerly of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Mr. Bruner, of Muskogee.

The American Indian has been subjected for generations to a body of law which vested in the Executive an intolerable amount of discretion over Indian property and person, and which subjected the Indian to bureaucratic interferences and paralyzed his initiative, particularly in those areas where land allotment was forced on the tribes. I became Indian Commissioner on a definite and detailed platform, which called for the modification of this archaic, un-American, and highly inefficient and financially wasteful body of Indian law.

The Wheeler-Howard bill, as submitted to Congress by the administration, proposed that the Indian Commissioner and the Secretary of the Interior be divested of a great number of their arbitrary discretions. In local and domestic matters the tribes were given home rule; to insure due process of law various authorities were shifted from the executive to the Federal courts; The Indian Service employees were subjected to criticism and control by the Indians; even the expenditures of public money on the reservations were subjected to Indian veto.

But the guardianship by the United States over Indian property was preserved and, broadly speaking, was made permanent; and a program of land acquisition was set up, designed to revest the Indians with adequate lands which had been taken from them by previous blunders and wrongs.

This original Wheeler-Howard bill met with vigorous, even violent, opposition from Joseph Bruner, Joseph Latimer, and some others. The House and Senate Indian Committees—particularly the Senate Indian Committee—took the view that the bill went too far in divesting the executive of discretion and too far in the direction of permitting home rule among Indians. It was viewed as being too radical and sudden a measure in the direction of Indian emancipation from governmental control.

However, the really determined opposition to the measure came from those interests which did not want the remaining Indian lands protected, which did not want the Indian ranges withdrawn from white use and restored to Indian use, which did not want the policy of conservation and of Indian operation to be drastically applied to Indian forests, and which did not want Indian trust funds safeguarded.

After a prolonged struggle, as the older members of this committee will remember, a new bill was drafted by the House committee, and a new bill by the Senate committee, and these were harmonized in conference, and the so-called "Wheeler-Howard Act" became law.

This new law includes many, but not all, of the elements of the original Wheeler-Howard bill. It goes far toward permitting local home rule to the Indians; it protects the Indian lands, and provides for the acquisition of new lands for the Indians; it establishes a credit system for Indians; it gives to Indians a legal preference to employment in the Indian Service; it provides for the higher education of ambitious Indians; it requires the application of modern principles of conservation to the Indian lands and forests. It is an epoch-making bill in the right direction.

But this new enactment has not completed the needed legislative program. The Indian Commissioner and the Secretary of the Interior continue to be, in spite of the new act, vested with an undesirable amount and variety of discretion—discretion which practically is unreviewable by the courts. The prompt and just settlement of Indian tribal claims against the Government awaits future legislation; the definition and extension of the jurisdiction of Federal courts over Indians is still awaiting action by Congress. All of this legislation, if it is to help and not to injure the Indians, must preserve the Federal responsibility for Indian welfare and must continue the trusteeship of the Government over Indian capital assets.

The above statement will have made clear the irrelevancy and, in addition, the almost complete distortion of realities, which appear in the federation's memorial. These men, who are pretending to fight for the emancipation of the Indian, inconsistently attack the Indian Commissioner for promoting the legislation which has partly emancipated the Indian and for promoting other, as yet unenacted, legislation which would further emancipate the Indian. The trouble is that the Commissioner is also striving to preserve and, in some particulars, to reestablish the protections which safeguard Indian lands and funds against the onslaught of white exploiters.

These men cannot, naturally, state the real aim of some of them, which is that the restrictions preventing the transfer of Indian property to whites and its seizure by whites shall be done away with.

Again, they cannot state the real aim of some of them, which is that certain attorneys, who have rendered no service and cannot render assistance of measurable value, shall be allowed to share largely in the forthcoming money to be awarded by the Court of Claims to the California Indians.

It may be that this fundamental impossibility of making a forthright statement of what it is that they do want is the explanation of the seeming mental confusion of the sponsors of the memorial. The things they want, I suggest, are not the things they are talking about.

To conclude, then, the factual record seems inescapably to point to a drive by selfish groups which seeks to nullify the reforms that the Wheeler-Howard Act instituted. They have accomplished part of their purpose. We may reasonably suppose they will continue with renewed vigor. This composite recital of factual information from various official records and sources should put Members of Congress and interested private citizens on notice.

Incidentally, it should shame those who launch intemperate and senile attacks at a far-seeing and courageous public servant who is carrying out the true purpose of an act which bears the name of two noble Members of Congress and which was gladly and hopefully approved by the President of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, it seems unbelievable that Congress, having taken this eventful forward step, will recede because of this illegitimate lobby and its apparently well-organized resistance to the provisions of the Wheeler-Howard Act.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes following the gentleman from Massachusetts. I wish to speak on the work-relief program.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I have great admiration and a friendship of many years for the distinguished leader of the Republican side, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL]. I was greatly surprised yesterday, therefore, knowing him as well as I do, to hear his reference to the President of the United States. Many discussions have taken place on this floor during the past 10 or 12 years in which Members of both the Democratic side and the Republican side joined in statements to the effect that the duties of the Presidency of the United States are extremely onerous. Even at times legislation has been suggested that something be done to lighten the burdens of the President. I am sure we all understand the terrible strain that goes with the position of Chief Executive, with all the problems and trials which he must face. No one should begrudge the President the brief vacation which he is taking and which is so vital to keep him fit for the duties of the Presidency. So I was greatly shocked to hear those remarks of the gentleman from New York, the Republican leader, yesterday.

I believe I am speaking the sentiments of the majority of the Members of this House, both Democrats and Republicans, when I state that we are happy that the President of the United States has such great and good sense that he will go away for a short respite from the terrific duties which devolve upon him. And I know that I speak the minds of every member of the Democratic majority in this House in congratulating President Franklin D. Roosevelt upon his present good health and extraordinary good humor, and wishing him many more fishing trips, so that when he is reelected next year he will be in such splendid physical condition that he may continue in the next 4 years to render to the American people the wonderful service which he has rendered as President for these past 3 years. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRAY] is recognized for 3 minutes under the previous order of the House.

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, it is an old saying that a wise man profits by the mistakes of others but a fool fails to learn from his own and repeats his errors and mistakes over and over again through life.

The public-works relief plan, appropriating large sums of money to restore private employment, has been tested and tried out by other nations as well as our own and wherever tried has failed to relieve from unemployment.

The public-works relief plan has been tried out in Australia, failed to restore private employment, and has been abandoned as a false relief measure. The public-works relief program for the relief of unemployment has been tested and tried out in France, at great cost, but has failed as a remedy and has been abandoned. The public-works relief program as a means to restore private employment has been tried out in England and Ireland, at great expenditure of public funds, but has likewise failed of relief and has been abandoned as a measure for the relief of private employment.

The same public-works relief plan in the name and style of a public building program was widely heralded and declared as a means to restore employment during the closing years of the Hoover administration. But the plan failed of its object and purpose and was repudiated by the people as a false relief measure at the polls. It was this same works-relief program that was reorganized and revamped for further experiment during the first 2 years of this administration, at a cost of multiplied millions, without results, and leaving a larger number unemployed and more people on the relief rolls than before the expenditure of the money.

In the face of the failures of these experiments conducted in other countries at great cost and expenditure of money, without benefit or substantial relief, and in the face of like experiments conducted here in our own country during the last 4 years with like results, a further continuation of these expenditures to be made from borrowed money funded in interest-bearing bonds, with more unemployed and more on the relief rolls, will not only bar us from the claim of being prudent and wise men but will confirm us in the class known as the foolish and unobserving.

It is plain to be realized at this time that a further expenditure of money to carry out the work-relief plan will not be getting us out of the panic but only deeper in debt and, in the light of experience of our own and other countries, will be a course of criminal folly.

It is only necessary to read from the reports of the League of Nations, conducting an economic inquiry among the countries regarding the work-relief plan, to realize the failure and futility of these measures tried out by other nations as a remedy for unemployment. It is not necessary to prove the failure of the work-relief program tried out here under Hoover and former administrations. The chaotic conditions which increased following the Hoover experiments and our own are still fresh in the minds of the people.

The following is from the national public-works inquiry conducted by the League of Nations and taken from the report of France, giving the results of the public-works experiment as a remedy for unemployment in that country, appearing at page 155 and published February 23, 1935:

These figures show that important public works can only be regarded as a palliative and a temporary palliative for unemployment.

From the same inquiry conducted and from the same answers in France, the following, from page 157 and page 158, appears:

It may be seen from the above table (1) that other electrical installations have also for the most part been completed, and no improvement in the economic situation can be expected from its continuance.

The following is from the National Public Works Inquiry conducted by the League of Nations, section 6, page 82, published February 23, 1935, quoting from the answer of Great Britain and Ireland:

Public works are a part of the normal activity of the state and of local public authorities, and they are continuing and will continue subject to the test of their value to the community.

But the experiment of large-scale public works as a method of dealing with unemployment has been tried and has failed and it is not intended to repeat it.

The following is from the address of Walter Runciman, British Cabinet member, explaining the works-relief plan before the World Economic Conference held in London in 1933:

You will observe this method of dealing with the problem is expensive—in our view, unduly expensive—and an experiment that we are not going to repeat.

We terminated our schemes for dealing with the unemployed by capital expenditures on public works and we shall not reopen them no matter what is done elsewhere.

With the experience of the last few years we have come to the conclusion that whether in our own country or elsewhere, schemes of this kind of international public works are the most unremunerative way of dealing with the unemployment problem.

The following is from the National City Bank letter of February 1935 at page 25, commenting upon the report of the public-works experiment made both in this and foreign countries for the relief of unemployment:

Other governments have found that an increase of expenditures did not bring compensating gains.

This country's experience in the past year has furnished much evidence to the same effect.

The spending agencies have been acting practically to their administrative capacity, but the showing of increased employment attributable to their activities has not been impressive and the number of persons on the relief rolls has been largely increased.

It is remarkably inconsistent and contradictory and in disregard of the lessons of experience, in the course and policy of nations, that at the very time other countries which had tested and tried out the public-works relief plan and were abandoning the program as a failure to restore employment and were resorting to the currency relief measures, in manner and form as provided here, to restore the depleted money supply and were entering upon an era of relief and returning prosperity, this Nation was evading and abandoning the same currency relief program and which at the time was bringing prosperity to other nations and was going back to the works-relief program which other nations had tried out and found a failure and abandoned.

England, Sweden, Australia, and Argentina, as well as other nations of Europe, after abandoning the works-relief program which have made noticeable progress in recovery, have followed the one simple course of expanding currency and credit, and making the same available in circulation, which this Nation has abandoned after preparing and providing the measures for the same monetary relief here. Wherever currency measures have been enacted and administered, business has increased, unemployment has decreased, relief demands have lessened, and recovery is making progress without burdens to the taxpayers.

Dr. Gordon Wood, a high public official of Melbourne, Australia, where prosperity has been fast returning by restoring money and credit in circulation, has this to say of our country today:

There is little doubt that deflation (contraction of money) in this country (United States) was grossly excessive and that it can be controlled by controlled reflation (meaning the expansion of money).

After resorting to the currency relief measures, in like form as provided here but not enforced and carried into effect, John Maynard Keynes, a British economist, in giving expression to the relief which was being realized in England from the operations of the currency relief measures, said:

Out of the ashes the city of London will rise with undiminished honor.

No wonder that we feel some exuberance at the relief, that stock-exchange prices soar, and that the dry bones of industry are stirred.

We gain these advantages without a cut of wages and without industrial strife.

The following is from the report of Sir Reginald McKenna, chairman of the board of directors of the Midland Bank of England:

It is now well recognized that an adequate supply of money is essential to sustained business activity.

Nothing in monetary practice is more certain than that contraction of the volume of money, or even failure to secure an adequate increase, tends both directly and indirectly to put a brake upon business of every kind, and to produce the very troubles—unemployment, unremunerative commodity prices, unbalanced budget, and general depression—which have been apparent in almost every country of the world in the past 4 years.

The advance here recorded in our monetary ideas is very remarkable, and not less remarkable is the advance in our practice.

The government policy of cheap and abundant money, primarily embarked upon for the special object of converting national debts to lower interest rates, has been in force constantly for nearly 2 years.

The trade of this country, by universal acknowledgment, has for many months been making steady and gratifying progress.

The following is from William Randolph Hearst, after making a survey of economic conditions in England during September 1934, and commenting upon the progress of recovery being realized in that country after abandoning the works-relief plan and resorting to the currency-relief measures:

I really have to give the English Government and the English people tremendous credit for an amazing recovery.

The result has justified the faith. Great Britain is much further on the road to recovery today than any other nation in Europe, much further than the United States.

In my opinion, the devaluation of the dollar has materially helped the situation in America. I think that most of the improvement in conditions is due to moderate inflation.

And these same advantages could be gained here in the United States of America under the currency-relief measures enacted and now held up to try out the works-relief plan, and without cost of a single dollar to the people.

On the new Congress convening March 4, 1933, and the President taking office, it was promptly considered and agreed that the cause of the depression was the failure of the buying and consuming power. It was further agreed by Congress and the President that the failure had resulted from a fall of values and the price level which had destroyed or greatly reduced the earnings and income of the people. Upon this solution of the cause, it was the judgment of Congress, and agreed to by the President, that the remedy for the depression required a rise of values and the general price level to restore earnings and income and the buying and consuming power.

On further consideration of the problem it was agreed by Congress and the President that the fall of values and the price level had been caused or brought about by a failure of the money supply, a want of sufficient currency and credit; and that a restoration of the general price level for a return of earnings and income and the buying and consuming power required a restoration of money and credit, a sufficient volume and circulation to restore and maintain values and prices. Promptly and without hesitation, and in record time, steps were taken by Congress to replenish the money supply whereby to raise values and the price level, return earnings and income to the people, and restore their power to buy and consume the products of our industrial system.

On the 9th day of March 1933, only 5 days after the Members were sworn in, Congress authorized and the President approved the issuance of $2,000,000,000 of currency and Federal Reserve notes with which to replenish the money supply which had been depleted and left insufficient. On the 17th day of March 1933, only 13 days after this Congress was sworn in, the great newspapers of the country announced the printing of this vast sum of money, with half-page illustrations picturing the Secretary of the Treasury and his attendants carrying great bundles of ney money in preparation to meet the emergency of the failure of currency and credit. Following this prompt action, taken to restore the depleted money supply, Congress at once took up the consideration of special currency legislation, and on the 12th day of May 1933, only 2 months and 8 days after the inauguration, the farm-relief currency laws were passed.

These laws provide for four different forms of currency to be made immediately available whereby to restore the money supply—remonetization of silver, revaluation of gold, resort to Federal Reserve notes, and the issuance of United States currency notes, any one of which were ample and sufficient for which provided. On the special request of the President the currency relief measure enacted and so promptly and expeditiously provided were left permissive, discretionary, and optional to be administered and given effect when and in the order and in the manner to be determined by the Executive. Within 60 days from the time of convening the new Congress was ready and prepared to meet the currency crisis of the panic and to proceed in full agreement of the cause of the depression and the requirements for the remedy. This record of legislation achievements of the new Congress and administration, for the time being in which completed, the problem analyzed and solved, the measures in detail provided, challenged comparison in all history and inspired universal confidence in the people.

It is a remarkable illustration of psychology that on mere anticipation of restoring currency and credit, on belief that the currency relief measures would be carried into force and effect as promptly and expeditiously as enacted, values and the price level began to rise immediately with the enactment of the law. Farm products, stocks, and securities, and other commodities began to increase in value and business everywhere promptly showed revival. This price rise and revival continued until August, when it was realized that the law would not be carried into force and effect, that the new money provided for would not be put into circulation. Then values and the price level starting to rise, began to decline and fell to the level from which raised.

But the $2,000,000,000 of new money, ordered printed by Congress in record-breaking time, was never put in circulation. The remonetization of silver was never entered upon. And neither the Federal Reserve notes nor the United States currency notes were ever issued or made available for use as money in circulation. Even the revaluation of gold assumed to be administered and given effect was only briefly entered upon in a partial and temporary way and its operation carried to a certain stage was stopped and abandoned before restoring values and the price level and providing the relief intended. Up to this time there has been nothing done to carry out or give effect to the currency relief measures which were enacted to restore and stabilize the depleted and exhausted money supply and the laws remain on the statute books as a dead letter in relief program.

Instead of entering upon the administration of the currency relief measures, promptly and expeditiously enacted, the program has been held up and suspended to go back, take up, and revamp for further trial and experiment the relief measures already tried out under Hoover and former administrations and which had failed to bring the relief demanded by the people and by reason of which a change of administrations has been overwhelmingly voted at the polls.

In the face of the currency relief measures already enacted and ready for administration here and in the face of prosperity beginning following their enactment by Congress, prompted by faith and confidence, the belief that the measures would be carried out, and money and credit restored to circulation; in the face of the experience of the many nations of Europe trying out the works-relief measure and abandoning the experiments as a failure and resorting to currency relief measures alike already prepared for administration here, the currency relief program here so promptly and expeditiously provided was suddenly halted and abandoned to go back, revamp, and reorganize the work-relief program which had failed both here and abroad.

The cost of the different works administration provided for by interest-bearing bonds has already carried the national debt far into the billions and to a height beyond our World War debt. And in anticipation of its further rise the authorized public-debt limit has been raised by Congress to the staggering stage of forty-five billions.

The administration of artificial relief measures has swelled the army of Government and relief employees to over 25,000,000 up to this time, with 1 person to every 5 of the population on the Federal pay rolls drawing salaries and relief pay to be paid from taxes of the people. To this vast number of Federal employees must be added an ever-increasing number coming upon the pay rolls of the several States following the Federal Government with like measures or to try out separate State experimental remedies, all to be paid from taxes assessed and collected, directly and indirectly, from the meager incomes of the people. The army of employees already in service, with the army of men being recruited for recovery, and being paid and supported on the pay rolls from Federal and State taxes, is fast reaching a magnitude and number impossible for the remaining people to support without taking away the whole of their earnings and income with which to provide the means to live.

The cost of artificial recovery and chance experimental relief, first beginning with the Hoover Farm Board experimenting with cooperative marketing and recommending crop reduction to raise prices, making R. F. C. loans to private industry, and appropriating large sums from the Treasury for public-building programs, all from money borrowed at interest, and now continued under this administration, to be tried out and tested without any assurance of beneficial results, at the cost of billions to the taxpayers, is fast creating an intolerable tax burden piling high the bonded debt upon the people, which, if continued as in the past, as certain as the coming of tomorrow, will bring a calamity and disaster even more intolerable to the country than the panic or depression itself.

Under these experimental recovery measures, with the greater part of the cost funded in cumulative interest-bearing bonds and again refunded at maturity to be borne and paid for by future generations, and with the people of today carrying only a part of the tax burden, they are groaning under the burdens, they are struggling to meet the demands upon them, they are being drained of their scant earnings, they are being exhausted of their means to live. To meet the demands of increasing taxes, after levying Federal and State taxes, direct taxes and indirect taxes, sales taxes, and gross sales taxes, many other forms of taxes are being planned and devised to reach further tax resources, to take and exact even greater taxes, even more taxes from the people.

There is no escape from the realization that the amounts required to meet governmental expenses, if all were to be levied and collected as and at the time the expenditures were made, would leave the masses of the people today staggering under crushing and intolerable burdens. Or, if these costs were all funded in interest-bearing bonds, they would rivet a ton of weight ball-and-chain debt upon the ankles of every new-born child to be held in bondage for his natural life. A great part of these new taxes collected are being levied as indirect taxes, taxes hidden, covered, and concealed in the price of the necessaries of life, which the people must buy to live and which the people are paying unconsciously, realizing only the high cost of living.

It must be understood that these taxes which the law assumes to assess against capital and excess wealth, on the principle of the ability to pay, are not paid by those against whom assessed, but are added to increase the price of the necessaries and comforts of life and collected from the masses of the people. And what is true of taxes is equally true of interest. The interest paid by both the State and the Nation, the corporation interest charge, and all the interest collected from wherever and in whatever manner or form, is ultimately added to the price of the necessaries required to live. It is estimated and computed from reliable sources that from every dollar expended by the people there is first taken 20 cents for taxes, then 33 cents for the interest charge directly or indirectly, or in some manner directly or indirectly collected. This leaves the people as consumers with only 47 cents of their dollar for use as buying and consuming power, and working over half the time to pay their own and other taxes and to meet the direct or indirect interest charge.

In the course of medical science the first step in the treatment of the human body is to eradicate the microbes and parasites which infest the tissues and cause disease. And then when the organs are relieved from the poisons and obstructions, and their normal functions are restored all there is left to be done or can be done is to leave nature to repair and rebuild the body. And this should be the course observed in treating the economic evils of the panic, and would be the course, if Congress would only act by making the currency relief measures mandatory to eradicate the microbes and parasites preying upon the body of industry. This would leave the natural laws of supply and demand and competition free to operate, and money in sufficient volume would be restored back in circulation and ample for the exchange of services and commodities and the payment of debts and obligations.

The natural energies and enterprise of the people, the virgin fertility of the soil, the inexhaustible sources of the land, the natural rainfall, sunlight, and climate would all coordinate in nature's plan to restore our paralyzed industrial system, and economic recovery would come, come like gushing water from the fountain, come like the bursting buds in the springtime, come without exhausting taxes upon the present, come without crushing interest-bearing debts chained upon the future generations, come free without cost or price to the people.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana may be permitted to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object. Let the RECORD also show that the applause and the request for additional time comes from the Republican side of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. I care not what the RECORD shows as to the applause so it does not come from the gentleman.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER FOR UNITED STATES COURT FOR CHINA

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I ask unanimous consent that H. R.

6547, authorizing the appointment of a commissioner for the United States Court for China and defining his duties, which has been deemed to have been improperly referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, be properly rereferred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and he stated he wanted some time to confer with the Parliamentarian. I may say, however, that bills of this character were heretofore referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs because of an Executive order issued by the late President Theodore Roosevelt back in 1906 which conferred jurisdiction over that court to the State Department, but recently, on June 10, 1933, by Executive order of Franklin D. Roosevelt, jurisdiction over the United States Court for China, as well as insular courts, was transferred to the Department of Justice. The Department of Justice now exercises jurisdiction which the Department of State heretofore exercised. The Judiciary Committee feels that the reference of these bills, conferring, taking away, or enlarging jurisdiction over these courts, and setting up purely judicial functions, should be to the Judiciary Committee and not to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CELLER. Is it not in order to move that the rereference of the bills be made?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion is in order provided the gentleman has the authority of the Committee on the Judiciary to take such action.

Mr. CELLER. I have authority from the Judiciary Committee to offer the motion.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill H. R. 6547 be properly rereferred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, does the Chair recognize the gentleman for that purpose?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the floor and has made a motion that is in order at this time. The gentleman from New York moves that the bill H. R. 6547 be rereferred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The Chair may state to the gentleman from Tennessee that the motion is not debatable.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the title of the bill be read.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, does the Chair recognize the gentleman from New York for the purpose of making this motion?

The SPEAKER. The motion is a proper one and the Chair has no other alternative than to recognize the gentleman from New York for that purpose.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLAND. May I ask, according to the rules, if a motion to correct a reference must not be made immediately after the reading of the Journal and before any other business has been transacted?

The SPEAKER. There has been no business transacted, the Chair may say to the gentleman from Virginia, except unanimous-consent requests.

Mr. BLAND. I thought that was business. I have no interest in the pending matter at all.

The SPEAKER. The House has not proceeded with the business on the Speaker's table as yet. What has been done up to this time has been by unanimous consent.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have the privilege of addressing the House for 2 minutes at the conclusion of the gentleman's remarks.
